Hand-Picked Circulation

One important thing you want to know about a trade paper is that its circulation is in the trade; of the trade—any other kind is waste for a trade advertisement.

We have told you that Motion Picture News circulation is "hand-picked." Here is a letter that shows one of the ways we keep it so:

San Francisco News Company,
747 Howard Street,
San Francisco, Calif.

Gentlemen:

"We are returning herewith your check No. 1634 for $38.40 which you sent for 24 yearly subscriptions to MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

"We are very sorry to state that we cannot accept these subscriptions unless we know to whom they are going as it is our policy to accept subscriptions only from those connected in some way with the motion picture industry.

"If you care to send us the names of these prospective subscribers, together with their connection with the motion picture industry, we will be very glad to place their names on our list, and quote you the same rate as is covered by your check."

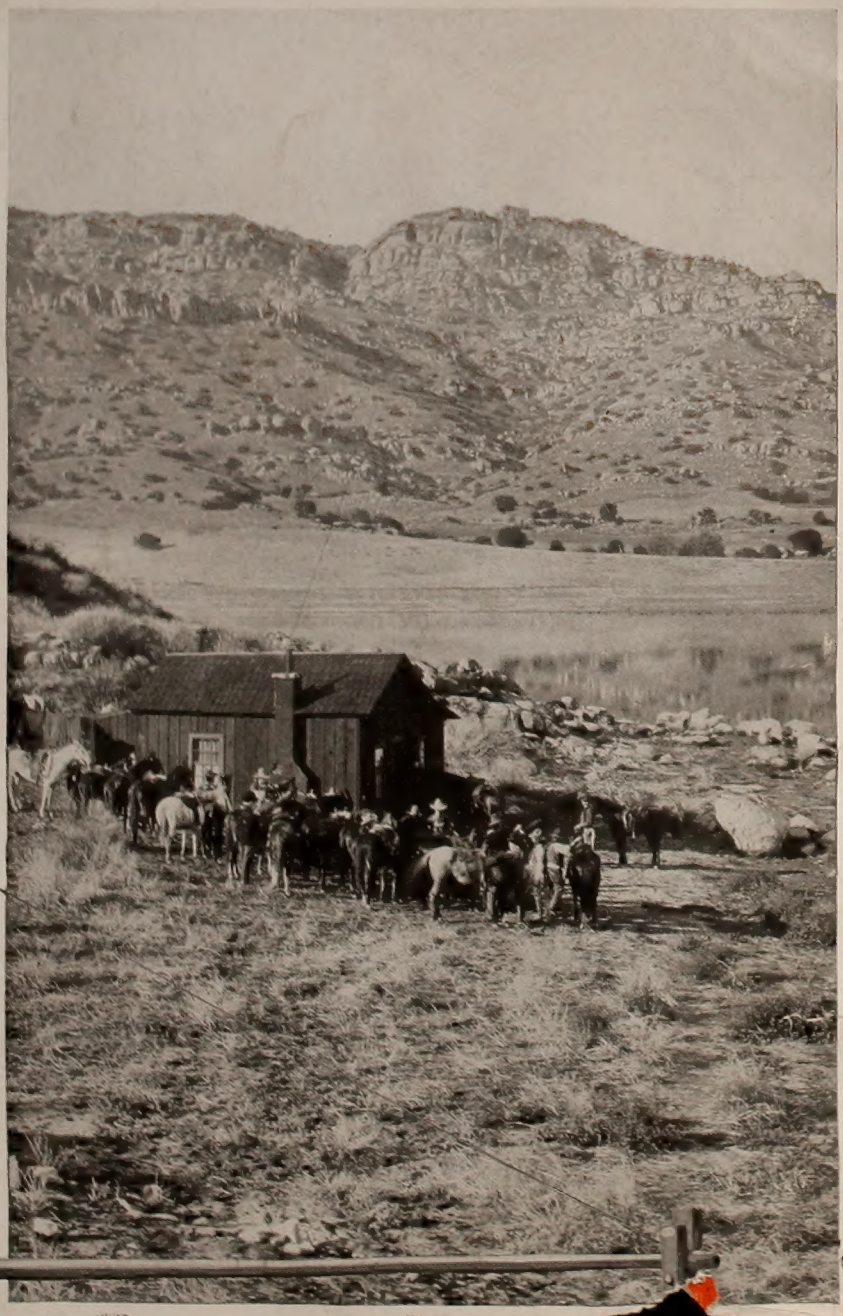
"THE TOLL GATE"

A William S. Hart Production

"The greatest picture I have ever produced" says William S. Hart.



Why? Because it's the story he's wanted to do for three years. And now, producing with his own company, he has let nothing stand in the way of making "The Toll Gate" his greatest work.

A wonderful story, six months in the making, sixteen hundred miles for locations. No expense, no trouble, no detail, no time spared.

brings to the screen an exquisite creation.

The drama-world of two continents knows that Doris Keane is "Romance"—and "Romance" is Doris Keane.

The play, especially written for Miss Keane by Edward Sheldon, played a year in New York, a whole season in Chicago, a special engagement in Boston and three and a half years in London. And always the artistry, the charm, the rare beauty of Miss Keane made "Romance" a vivid memory-haunting creation.

Of all the plays of recent years, none has been more sought after for screen presentation than "Romance." United Artists Corporation is to bring it to motion picture audiences, with Doris Keane herself in the role that has made her beloved the world over.

ARL LAEMMLE
RESENTS
PRISCILLA DEAN in "the VIRGIN of STAMBOUL

ALTHOUGH the first public showing of "THE VIRGIN OF STAMBOUL" will not be held until Sunday, March 21st, at The Broadway Theatre, New York City, the stupendous success of the production is just as sure as the sunrise of tomorrow morning. This is simply because TOD BROWNING took H. H. Van Loan's big, human, romantic story of the glowing East and painted in his wonder-pictures with the sure and sweeping strokes of a master hand. Because BROWNING, the Director—the Master Producer—had, for his heroine, an electrifying actress who lives her gloriously appealing part in every move and word and gesture. And because CARL LAEMMLE spared neither money nor time nor the country's best brains in an investiture which is nothing short of gorgeous. Gentlemen! The year's biggest picture is here! We said this two years ago of "The Kaiser"—we said it a year later of "The Heart of Humanity"—we say it again now of Titles Tell You Why!

These captions in the picture will show you how intensely interesting are its problems of love, home, marriage and divorce to every woman. It is worth your while to read them!

Statistics prove that a majority of divorces are due to woman's failure at her own job—the business of marriage.

The woman—a clinging vine in the hothouse variety of girls—and innocently dreaming in her cocoon of love.

The man—of that brand of men who claims to know women yet has never tried matrimony.

To the average husband marriage is only an incident—each woman thinks her husband will prove the exception.

The male is the master of the home and tries to prove it.

After a few months of constant association—mere man prefers the acid of the grape fruit to the honeyed words of his wife.

There is a woman for you—always imagining her husband's business an excuse for getting away from her—instead of realizing that the harder he goes after it, the more wonderful things she can have.

"Your domineering manner is typical of most husbands. They respect every woman except the one they marry."

"That's it, you women hold a council of war and decide that a man should devote all of his time to coddling you."

"Oh—men are all alike after they are married!"

"She sure enough does love that man."

"Yes, dis house jus plumb full o' love—trouble is, it is so lopsided, it is going to fall and bust itself wide open some day."

"Romeo must have fallen off the balcony—he ain't showed up this morning and it's about time for Juliet to flash in her morning call."

Of course every married woman realizes her husband is not perfect—seeing other men opens her eyes to that fact.

It really is surprising that so many adorable men have remained single.

Wondering if she has grown to tolerate him only as necessary—but scarcely interesting part of her life.

Before marriage woman is sought and therefore Superior. After marriage she becomes the seeker and fails to understand why her modern husband's love works in eight hour shifts, while hers demands a twenty-four hour day. She is therefore ——?

"I want you to write a note of endearment on several cards and each day enclose one of them with flowers to be sent to this address."

How difficult it is to punish those we love, though our future happiness may depend upon it.

"I told you before that I don't know—and if I did, I wouldn't tell a woman."

"Be fair—aren't you just as much to blame for this constant bickering?"

"Because you are so loyal to your husband, of course—that gives you the right to advise how I should act toward my wife."

"Don't dare tell that you met me with him this afternoon, he is terribly suspicious."

"With my own eyes I saw him bringing her home."

Believing that husbands have a right to know, he speaks his mind.

"He loves me! he loves me! the jealous old darling."

"Aren't you different from most wives whose husbands must constantly watch them—can't I trust you?"

A dab of flower on her nose, the sort of woman a man likes to come home to.

"Lord—Lord—if I was just as sure of heaven honey—the only way to get along with men is to make them happy—the only way to make them happy is to make them unhappy—keep them guessing and they will be unhappy—then they will love you and be happy."

"You all make too much fuss over this man. You wouldn't catch me doing that. I'd keep them guessing."

Love is like a security that soon burns out and marriage is the demi tasse of all that remains.

If he had stepped on his accelerator and arrived home a minute earlier, the shadow of suspicion would have been cast in another direction.

"During business hours you must take love for granted and stop calling me up at the office."

Possibly his unhusbandlike attentions are not unwelcome to her.

"He is neglecting you and you must put your foot down now."

Not hesitating to cloak her intrigue in the protective presence of her brother and his wife, even though the penalty might mean ruin for two men.

A game that has paid him royally, employing courtesy and attention to gain vital business secrets from unhappy wives.

To him women are only a means to an end.

Helplessly unable to deny the accusation without exposing his wife's guilt.

"You cannot go on living with that man. You know I love you. Will you come?"

"Fine! Now is the time to assert your superiority and come with me."

He capitalizes the situation to assume the dual role of social parasite and home breaker.

"You ill bred boor! To insult a guest in the house of your hostess."

"I would rather pay too little attention to her than too much to the wife of another man."

He will never know how an inferior being saved him from the chasm of divorce.

"My little wife, I have learned tonight how dear and wonderful you are."

"My presence here with him is just a game to arouse your jealousy and devotion."

Greater love hath no woman than to risk her reputation for another.

Bar none, the greatest two reel Comedy ever made!

Harold Lloyd in "Haunted Spooks"

Before the first of these $100,000 Two Reel Comedies was released we told you that they were better than any that had ever been made, and we made the statement without qualification.

Time has proven to you that we were right. The greatest theatres in the country are playing these comedies with unexampled success. Exhibitors everywhere tell us enthusiastically that their audiences applaud the comedies with perfect gales of laughter.

Now we assure you that in "Haunted Spooks" we present for your consideration a genuine masterpiece of mirth.

However big your feature, advertise this wonderful Lloyd comedy bigger!

Some of the nice things they say of Harold Lloyd:

"Harold Lloyd, whom some of us persist in believing the funniest man on the screen."
Helen Pollock in The Morning Telegraph.

"A bushel of fun in the Harold Lloyd Comedy 'His Royal Slyness.' The Lloyd brand of comedy is individual. He couldn't be doubled on that." Frances Agnew in The Morning Telegraph.

"The Harold Lloyd Comedy 'His Royal Slyness' is delightful." New York Tribune.

"The Harold Lloyd Comedy got more laughs out of the audience than any comedy we've seen of late." Picture Play Magazine.

"The new Harold Lloyd Comedy is a wonder." Agnes Smith in The Morning Telegraph.

"'From Hand to Mouth' is an extremely funny Harold Lloyd Comedy."
Harriet Underhill in N. Y. Tribune.

"The Harold Lloyd Comedy 'Captain Kidd's Kids' is very funny. N. Y. Sun.

"Harold Lloyd is certainly carrying a beacon light and showing the way to his contemporaries. He has a neater bag of tricks than all the other mirth provokers combined".
Laurence Reid in Motion Picture News.

HALF of the old-timers will never be able to adjust their sights if present plans go through and P. A. Powers steps out of Universal.

Isn't it by all odds the most interesting story of the week—and of many moons?

What recollections arise as we travel the years back through Universal's history—passing Warner's Features on the way—and back to the fighting days of the industry. As we think over those early days the thought often comes to us that Universal has never received the full credit it should get for the battles fought in those early days. It can truly be said that Universal cast the shackles off the industry, that Universal was truly "the liberator."

Those were surely hectic days when an independent film man broke ninety-seven different rules, regulations and laws every time he turned a camera crank or glanced inside a projector.

"Expansion" seems to be the word if we may judge from this week's news pages. Educational announces some big moves; Robertson-Cole's convention brings some hints forth; Selznick's Prizma deal gives news of five and six reel color subjects to come; and First National breaks the ice on the year's "new star" stories with the capture of Lionel Barrymore.

Altogether "some week,"—hardly one when you can afford to miss a page.

ROLLER SKATES COST MUCH LESS THAN AUTOMOBILES BUT THEY AREN'T NEARLY SO GOOD IF ONE WANTS TO GET VERY FAR!

Certain motion picture distributors could save vast amounts of money annually by using posters other than RITCHEY posters. Despite that fact they continue to use RITCHEY posters. Why?

Because they positively know that RITCHEY posters pay! Because they know that for the increased cost greatly increased box-office receipts accrue! They order RITCHEY posters for the same reason that causes shrewd men to purchase profitable investments rather than gold bricks! Experience also counts heavily in their preference for RITCHEY posters, for the one thing that all experience teaches us is this—the best is always the cheapest in the long run!

That the RITCHEY poster is the best is an undeniable fact. As practically all of the men capable of contributing anything toward the making of a really great poster are in this organization all working harmoniously under a splendid leadership, it is impossible for any one else to produce posters of equal merit.

A motion picture poster should be judged by its box-office returns, and so judged the RITCHEY poster is the best poster investment that it is possible to make!

A Convention That Inspired

Utica—and the Commuting Legislators—Now For a Real National Organization at Last

THE Utica Convention was much more than a personal triumph for the league leaders back of it.

They deserve much credit; so, in the same measure do those Utica exhibitors who sent out sixty thousand pieces of mail matter to bring the exhibitors in—who, in other words advertised and " put over " their convention just as the modern exhibitor puts over his own " special " show.

The convention was unlike any other thus far held; and every exhibitor will do well to look under the surface with us and realize what really happened.

In the first place it was conclusively proven that a big solid organization of exhibitors can be built up and a large business-like convention held.

THE membership of the New York State League exceeds the thousand mark. And these are real—not paper—memberships. The organization is well-knit, alive and doing business right along—not designed to meet once a year for the primary purpose of electing a set of officers.

Politics were completely lacking at this convention; or, if present in the spirit, they were promptly smothered by the serious business routine of a meeting which had things to do and did them.

Two afternoons were busily occupied with the transactions of the convention; only twenty minutes, at the end, were required to re-elect officers without a dissenting vote.

So, for the first time in the annals of exhibitor organization, so far as the writer's impression goes, we saw and felt exhibitor strength—an accomplished fact, a tangible thing, a real power for the good of the picture theatre and the picture industry.

If we within the industry do not realize this fact the political leaders of the state do.

It was certainly gratifying to witness the big guns of the State legislature dashing up from busy Albany and back on midnight trains.

It was still more pleasing to hear them indicate, without hesitation, their sympathetic interest in the picture, their conception of its place and power and their confidence in an organization which has helped them to legislate in the public's best interests.

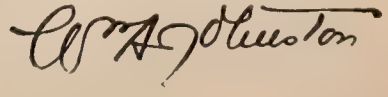
THIS is a vital matter, this cordial confidence and understanding back and forth, between the exhibitor and the lawmaker. It can't be had without an organization—one in whose strength and in whose spokesmen the lawmaker has confidence, one, furthermore fully equipped at all times with complete facts and figures upon which fair and intelligent legislation may be based. It is this information—not speeches, not lobbying—that the lawmaker wants.



There is no reason why this remarkably large, well-knit and constantly active organization of the New York State League cannot be duplicated in every single state of the Union.

And there is no reason why a National organization of Exhibitors thus made up of powerful state units cannot, in conjunction with the National Association establish headquarters at Washington; and through these headquarters maintain with Congress the same cordial and intelligent coöperation which has been so successful in New York State.

There is no reason. And we are glad to say that the undertone of the Utica Convention was a genuine desire for and a freely expressed intention to bring about just such a National organization.

We trust that no one and no present organization will decide otherwise hastily and without a sound knowledge of the facts; and that all sincere believers in the complete organizaton of this industry will lend their individual efforts to bring about just such a body.

This page lay-out might aptly be headed "The Eternal Triangle" but the news of the current week indicates that the three men whose names have been linked almost since the beginning of the industry are to travel two separate roads in the future. For P. A. Powers' other interests are demanding so much of his time that an option on his Universal stock has been given Messrs. Laemmle and Cochrane, and it will be exercised in the near future, according to announcement.

Carl Laemmle is shown above on the right, with R. H. Cochrane facing him. P. A. Powers is the gentleman at the apex of the triangle. The step that has been announced will leave Mr. Laemmle and Mr. Cochrane the sole stockholders in the Universal, marking an important page in the history of the organization that shares with Vitagraph the honor of being "daddy of them all" and whose "specials" during the past two years and announced for next year show that "age"—as counted in film years—has in no way halted its steps.

Carl Laemmle and R. H. Cochrane Buy Out P. A. Powers

Control of Universal Company Centered in President and Vice-President

IN a deal said to involve several million dollars, one of the largest in the history of the moving picture industry, control of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company will be centered within the next day or so in the hands of its president, Carl Laemmle, and its vice-president, R. H. Cochrane. This will be brought about by the purchase by these two officials of the holdings of P. A. Powers, at present the treasurer of the concern and its second largest stockholder.

Mr. Laemmle and Mr. Cochrane have held an option on Mr. Powers' stock, which still has a month to run, but it became known recently that they will exercise this option and acquire the stock. Mr. Powers has been the heaviest stockholder in the Universal next to Mr. Laemmle, and was one of the company's original stockholders when the firm was organized in May, 1912.

Reports have been circulated in moving picture circles for several weeks that there was a possibility of such a deal being consummated, but no statement could be obtained from any of the principals until recently, when Mr. Laemmle and Mr. Cochrane in admitting that they held an option of the Powers stock, announced that they would exercise this option as soon as the papers could be drawn up.

Mr. Laemmle stated that by acquiring the Powers stock he and Mr. Cochrane would be the sole owners of Universal. It was further announced that there will be no changes in the personnel of the organization except the retirement of Mr. Powers as treasurer. The friendliest feeling is said to exist between all parties involved.

Mr. Powers has considered this move for several months. In discussing the option and the proposed sale, he explained that his other business interests have assumed such proportions that he desired to be relieved of his duties with the Universal company.

The three principals of this deal have been associated throughout the history of the Universal and were original stockholders. The company was formed in May, 1912, by a consolidation of several independent film manufacturers, the most important of which was the Imp Film Company, owned and operated by Mr. Laemmle. Among others interested in the new company were Charles Bauman of the New York Picture Company and W. H. Swanson, the manufacturer of Rex pictures.

The new combine was formed to wage war against the Patents Company, an organization endeavoring to prevent the independent manufacture and sale of moving pictures in the United States. It took up the fight of the Motion Picture Sales Company, the distributing agency for independent film manufacturers.

Mr. Laemmle had been in the film business only a few years at that time. Mr. Cochrane had been his close associate from the start. The present vice-president of Universal and his brother, P. D. Cochrane, now at the head of the Universal poster department, conducted an advertising agency in Chicago prior to their entrance into the moving picture world.

Among the accounts they handled was the advertising of a department store in Oshkosh, Wis. Carl Laemmle was one of the officials of that store. Amassing several thousand dollars, Mr. Laemmle determined to break away from the department store and start his own business. He went to Chicago and sought the advice of his advertising friends, the Cochranes. He wanted to put his money into some small article of popular demand.

Impressed by the unusual opportunities offered by the moving picture, then in its infancy, he enlisted the Cochrane brothers in his support and launched into the film business. The Cochranes threw their talents heartily into the new field. R. H. Cochrane, already an advertising expert of note, began to force new ideas into the struggling moving picture business. Some of the most important steps in the advancement of moving picture advertising were originated by him.

The Universal Company had an up-hill fight, not only against the Patents Company, which it finally defeated, assuring the future of all independent film concerns, but also because of internal disputes. Charles Bauman, its first president, was forced from his position shortly after the company was formed, and Mr. Laemmle, recognized as the leader of independent film men, placed in his stead. He has been president of the Universal ever since.

Shortly after taking office, Mr. Laemmle went to Europe and opened the first American independent manufacturer's office. Upon his return 12,000 acres of land in the San Fernando Valley, California, were purchased, and Universal City, today one of the largest moving picture plants in the world, began.

The Universal Film Manufacturing Company is a distributing organization as well as a manufacturer of moving pictures. Today it has more than half a hundred branch exchanges throughout the United States. It has its own branch exchanges in all parts of the globe and constantly is adding to its foreign film exchange centers.

Chaplin's Next Six Reels; Release Reports Conflict

DISPATCHES from the coast indicate that Charlie Chaplin has made a complete turn about in his production methods, and that instead of turning out his usual two-reeler, his next release will be six reels in length. It probably will be titled "The Kid," and tends to give Chaplin a sympathetic role throughout. A background of heavy drama is dominant throughout the piece, indicating that Chaplin finally has given rein to the desire hinted at in several of his comedies by brief excursions into the dramatic realm. A boy actor touted to become as popular as Wesley Barry, is Chaplin's latest find.

J. D. Williams is quoted as declaring the production will be handled by First National. On the other hand rumor has it that United Artists will get the picture.

Other late wire information tells, of the departure of Fred Quimby for New York, and the engagement by Winchell Smith of William H. Crane to play his original stage part in "New Henrietta." Buster Keaton has been borrowed from Roscoe Arbuckle for the role originally played by Douglas Fairbanks in the stage production. Smith is producing for Metro.

Associated Producers Deny Rumor of Deal

Thomas H. Ince and J. Parker Read, Jr., left for California Monday, at which time they emphasized the fact that the Associated Producers had no announcement to make regarding distribution plans of the organization. Notwithstanding the rumors that have been current, Mr. Ince and Mr. Read declared that no negotiations of any nature had been closed between the Associated Producers and any organization or individuals.

"Nothing definite will be consummated until our return to the coast," said Mr. Ince. "Immediately following there will be a meeting of the Associated Producers to consider the result of our conferences in New York. It is reasonably certain that shortly after that a decision will be arrived at which will enable us to make public the future plans of the Associated Producers."

Americanization Office Opened in New York

The Americanization Committee of the Motion Picture Industry, of which Hon. Francis K. Lane, formerly Secretary of the Interior, is chairman, has opened New York headquarters in Room No. 1, 1520 Broadway. William A. Ryan, who has been associated with Secretary Lane for a long time, has been appointed executive secretary of the committee, and will be in charge of the New York headquarters.

In the Week's News

Eugene Roth, of San Francisco's California, breaks into the news in ather guise than that of exhibitor, with the announcement that he is to join with Sam Rock, of the Katherine MacDonald organization, in the production of all-star specials.

Lt. Ormer Locklear, shown to the right, in addition to the sensational success of "The Great Air Robbery" brings forth another reason for news space with the formation of Locklear Productions. Joe Brandt is the busy boy handling the business end. Already negotiations have been closed for one of the year's "best sellers"—"The Sky Pilot," and Isadore Bernstein, having resigned from National, has left for Los Angeles to begin production activity.

Sam Morris, who appears on our left, is the latest sales manager to issue a convention call. Within a few weeks the Selznick and Select exchange men will be gathering in New York to discuss the coming year's plans.

Robertson-Cole Convention in New York Proves Success

Four Day Meeting in Big City Opened March 16

THE Convention of the Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation opened this week on Tuesday, March 16th, for a four day session during which every phase of the big organization's activities is to receive the closest study for the purpose of perfecting the work of the various departments and realizing a maximum efficiency in carrying on the business of the corporation.

The Convention opened Tuesday morning at 9 A. M., and the following program was followed throughout the day:

9 A. M.—Assemble in Home Office, Room 400, Mecca Building, 1600 Broadway. Introduction of Branch Managers and getting acquainted. General discussion by Mr. Kirkpatrick on what is expected of the organization.

12:30 P. M.—Assemble in College Room, 8th Floor, Astor Hotel, for luncheon. Address by Mr. R. S. Cole. Immediately after luncheon, presentation of "The White Dove." After the exhibition, there will be a general discussion in the Ballroom until 5.30 P. M. (Convention disbands until 8.15 P. M.)

8:15 P. M.—Entire organization are guests of the Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation at the Hudson theatre to witness "Clarence."

The main feature of the first day's activities was the lengthy address of Mr. R. S. Cole, which followed the convention luncheon at the Hotel Astor. The pertinent points of Mr. Cole's speech are summarized elsewhere on this page.

On Wednesday, March 17th, the following program was carried out:

9 A. M.—Assemble at Home Office.

9:30 A. M.—Tour by auto to the Ritchey Lithographing Company until 10.30 A. M.—then by auto from the Battery up Broadway returning by way of Riverside Drive to the Astor Hotel.

12:30 P. M.—Luncheon at College Room, Astor Hotel. Address by Mr. J. Allen Boone. After luncheon presentation of "The Butterfly Man," followed by open discussion. The convention will disband for the day at 5.30 P. M. The evening can be devoted to the individual pleasures of the Branch Managers.

On Thursday, March 18th, the following order of business was observed:

9 A. M.—Assemble at Home Office. General discussion by Mr. J. L. Merrick on salesmen and salesmanship, also instruction pertaining to all sales records, individual pictures, quotas, branch operation, and outlining the future policies.

9:30 A. M.—Assemble at Astor Hotel East Ballroom for luncheon and presentation of "The Fortune Teller." After previewing, discussions with each Branch Manager up to 5.30 P. M. (Convention disband until 8.15 P. M.)

8:15 P. M.—The entire delegation will be guests of the Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation at the Winter Garden, to witness "The Passing Show of 1919." Ticket is attached.

Friday, March 19th, the day was spent largely in general business and discussions. The following was the order of events assigned for the day:

9 A. M.—Assemble at Home Office for general business discussion, in which full details and final instructions will be taken up. This will be an open meeting in which each Branch Manager will be called upon to answer questions pertaining to their respective territories. Individual discussions with each Branch Manager will be entered into. Have all your data ready to avoid delays.

2:30 P. M.—Luncheon in North Ballroom, Hotel Astor, after which there will be a general discussion and final instructions given to the entire organization.

5:30 P. M.—Convention will disband and managers will make preparations to return to their respective branches.

The date of the next convention will be determined by the results as demonstrated by our entire organization.

In conjunction with the Convention, members prominent in the industry forwarded statements some laudatory of the work achieved by Robertson Cole and others offering suggestions, the adoption of which was intended to move for a more efficient organization. The following statement was submitted by the Brentwood Film Corporation and addressed to the members of the Robertson-Cole organization:

"Gentlemen:

"We feel it to be particularly fitting that Brentwood should address a word of greeting to the members of the Robertson-Cole Distributing organization on this 16th day of March, 1920, because this day is the anniversary of the release of Brentwood's first picture, "The Turn in the Road," the continued success of which production is so largely due to the consistent efforts of you gentlement now assembled here.

"Whatever it may have been in the early days of its existence, the Picture Industry today is being run on business lines. And since its continued development depends upon the sale of its product at a profit, the salesman has come into his own as the very real foundation of the entire structure.

"It is of course unnecessary to tell you that the successful salesman must add to his talent, enthusiasm for and thorough knowledge of the product he is offering.

"And since the projection of a picture upon the screen involves the choice of a type of story and the method of treatment of that story, the product of a picture producing organization comes to reflect more of the minds, hearts and principles of the men who made the picture than does the output, say of an automobile or breakfast food factory of which each machine or package can be judged as it is seen and handled, purely on its own merits."

Numerous suggestions were received from some of the branch managers of Robertson-Cole. Louis Klar, of Milwaukee, stated that Robertson-Cole productions were gaining rapid recognition in the territory served by the Milwaukee exchange. An instance of this was the booking of "The Beloved Cheater" by the Butterfly theatre, Milwaukee, a 100 per cent Paramount house. This was also true of the Strand theatre, Madison.

From J. S. Nelson, of Denver, came word that Robertson-Cole has maintained a reputation with exhibitors of honesty of purpose, and fair dealing, and that the new press books were in constant demand by exhibitors, large or small. M. A. Levy, of Cleveland reported as follows:

"The Robertson-Cole Company has

High Spots in Speech of Mr. R. S. Cole

"ROBERTSON-COLE is in the motion picture business for the money which good pictures are bound to bring us. A fair investment and the close cooperation between the exhibitor and the distributing company.

"The men behind Robertson-Cole have a set standard, and pictures not meeting the requirements of that standard will have no place on the Robertson-Cole program.

"Robertson-Cole will not purchase theatres for the release of their productions unless forced to do so by competitors who shall band together to usurp all the trade.

"Robertson-Cole should give the exhibitor the best pictures money and time can buy.

"Robertson-Cole shall do everything within its power to help the exhibitor, for unless the exhibitor lives, Robertson-Cole must die.

"Business principles are the backbone of the Robertson-Cole policy.

"The series of announcements made in the past ninety days overshadow what is to come in the future. The men behind Robertson-Cole are men of sound business judgment and well equipped to fight the battles in the motion picture world.

"Robertson-Cole makes no promises which cannot be carried out.

"The Robertson-Cole trademark stands for justice, fair play and quality of production."

Busy Season for Censorship Committee

Censorship Agitation in Various States and Cities Requires Prompt Action

THE demise and burial of one John Barleycorn having now become an accomplished fact, though tremors of suspended animation from the spirit or spirits of the late-departed John are occasionally apparent from the depths, the reformers must needs have practice for their reformatory proclivities, and so the "movies" have engaged their attention for a pace. At least that is the reason, according to the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, for the unusual activity this year of the Censorship Committee of the National Association, for this is the "off year" for legislative sessions, and ordinarily censorship problems would amount to very little.

The first legislative battle was staged in Virginia. A public hearing on the bill was arranged, and at the request of the National Association, David Wark Griffith went to Richmond and made the principal argument against censorship. Jack S. Connolly, Washington representative of the National Association, and Jake Wells were in charge of the fight in Richmond, and the committee reported against censorship and in favor of a bill which would cut teeth in the penal law which prevents the showing of an indecent or immoral film. The National Association has at all times supported the strengthening of the penal law so as to punish for the exhibition of improper pictures.

Just as the Virginia fight was won the National Association received the information that without a hearing the Education Committee of the South Carolina House of Representatives had made a favorable report on a censorship bill. A hearing was asked for by wire, and Royal K. Fuller, executive secretary of the Censorship Committee, went to Columbia to represent the industry. Within a half-hour after the hearing on the bill was over the Education Committee, which had reported the bill, voted unanimously against censorship. The bill was held under plea for more than two weeks, and when it finally came to a vote it was overwhelmingly defeated.

After the hearing in South Carolina Mr. Fuller went to Atlanta for a conference with the members of the Film Exchange Managers' Association of that city as to the means of opposing the censorship bill, which it is anticipated will be introduced when the Georgia Legislature convenes in June.

The Governor of Mississippi recommended a censorship law, and the first bill introduced was amended so as to make it a crime to exhibit an indecent or improper film. The people who were supporting censorship expected that the motion picture industry would oppose that bill, and it would give them an excuse to introduce one which provided for a censorship of all films. E. H. Clarke, special representative of the Saenger Amusement Company, who was working in cooperation with the exchange managers of New Orleans, supported the bill. It was thought that this had disposed of censorship in the state, but recently a straight censorship bill has been introduced. It is believed that this bill can be defeated in view of the amendment which has been made to the penal law.

A censorship bill was introduced in Kentucky, but the Legislature adjourned last week without taking the bill up. The hardest fight of the year has been in Massachusetts, and the issue is still in doubt. There have been two hearings on the bill, and the joint committee on Mercantile affairs has named a sub-committee to consider the matter and if thought advisable to report an amended bill.

In addition to the state fights the National Association and the Censorship Committee have been interested in several municipal contests, where an effort has been made to impose unfair and restrictive ordinances for municipal censorship.

Robertson-Cole Gathering Brings Hearty Good Wishes

Stars, Producers and Exhibitors Wire Congratulations as Kirkpatrick's "Sales Boys" Gather

been making such rapid strides since its birthday, that exhibitors throughout Ohio are beginning to realize that we are going to attain the highest standard in the motion picture industry. This has been proven in the way our current releases have been received and exploited with emphasis on "The Beloved Cheater."

Exhibitors in New England are also commenting on the rapid growth of Robertson Cole organization, according to F. F. Kimmerle, of Boston. He said they were impressed with the advertising campaign, both in the trade papers and in the material supplied to the exchanges for distribution. E. J. Hayes, of Buffalo, also told of how the organization was praised for its advertising. I. F. Mantzke, of Minneapolis, reported that the "Beloved Cheater" was breaking all house records in Minnesota, North and South Dakota, and that exhibitors had nothing but the highest praise for Robertson-Cole pictures.

Oklahoma showmen look on Robertson-Cole pictures as one of the most consistent programs they run, as far as the series are concerned, stated P. R. Rich- are said to be filled with good ideas and are classed with the best.

Words of praise were also received from exhibitors through Jerome Safron, of Detroit; C. W. Tyler, of Indianapolis; J. F. Gill, of Philadelphia; A. R. Patten, of Los Angeles. Mr. Patten said in part:

"With the continued improvement in production the exhibitor has come to realize that Robertson-Cole production plus Robertson-Cole service and the wonderful exploitation helps which we are supplying, get the money at the box office. The new policy as announced at the convention will be received with tremendous enthusiasm in the Los Angeles territory."

Besides the suggestions, a number of telegrams were received at the convention. Among them was one from Max Marsh, who said: May the very best of luck attend Robertson-Cole operations for the year 1920. Please consider me with you in spirit and everything.

Sessue Hayakawa also extended congratulations to the Robertson-Cole convention and stated that splendid work has been accomplished since its organization. He felt confident, he said, that his productions were in the best possible hands and the responsibility to furnish good pictures resolved itself upon the star.

Bessie Barriscale also wired felicitations. "I take pleasure," she said, "In extending to you on behalf of myself and my company best wishes for a successful convention. The work which your organization has put in has shown wonderful results in the past year and there is no doubt in my mind but that this year will be even more successful. I can only say that you may depend upon me to carry on my part of the work to the best of my ability."

Charles and Al Christie wired as follows: "Despite the fact that we have rewritten the story four times and have a star who is wonderful on the stage, and the windstorm tried to blow away our studio and the rain washed away what was left and one leading character in the story is at the mud baths for rheumatism, we are still smiling. In fairly good health and confident of bringing a darn good production. Hoping you are all the same."

Among others who wired to the convention were L. C. Haynes, Henry Kalker, Molly Malone, Chick Sale, Lew Cody, Kenneth O'Hara, L. J. Gasnier, and Leonard J. Meyberg.

Educational Films Laying Plans for Wide Expansion

Announces Important Acquisitions in the Short-Subject Field

E. W. HAMMONS, vice president and general manager of the Educational Films Corporation, this week announced the completion of contracts, said to involve more than $750,000, which will place the noted distributors of short subjects in a position of dominance in its chosen field.

As large amount as these negotiations represent, they are said to form but the first of a series of interesting announcements that will follow the determination of the company to devote a vast amount of capital and a world-wide organization to the exclusive handling of short subjects.

Acquired during the past week is the entire product of the C. L. Chester interest, including the Chester-Outing Scenics, the Chester Comedies and the Chester Screenics. Contracts were also signed with Johnson and Hopkins for the exclusive control of pictures made by the "Stereospeed" camera, a recent invention of Earle Emlay.

Exclusive control of the American and foreign markets is provided for in the agreements that have just been signed. Recent announcements told of the organization by Educational Films of its own exchanges throughout the United States which will be devoted exclusively to the distribution of short subjects. Educational has for some time controlled the foreign distribution of Chester-Outings, in addition to its own product, and its organization in the foreign field is now being further developed.

During months past Mr. Hammons has been carefully laying the plans for the increase in short subject product, and from time to time the MOTION PICTURE NEWS has carried announcements indicating the progress of this development. There has now been an adjustment of the organization to provide for the fullest development of short subject possibilities, and the amplest capital to carry forward all of the plans. These arrangements for distribution have been supplemented by the fullest possible exploitation of these pictures, which will be given the same attention as the so called "features." By confining itself to this class of film product, Educational promises a degree of specialization which is not possible with companies dealing with films of all kinds.

Acquisition of the short subjects announced this week, and of others for which negotiations are pending, will in no way affect the product heretofore distributed by Educational. In fact, expeditions controlled by the company which will, it is said, penetrate every corner of the earth, literally, are now under way, and there are said to be now in the vaults of the company in the Godfrey building thousands of feet of unusual adventure and scenic product which will shortly be ready for release. In addition to the material obtained by its own staff of creators and photographers, Educational will continue in the market for superior product of independent camera men.

Because C. L. Chester has been generally regarded as the chief rival of Educational in the production of scenic pictures, it is especially significant that he should be the first to contract for the acquisition of his entire product by Educational. It is stated that he was led to take this step because he recognized the perfection of the plan laid before him by Mr. Hammons, which convinced him that the future development of the short subject depends on the exploitation and distribution specialization that Mr. Hammons has been carefully planning and perfecting for months past.

Theatre managers everywhere are familiar with Chester-Outing Scenics. They have been popular in this country, and Educational Films has been successful in their distribution in the foreign markets. They will continue to be released weekly.

First of the new Chester Comedies was recently shown at the Rivoli. This was "Four Times Foiled" and it was given a reception that few of the fun products have been accorded. Mr. Chester has proved to the officials of Educational that he will be able to maintain the same high standard in his future creations, which are being produced by W. B. Campbell, and that these pictures will afford a degree of humor and cleanliness that will appeal to all audiences. Thirteen of these comedies are to be produced a year.

Chester Screenics are a recently announced creation. Each of these will include 500 feet of animal pictures and 300 feet of carefully selected scientific matter, so arranged as to have a popular appeal. It is said that this reel, which will be produced weekly, will mark a distinct departure in cinema entertainment.

Following the recent announcement of the perfection of the "Stereospeed" camera, an invention of Earle Emlay, controlled by the Johnson and Hopkins Company, there has been unusual interest in the product. This camera makes it possible to photograph pictures at the rate of 384 per second. Mr. Emlay has been able to create an almost endless number of novelties with his camera, both comedies and scientific subjects which, it is stated, have never before been used. It is said that the new invention opens up such a wide field that both the exhibitor and his patrons will be afforded surprise after surprise for months to come.

Negotiations for the acquisition of much other short subject product, including several brands of comedies, are in progress and announcement of several of these deals is expected at any moment. Mr. Hammons authorizes the statement that Educational will continue to devote its entire resources to handling short subjects of all sorts and that it is ready to consider the acquisition of further matter that meets the high standard of quality that is demanded by his organization.

A further announcement of the week is that Pell Mitchell, one of the best news reel editors in the industry, has been added to the Educational staff. Mr. Mitchell organized Fox News and attracted much attention by his work as news editor of the Gaumont Weekly. Mr. Hammons intimated that he expected to have an interesting announcement to make within a short time as to the special work that would come under the direct supervision of Mr. Mitchell.

A Drew-Barrymore Bill for Theatrical Post

For the first time in the history of New York theatricals, Ethel, Lionel and John Barrymore are to appear on the same bill. This will be at the benefit performance for S. Rankin Drew Post No. 340, American Legion, at the New Amsterdam theatre, Sunday evening, April 11.

Schnitzer Gives His Views on Percentage

Equity Pictures Manager Believes System More Equitable Than Rental

JOSEPH I. SCHNITZER, who before becoming treasurer and general manager of Equity Pictures Corporation, was for seven years division manager, exchange manager, exhibitor and associate of exhibitors and later exchange manager for Universal, has a few views on percentage engagements which he has gleaned from his experience, both at Universal, and during his past eight months at Equity.

"Percentage engagements in which both producer and exhibitor share responsibilities and profits are the nearest possible approach to equitable playing arrangements," said Mr. Schnitzer. As a concrete example, let us take the instance of "Eyes of Youth" at the Ohio Theatre, Indianapolis. The franchise holder in this territory could not get a rental, which he considered commensurate with the importance of the picture and rejected several rental offers which seemed to him far below what the picture warranted. Arrangements were therefore entered into with the Ohio Theatre to exploit the film and run it as long as it stood up.

"A special man was sent into the city, newspaper space and stunts resorted to, in no more lavish manner than was the custom in the city among the first class houses, and the picture played almost two weeks and the franchise holder received two hundred percent more than his best rental offer and the theatre achieved its very biggest two weeks business.

"If a theatre has a weekly overhead of two thousand dollars and a picture which cost more than $150,000 is booked, then, if the picture interests spend one thousand dollars on exploitation etc., the net proceeds can be split fifty fifty, and the sharing terms are absolutely equitable to both parties, for surely the cost of the picture represents, in the instance of playing this one house, at least one percent of its original cost.

"Legitimate houses rarely pay rental for attractions. Occasionally they purchase the gross receipts for a stipulated sum, but rarely do they pay an outright amount for an attraction. How then, does the percentage plan work a hardship on the film exhibitor? Surely the one night stand manager whose house runs legitimate plays, parallels the film theatre, in expenditure overhead, etc.

"'Eyes of Youth' playing Indianapolis, at English's Opera House, in its legitimate form, would receive at least sixty percent of the gross receipts and would expend less than five hundred dollars on exploitation. Paper would be furnished which the house would post, and the theatre would do its usual amount of advertising. 'Eyes of Youth' as a film play should be able to do anything that 'Eyes of Youth' as a stage play did, for the same conditions apply to its playing dates.

"A film which is seeking percentage engagements at theatres must be an individual film, handled as an individual film, exploited in unique manner so as to attract extra business, as well as to appeal to the house's regular following, and show at least a twenty-five percent increase in business.

"But an exhibitor can easily drive away from his door, in one week, all the following he has established in a year—by lack of discretion in selecting subject. He should pick his pictures from trades paper reviews and reports from fellow exhibitors and then he can't go wrong. Pick them from the billboards and you can't go right. Any man who has the price of a feature, surely has the price of a billboard and electric sign campaign and it is when films are below standard that these superficial methods are resorted to."

Schlesinger Analyzes The Foreign Market

Inter-Ocean Official Urges Producers to Export Despite Low Exchange

OF the many important and perplexing problems which the motion picture industry has had to contend with since the cessation of hostilities, one of the most pressing and acute is the present outlook in foreign film circles. While everywhere the cry is being made and fostered for the stabilization of foreign trade between the United States and other countries, the present economic upheaval—the inevitable result of the world war, has caused a radical depreciation of foreign exchange and according to some exporters, is threatening to strangle the very life of commercial enterprise. In fact the exchange has reached such an astounding low rate that a feeling of grave uncertainty is held by many in financial circles.

The period of readjustment in foreign markets, recent advices pointedly indicate, has been rather slow in getting started. Still, the American exporter of motion pictures has continued exporting American motion pictures in spite of the difficulties in foreign exchange. At present there is a spirited discussion in foreign film circles as to the wisdom of this continuation of export. Many exporters decry the present state of affairs, and see in it the demise of American supremacy in foreign film markets. There are others who maintain in more emphatic terms than words that the sane policy to pursue is to export American motion pictures now in greater volume than at any other time.

In view of the heated discussion that is now being waged among American exporters, and because of the momentous importance of the subject to American motion picture producers Gus Schlesinger, manager of the Department of Foreign Film Sales of Inter-Ocean Film Corporation, has expressed his views on the foreign situation.

"While speculation is rife in the industry as to the outcome of the problems that at present beset the foreign market," said Mr. Schlesinger, "it is obviously apparent that the situation is only temporary, and that in due course of time, conditions will return to normal. While the export situation is in a critical stage, its effect on the trade has been grossly exaggerated. I arrive at this conclusion after a thorough study of the foreign market, and on the counsel of merchants who are financially involved in other commercial pursuits, and who have experienced the same difficulties in exports.

"Foreign exchange, according to its financial definition, is the bridge over which payments for trade between different countries is effected. The bridge to my mind has had to bear a larger burden than it could safely carry, and consequently, has bent beneath the strain. As soon as the bridge is rebuilt things will assume a different aspect. We are at present going through the reconstruction period, and must continue to do business as if the bridge were strengthened.

"I personally believe that we should continue to export motion pictures, and the fact that Inter-Ocean Film Corporation is doing as large an export business now as ever in its history, confirms my belief in this respect. I do not believe that the foreign outlook is as terrible as it has been painted, and I repeat that while I am cognizant of the fact that we are passing through a critical period, I am positively certain that it will soon be over with, and that exports will resume their natural course.

"Partly counterbalancing this abnormal situation are the statements from American producers that they will make fewer and bigger productions during the year of 1920. This necessarily means that the motion picture supply will be materially reduced. Better pictures will undeniably insure a permanent market for the American product."

Lionel Barrymore to Make Pictures for First National

Whitman Bennett and Stage Star Signed to Make Four Productions

LIONEL BARRYMORE will be starred in a series of four independent productions to be released through Associated First National Pictures, Incorporated, and to be made by Whitman Bennett, who recently resigned as production manager for the Famous Players-Lasky Company after two years in charge of that concern's studio activities.

The contract with Mr. Bennett and Mr. Barrymore is the first to be signed by Associated First National Pictures, Inc., as an organization, and as one of the two new companies created by the exhibitor members of First National Exhibitors' Circuit at their convention in Atlantic City in January of this year.

The event marks the beginning of activities by First National members to increase the number of productions to be available to owners of sub-franchises now being allotted to independent theatre owners throughout the country for circuit attractions. In addition, it brings to the field of independent producers, Mr. Bennett, who, for two years, has been the managing executive of the Famous Players-Lasky production forces. Mr. Bennett announced his resignation last week. It will become effective as soon as arrangements are completed for someone to succeed him.

The negotiations between Associated First National Pictures officials and Mr. Bennett and Mr. Barrymore were conducted by Larry Giffen, of the Alice Kauser organization, who also represented the producer and star in arranging details of the contract.

Mr. Barrymore will begin production work soon after May 1. The first picture in the series is scheduled for release through Associated First National early next fall. The last screen appearance of the famous actor was in the character part of "Milt Shanks" in "The Copperhead." Mr. Barrymore has just completed a very successful engagement as a co-star with his brother, John, in "The Jest" and is now starring in "The Letter of the Law" at the Criterion theatre in New York.

Lionel Barrymore

It has been announced that his four productions for Associated First National will be made in the East so that he can continue his theatrical work on the spoken stage. The stories will be announced soon, according to First National officials, and each will be from a famous novel or a famous play.

The star's stage career included theatrical engagements with Nance O'Neil, James Herne and John Drew in such plays as "The Best of Friends" and "Pantaloon." After an absence of three years from the stage because of ill health he returned in 1909 in "Fires of Faith," later touring in "The Still Voices" and "The Copperhead."

His screen career began with Biograph. He appeared in the Pathe picture, "Exploits of Elaine," and later was starred in comedy and dramatic parts by Metro, one of his most notable vehicles with that company being "The Yellow Streak." Some of the more recent pictures in which Mr. Barrymore was starred were "Making Good," "Great Green Eye" and "The Millionaire's Double."

Officials of Associated First National Pictures regard the signing of the celebrated actor as a great achievement. "We predict a phenomenal success for Mr. Barrymore in the series to be produced by Mr. Bennett because of his rare ability to do such exceptionally clever character work," says a statement issued by Associated First National officials. "His return to motion pictures brings another strong ally to the ranks of independent producers and independent stars. With Mr. Bennett he has accepted the tenants of our policy that each star and producer shall stand or fall strictly on his or her own ability."

"This is the only just fair way to extend unmeasured opportunity to producers and stars who have ability not yet tested to the maximum. Mr. Barrymore's four productions will have no specified release dates. Mr. Bennett will have all the time he requires to obtain a degree of screen quality that will satisfy his standards as an independent producer. We have found, in our experience with other producers and stars now affiliated with us by contracts, that the absence of any need for haste and time restrictions, which make quality and result secondary consideration, has done much to encourage greater entertainment values."

Whitman Bennett

In leaving the Famous Players, Mr. Bennett wishes to make it especially clear that there has been no friction of any kind whatsoever between the executive officials of the corporation and himself. Mr. Bennett merely feels that after five and one-half years of confining office work, attending to innumerable production details and other business and artistic affairs of the concern, he is no longer capable of continuing to bear the burden in the same way. For some time past he has felt that it was necessary for him to make a change and he has arranged, through the courtesy of the officials of the Company, to be relieved of his obligations to the Corporation at the present time, as it is "between seasons" and the connection can be severed more readily than at any other period in the year.

Three Houses Bought by Amusement Company

Purchase of three motion picture playhouses, the Princess and Dixie theatres of Mayfield and the Savoy theatre of Princeton, by the Strand Amusement Company of Louisville, composed of Leo F. Keller and John W. Keller of this city, and Lee Goldberg and Fred Levy of Louisville, has been announced.

Incorporation of the company for the management of the new theatres and a chain of others to be purchased at an early date took place with capitalization of $50,000.

Mrs. J. R. Bray, Back from Europe, Describes Film Conditions

Relates Many Interesting Observations of Industry in Fields Abroad

MRS. J. R. BRAY, wife of the president of Bray Pictures Corp., who recently returned to this country after an extended tour of England, France and Germany on an investigation of educational film conditions abroad, reports that American feature photoplays and educational films are in greater demand now than at any former period in the history of the motion picture.

"We have shown the world what America can do with the photoplay," said Mrs. Bray, "and Europe realizes the technical proficiency we have attained."

Mrs. Bray, it is stated, was the first woman to leave occupied German territory for the interior unaccompanied. She traveled to Berlin alone, and from there to Vienna; but the sight of the stricken, starving people there decided her to return at once to Berlin.

"In Vienna, I walked two blocks from my hotel and picked up three fainting women who could not stand because they were half starved. I could not think of talking pictures to the Viennese, so I came back. But train service is so inadequate that the next train to Germany left four days after my arrival in Vienna."

The impressions Mrs. Bray received in each of the countries visited may best be told in chronological order. Her first visit abroad was to London, where she met Mr. A. George Smith, Goldwyn's European representative, who is in charge of the distribution of Goldwyn feature pictures and the Goldwyn-Bray Pictograph in England and on the Continent. While in London, Mrs. Bray made her headquarters at the Goldwyn offices and renewed her old acquaintance with Mr. Charles Lapworth and Mr. Ralph Block, who are at present organizing the advertising and publicity departments of Goldwyn's European distributing organization.

"The English people are wildly enthusiastic about photoplays these days. They have been starved for entertainment," said Mrs. Bray, "and now you will find crowds a block long in front of almost every motion picture theatre every evening. There are not nearly enough theatres in England to supply the demand for motion picture entertainment. There are perhaps 4,000 theatres in England, and builders are trying their best to obtain materials to erect more. In the meantime shows are being held in converted stores, in halls, and in any place available."

Mrs. Bray has several interesting comments to make on the Educational films in England.

"You have no idea how enthusiastic they are in England over the Bray pictures. I gave a private showing to the London Local Board of Education, and the members wanted to use our pictures in their schools immediately. The animated technical drawings fascinated them. They had never seen entire courses of instruction so clearly and entertainingly presented, they told me."

From England Mrs. Bray went to France, and after visiting some of the smaller cities made her headquarters in Paris. There she found that only the larger distributors had a keen sense of fair dealing with their exhibitors.

"It seems that the rights of distributors are not sufficiently protected, and the authorities make few and futile attempts to guard stolen pictures from being sold to irresponsible, if not dishonest, exhibitors. During my stay in Paris I traced a stolen 'Mary Pickford' picture, but the authorities did nothing to establish the rights of the real owners of the pictures."

Mrs. Bray was astonished at the appearance of the motion picture theatres.

"They are not nearly so well kept as those in England or in America," she said. "And as for presentation, Paris is far behind us. France needs more motion picture theatres than any country in Europe, with the possible exception of Russia. The lack of them is seen in the social life of the people. For in every country where a large proportion of the people attend the picture shows I have found a public more enlightened on general matters than in territories where few people have the opportunity to attend them."

After a short sojourn in Paris, Mrs. Bray went to Cologne, where she found the officers and men of the English army of occupation. They told her, though, that she would never reach Berlin, alone, as no woman had ventured on the journey before her, unaccompanied.

The chaotic conditions in Berlin are ascribed partly to the maladjustment of the population to the kaleidoscopic changes in the value of the exchange rates. Mrs. Bray continues:

"There is little beef in the interior of Germany, though it can be obtained in Cologne. Nevertheless, after spending six weeks in Berlin, things were beginning to look brighter. Foods were somewhat easier to obtain, and the necessities were more plentiful. I believe that in six months the terrible stringency of the past winter will be greatly reduced and the people once more be strong enough to do a day's work without experiencing complete exhaustion."

"The drama," she said, "has always been the mirror of a nation's thoughts. In Berlin the theatre is quite pessimistic. All plays are joyless, hopeless, tragic. Comedy is rarely played because the people are not in the mood to enjoy it. Nevertheless, the theatrical performances in Germany today are the most finished and artistic that I have ever witnessed anywhere.

"Everywhere in Germany, educational films—American educational films—are in great demand. I gave a private showing of some of the Bray educationals to several professors of the University of Berlin, and they immediately wanted to take our entire product for the local schools and for the university. They also offered to cooperate with the Goldwyn-Bray production staff in the making of scientific subjects.

"But motion picture production in Germany is about ten years behind that in America. The German wants our pictures badly. So eager are the people to see motion picture entertainments that they flock to the theatres whenever they can afford the luxury, and enjoy whatever is presented. It is also a way of forgetting a hungry stomach."

Memorial Ceremony for Stanley Mastbaum

The Stanley V. Mastbaum Memorial Cmmittee announce that the annual exercises in commemoration of the birthday of the late Mr. Mastbaum will be held at the Eaglesville Sanitarium, near Norristown, Pa., on Sunday afternoon, March 28, at 2 o'clock.

Select Pictures Will Distribute All Prizma Subjects

Prizma Will Also Make Multi-Reel Subjects in Colors It Is Reported

AN announcement of importance and interest to the motion picture industry is contained in the statement of Lewis J. Selznick that he has acquired the sole and exclusive right to not alone distribute the products of Prizma natural color pictures but also that Prizma will invade the field of screen drama by producing in colors long subjects of five or more reels as well as feature subjects of one and two reels Further, that Myron Selznick will have active supervision of the color picturizations of famous novels and plays made by the Prizma process.

Contracts were entered into by Lewis J. Selznick and Lee Benoist, president of the Prizma company, whereby Select Pictures will take over the distribution of all Prizma subjects heretofore handled by the Republic, and will serve the theatres with these and such other Prizma subjects now in process of production.

Mr. Lewis J. Selznick, in discussing the transaction, whereby his company secures the advantages of the Prizma color process, said:

"I have watched with great interest the progress of the Prizma color pictures since their introduction on the market and the evolution of improvement was so marked that I realized that it was color photography which would register the high water mark in the field of achievement of motion photography. This is an epoch that has been awaited by all who have in any way been connected with the business. That it only needed natural color to give to pictures the final impetus that would mark the character of entertainment—one of lasting and substantial permanency. That color, with its multitudinous variations gave to the celluloid strip the stimulating interest that goes with never ending changes and provides a suspense which the spoken drama holds for an audience by means of the different tones of the actor's voice.

"When, the other day, William Van Doren Kelly, the inventor of the Prizma color process, told me that he had at last perfected his camera to that state of efficiency where the fringing of colors had been eliminated and besides the filtering through the lens of the seven primary colors together with shade variation had been accomplished as evidenced by test pictures, I knew the psychological moment had arrived to secure this wonder of wonders as a fitting accompaniment to my studio products. Kelly's invention is as far in advance of the ordinary process as tungsten is to the carbon filament of the incandescent lamp—so is Prizma to the black and white.

"No man in the industry has been a greater scoffer of color photography as applied to motion pictures than I. I have seen them come and go, but when the Prizma officials showed me a two-reel dramatic picture, 'The Little Match Girl,' with Madge Evans as the star, every doubt and every one of my pet arguments against color motion pictures were swept into a cocked hat. Here was a picture that not alone had all the strength of the black and white, but the highly added novelty of perfectly applied color through a natural process. In addition thereto it disclosed the solving of the secret of the third dimension in picture depth, or what is more generally known as the stereoscopic effect. The evidence disclosed by this two-reel picture was sufficient to convince any jury that there was nothing left to be desired or hoped for in motion picture productions."

Although no changes have been announced in the personnel of the Prizma organization, following the statement that Mr. Selznick has acquired the Prizma product, it is made known this week that George Meeker, who has been general sales manager of Republic Distributing Corporation, has been delegated by Mr. Selznick to the Prizma forces, where he will serve in an executive sales capacity. Mr. Meeker takes with him a record considered enviable in the sales end of the industry, and it is expected that the Prizma product will profit greatly through his addition to the staff. In selecting Mr. Meeker for the post, Mr. Selznick was guided by the fact that he had "lived" with the Prizma subjects, insofar as sales are concerned, for the past year and is thoroughly familiar with Mr. Selznick's methods.

Prizma Pictures, it is cited in the Selznick statement this week, can be projected through the regulation projection machines used in all theatres. No special equipment or apparatus is necessary, as the Kelly invention is complete in the film when it is put into the projector. That this fact is appreciated is evidenced by the large number of theatres which have been selecting the Prizma color reels to present preceding the feature, or long picture of the program, thus lending the whole program a touch of color. Instances of this have been cited in all parts of the country, one of the most recent being the Rialto theatre, New York, presentation the week of March 7, when Managing Director Hugo Reisenfeld used the Prizma. "The Ghost of John Barleycorn," with a feature called "The Six Best Cellars."

Samuel L. Rothapfel, considered one of the premiere picture showmen of this country, is quoted as being much in favor of the Prizma reels to color and lend added interest to the program. He selects a subject that blends with his five-reel feature. This method is being used extensively by exhibitors, according to reports.

In closing his announcement, Mr. Selznick said: "Prizma holds a unique and distinct place in the programs of the country, and we intend to make it still more valuable to exhibitors. If there is an improvement of any kind possible, the industry can rest assured we will not neglect it and I believe there is much that can be done and accomplished for the exhibitor and the public."

That the Selznick Prizma deal is as sound financially as can possibly be is proven by the fact that a group of bankers, convinced that the Prizma process is beyond the experimental stage, is back of the proposition with unlimited capital, it is declared.

Georges Carpentier to Produce in East

WITH the arrival of Georges Carpentier, "the idol of France," imminent, the rather significant announcement is made, that the mighty European "Champ" will work in an Eastern studio. This would seem to indicate a desire to be near the centre of pugilistic activities and the probability of an early meeting with Dempsey, although nothing definite can be learned on that subject.

The story to be produced has been completed by Willard Mack, and negotiations will be consumated within a few days, for one of the industry's greatest directors, it is stated. Production will be started at once on the big Robertson-Cole special, but whether the work will be done in a New York City or Jersey studio, is not made known.

National Association to Move Offices

The National Association of the Motion Picture Industry will on March 31 remove its offices to a suite in the New York Theatre Building, 1520 Broadway, from its present headquarters in the Times Building, where it has had a home since its organization in 1916. The increased activity of the association in all the phases of the industry made it imperative that larger offices be obtained. The new offices are on the Forty-fourth street side of the New York Theatre Building, and are admirably arranged for the purposes of the association.

Pathe Distribution for Associated Exhibitors

Associated Exhibitors, Inc., has made definite and final arrangements with Pathe Exchange, Inc., for the distribution of the Associated product. This move on the part of Associated Exhibitors comes as the result of an exhaustive consideration of every distributing organization in the industry. The Associated Exhibitors found that Pathe, headed by Paul Brunet, offered the most complete distributing service to be found. With branch offices in more than thirty-two film centers, it is believed that Pathe has efficient forces and facilities to handle any number of pictures.

While this new arrangement is merely to provide for the distribution of the Associated product throughout the United States and Canada, Paul Brunet will act as one of the directors of the new organization. This will give the Associated the benefit, in an advisory capacity, of the knowledge and experience of this trained film executive.

No pictures have been turned over to Pathe as yet for distribution. There have been false rumors of several important deals in which the name of Associated Exhibitors, Inc., has figured.

Film Not to Blame for Juvenile Misdeeds

"The motion picture is not guilty." This is the verdict based on reports from chief probation officers of juvenile courts throughout the United States on the relation of motion pictures to juvenile delinquency, according to the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures, which has just issued in pamphlet form the results of its inquiry into this mooted subject. Every now and then the charge is made and sensationally featured that motion pictures are responsible for some juvenile misdeed. The National Board has investigated many such cases and found them almost without exception to be gross misstatements. The National Board, last year, with the assistance of the American Probation Association, addressed a letter to the chief probation officers of the principal cities of the country having juvenile courts, asking for a frank statement of their experience and convictions in the matter.

These confirm the impressions of the National Board. As one probation officer put it: "I have been in this work for fourteen years and have had occasion to deal with thousands of delinquents. . . . Of the thousands of boys and girls arraigned in our court, there have been very few who testified, or of whom our investigators could learn, that they committed the wrong in question because of the so-called baleful effects of the pictures they had seen. Of course, there are certain pictures which fire the imagination of youngsters, but there are other things which they see in their everyday life which have the same effect."

United Theatres Holds Lively Session in Chicago

COMPLETE harmony and enthusiasm marked the quarterly meeting of the United Theatres of America directors, held this week in Chicago. Plans were adopted for a line of productions for the next six months, which, it is estimated, will cost more than two million dollars. The Triangle and Lynch acquisitions were approved, and full powers delegated to the executives to negotiate the purchase of another large distributing company. A resolution was adopted to the end that each franchise holder pay for at least three pictures in advance. Steps were taken to establish United Boards of Trade at the exchange centers so as to assure full representation of the United Theatres in all districts. Six hundred thousand dollar billboard contract announced. More than two thousand theatres are reported to be now franchise and stock holders in United Theatres.

The executive committee elected to act until the next quarterly meeting includes Harry Hall, Troy; Geo. J. Schade, Sandusky, Ohio; C. M. McCloskey, Uniontown, Pa.; W. G. Hartford, Pawtucket, R. I.; Leo Brecher, New York; and President Berst and Treasurer Goldsmith, ex officio. Los Angeles is expected to be next meeting place of the board.

Another Theatre "De Luxe" for Chicago

Chicago is to have another theatre which will be "de Luxe" in every sense that the word implies, according to an announcement just made by Herman Schoenstadt, head of H. Schoenstadt & Sons Theatrical Enterprises, owners of a powerful string of Windy City theatres.

The new theatre will be in the heart of the fashionable south side hotel and country club district, at the corner of Hyde Park Boulevard and Blackstone, where a lot 150 feet by 300 has been purchased by the Schoenstadt interests for a consideration of $250,000. Mr. Schoenstadt proposes to erect a 450-room hotel at a cost of $2,000,000 and a 3,500-seat theatre which will cost approximately $1,500,000. It is the determination of the Schoenstadts to make a theatre equal to any in the United States, regardless of expense.

First National Men Tour Throughout Territory

Col. Fred Levy, president of the First National Exhibitors' exchange of Kentucky and Tennessee, and Lee L. Goldberg, the secretary, have just completed "a swing around the circle" in their territory.

Col. Levy is president of the National Association of Retail Clothiers, and as such was booked to attend the state convention of retail clothiers of Ohio, held in Cincinnati. He had also to attend the convention of Tennessee clothiers in Knoxville the same week. In his talks to the clothing men of the two states he digressed sufficiently to tell about the picture industry

Exhibitors May Have to Fear Church Movies

Buffalo, N. Y., exhibitors may soon have another problem on their hands—the competition of downtown churches on Sunday evenings.

Sunday evening, March 7th, the East Presbyterian Church, South Division street, presented a five-reel feature entitled "As a Man Thinks," instead of the usual sermon, and on Sunday evening, March 14th, the fashionable Calvary Presbyterian Church on Delaware avenue did away with the usual Sunday evening sermon and showed nothing less than Mary Pickford in "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm."

At Calvary Church the Pickford feature was shown in place of the preaching of a sermon, although the Rev. Gardner E. Eldridge briefly drew a moral before dismissing the congregation. Mr. Eldridge has shown films for the past several Sunday evenings, and he says the plan is meeting with unusual success. The chief difficulty, he says, is in getting the right kind of film.

"I think the motion pictures are sure to come as a permanent part of church work," said the clergyman. "They are the common language of the people. The movies can serve to teach the truth in a most forceful way.

"Our only difficulty so far has been in getting the right kind of films. The motion picture producers have not yet realized the value of pictures to the Church, and there are few films of just the kind we would like."

"Evangeline" Shown at Illinois University

According to a report from the offices of the William Fox Film Corporation, the picturization of "Evangeline," Longfellow's master poem, has registered another victory in educational circles as an artistic achievement.

From the Chicago Exchange of Fox Film Corporation, presided over by Clyde W. Eckhardt, comes a detailed report of how the Y. M. C. A. of the University of Illinois put over three big performances of "Evangeline" before audiences comprised for the most part of the students, male and female.

Another Independent Combine Hinted

JOSEPH FRIEDMAN, of the Celebrated Players, Chicago, is in New York this week and report has it that plans are under way for another convention of independent exchanges and producers which it is declared will be a rival to the body formed in Chicago recently. While efforts to get in touch with Mr. Friedman were unsuccessful, it is understood that the proposed gathering is scheduled for the early part of next week in Chicago.

Clancy of Hartford Cashes In with Exploitation Idea

How an Entire Public School System Advertised "Pollyanna" Feature

THIS is a story of how a fellow with an imagination "put over" Mary Pickford's "Pollyanna."

It is a story of how an entire public school system in a city of 150,000 was worked into a state of frenzied enthusiasm over the coming of "Pollyanna."

It is a story of teaching the gospel of everlasting gladness to an entire town and how little hearts that had lost the joy of life were bathed in the sunshine of a new found happiness.

The man who is responsible for all this is J. F. Clancy, manager of Poli's Palace theatre at Hartford, Conn. Some weeks ago when Mr. Clancy learned of the date of the annual spring vacation of the Hartford schools he wrote R. C. Miller, who presides over the motion picture department of the Poli interests, to book for him for that particular week Mary Pickford in "Pollyanna."

Three days later a personal letter from Mr. Clancy went to every teacher of drawing in the public schools of Hartford, calling their attention to the coming engagement of Miss Pickford and asking for their co-operation in bringing to a successful conclusion a water-color competition among the children of the elementary schools. In order to eliminate every possibility of outside assistance the teachers were informed that it was essential that each drawing be signed by the instructor of drawing of the grade in the school from which each contest was registered.

Two days later a special story occupying fully a quarter of a page appeared in the Hartford Sunday Courant announcing the competition. Accompanying the story was a four-column reproduction of a personal letter from Miss Pickford to Mr. Clancy, in which the former donated fifty dollars in prizes for the contest to be divided as follows: Twenty-five dollars for the first, fifteen for the second and ten dollars for the third. The following day an attractive four-page folder neatly printed on heavy coated stock was placed in the hands of the children. The folder contained on its front page a conventional picture of Miss Pickford coupled with an announcement of the coming of "Pollyanna" and the drawing contest. On the second page was printed a set of rules governing the competition, while on the third was a half tone drawing of the star as "Pollyanna," attired in a short dress of red and white gingham with sun bonnet to match and in her hands a doll. This was the picture the children were asked to copy and underneath were a few printed suggestions to guide the youngsters in their selection of colors. On the back page was printed Miss Pickford's letter to Mr. Clancy which was used on the day previous by the Sunday Courant.

Unusual Stage Setting at Capitol Theatre

ARTIST JOHN WENGER at the Capitol theatre is giving the patrons of the house something different in the way of stage settings for the overture in use, "Martha."

Description of the canvass would be impossible, therefore we can but announce that the creation is of futurist design and has its principal use as a background for the flooding and blending of various colored lights on it as the rendition of the overture progresses. It is in the arrangement and artistic manner in which the floods are used that the setting recommends itself as something unusual. The effect is very pleasing to the eye and gives the classic musical composition an added lustre.

In one day the "Pollyanna" contest became the talk of the town. "Kids" from all sections of the city came to the Palace box office for a copy of the rules and those who were too young to make the distance sent their parents. Even the teachers became infected with the fever and many took away with them from ten to fifty copies. The competition grew, not only among the kiddies, but the teachers themselves, each school striving to have a representation in the final award. Special classes were conducted in some of the schools after the regular hours, for the kiddies who had entered the competition. For three weeks the schools hummed with excitement.

Finally the day for the closing of the contest arrived. Three hundred juvenile conceptions of Mary Pickford as "Pollyanna" done in all the colors of the rainbow, were turned over to the judges, Miss Frances Hope Bachelor and Miss Isabelle Bachelor of the art department of the Hartford High School who had kindly consented to pass upon the work of the youngsters of the lower grade schools. The prize winners were: First prize, Miss Evelyn Ljonquist, a pupil of the New Park School; second prize, Joseph Habicht, a pupil of the Chauncey Harris School; third prize, Samuel Berman, a pupil of the Arsenal School.

After the awards had been made the drawings were placed in several giant frames made of strips of beaver board for backings and suspended in conspicuous places in the lobby. During the showing of the picture of "Pollyanna" this miniature art gallery was visited by thousands. The work of the prize winners which Miss Pickford now has in her possession, were very excellent representations of her "Pollyanna," but most of them reminded one of the comic valentines which used to adorn the shop windows in the not too far distant past. This added a comedy touch to the whole affair and some of the teachers who had signed the drawings in a moment of pedagogical enthusiasm were caught in the theatre lobby armed with erasers, one for ink and the other for pencil, obliterating their names from those responsible for most of the laughter.

After reading the above you will doubtlessly conclude that this was a pretty fine piece of publicity but this is not all. A week before the coming of "Pollyanna," Mr. Clancy induced the Hartford Times to give a "Pollyanna" party to all of the unfortunate children in Hartford. Six front page stories, each carrying a two column head, were devoted to the telling of how the Times hoped to brighten the lives of these little folks by introducing them to the "Glad Game." For the cripples and those too young to make the journey to the theatre, the Times called upon owners of automobiles to donate their cars and they came in so fast that there was a big surplus. Two thousand children crowded into the theatre, many of them to look at a motion picture for the first time in their lives.

From out in Newington came about sixty youngsters from the Home for the Crippled Children, most of whom had to be carried into the theatre. There were 200 from the American School for the Deaf; from the Watkinson Farm School about seventy; from the Hartford Orphan Asylum there were 300 kiddies whose ages ranged from three to fifteen. The Village Street Mission sent 300 and the Union for Home Work about the same number. The Charity Organization sent 100 as did the United Jewish Charities. There were other groups of from ten to twenty-five rounded up by settlement workers making up what was probably the most unique gathering ever assembled in a Hartford theatre.

When the audience was dismissed the crippled children remained behind. Later one by one they were carried by strong arms to the automobiles that had brought them down from the home. Tenderly they were placed upon the upholstered seats little bodies that no Doctor Chilton would ever cure. And away went twelve cars of them—back to the home, faces wreathed in smiles and all of their troubles, for at least one day, forgotten because they had seen "Pollyanna."

Novelty in Lobby Display For "His Royal Slyness"

These two illustrations show a very cleverly designed cut-out advertising Harold Lloyd's "His Royal Slyness" at the Virginian theatre, Charleston, West Virginia. The display attracted a great deal of attention and was the means of adding many dollars to the box office of the house during the picture's engagement

Press Books Divided Into Distinct and Definite Classes

Gus Schneider Condemns Producers' Aids Which "Tout" Somebody

THERE are two kinds of criticism in this world. One is known as destructive, and is generally condemned as having no right to exist, because it fails to remedy the things or conditions it rails at. The other, named constructive, is popularly supposed to possess many virtues and much merit. It is my firm belief that the press books issued by film producers are the cause of more destructive criticism than any one single element in the film firmament. After a publicity manager has struggled with three or four of these collections of funny stories about stars and staresses, in a vain attempt to determine just what the plot of the play might be, he is hardly in a position to do much more than gurgle in despair, and expire.

For five years I have been responsible for the advertising and publicity of the Providence Strand theatre. The crimes I committed in the beginning of my experience in this field have probably been atoned for by the product of the past three years or so. The Strand advertising has been commented upon pleasantly by friend and foe alike, and not a little of it has adorned the pages of this publication. Perhaps that gives me the license to speak as I shall on the subject of press material.

Press books furnished by film producers may be divided into two general classes: those which aim to tout the star, the author, the producer, the scenarioist, the photographer, the title author, the stage director, and the pet poodle of the president of the company; and those which make an honest endeavor to help the exhibitor. Unhappily, the latter class seems the more unpopular with the producers, who seem not to be able to take from advertisers in the merchandise field the lessons they have learned in furnishing what is known as dealer helps, to retail merchants who sell their product.

To be specific: A press book should be prepared by a man, or men, who can sit at a desk and place Mr. Exhibitor alongside for consultation. It is infinitely more important that the exhibitor should be able to use the press material to maintain the personality of his house, than to herald each picture of each producer, and every production of every star, as the greatest thing that ever happened. It is infinitely more important that the sample mount house, and it is usually quite easy to design their advertising, with the material the press books contain. Occasionally some outside bookings are made, and then our troubles begin.

In the first place, halftone cuts, as anyone who has ever breathed near a newspaper ought to know, print horribly on news stock, unless they are expensively treated with fancy screens and hand work. Yet most of the illustrations I have seen in press books, except those I have given honorable mention above, are poorly made halftones, squared up, with no attempt at art or decoration. Usually they are made from stills and show a whole group of characters, impossible to translate into terms of human figures when they appear in the newspaper.

And the copy! Banal, insipid, uninformative and useless, most of it. A word or two about the producer, the director and the star, and, at the bottom, a very small space where the exhibitor may have the privilege of inserting the name of his theatre.

Two weeks ago the Strand had a non-Paramount show. The press books of the two features on the bill were typical of the sort at which I am throwing mud. One was printed on a four sheet newspaper size folder and showed several stills, lithos and lobby stands; but it did not contain a single coherent story of the film on which our local stories could be based. Neither was there a single line cut illustrated in this mis named press sheet. We had to fake the whole thing from lobby photos, and it cost the house a pretty penny to do it. The book on the other feature was almost as bad. It was printed in 8 x 10 size, with a very handsome cover in two colors, but not a single illustration inside that could be used in our advertising. The result was that our whole week's publicity was all type, without a cut to brighten it up.

Now for something constructive: Producers and producers' publicity departments, attention! When you get out a press book, remember that the exhibitor wants to use it, not throw it in the waste basket. Bear in mind that exhibitors throughout this glorious and progressive land are learning to appreciate the value of good advertising.

Remember that in Oshkosh you don't amount to nearly as much as the fellow who shows your pictures; and his name ought to appear in type at least as large as that in which the name of the star or play is set. Yours ought not to show at all, maybe. If you make good pictures, and help the exhibitor to put them over properly—you'll profit by it, no matter whether your name shows in the advertising or not. Give them line cuts—not halftones. Spend twice the money on the inside of your press books as you do on the covers. Don't call each picture the best ever made, and don't call each one of your stars the best in the world. If they are even good—they'll get by big. Take a look at the folders, booklets and other dealer helps that are furnished by manufacturers of advertised merchandise. These manufacturers learned long ago that if their trade mark was plastered all over everything, the dealer would not use the stuff. It is not a case of "Blank's Soap is the best in the world and Smith's store is permitted to sell it," but "Smith's is a darned good store and they sell Blank's Soap, which is also good." The advertiser who knows what he is about when he designs dealer helps remembers that his dealer has a relationship with the people in his locality that must be capitalized by linking it up with the goods made by the manufacturer. So the manufacturer's name is made small and the dealer's name BIG! The result is—everybody happy—business good.

About the Story on This Page

ORIGINALLY we did not intend to allow this series of articles on "press books by the men who use them" to run indefinitely. We thought the subject would be exhausted in a few weeks but there has been such widespread interest in the series and so many press agents and managers all over the country have offered to contribute further that we have concluded to extend the dead line until a later date.

As we anticipated the subject matter of the various articles we have published and have on hand is much the same, but each writer has his own style of telling what he thinks of the press book which by the way you will have noticed is not always so terribly complimentary. The writer of this week's article is Gus Schneider who does the publicity work for Charles William's Strand theatre, Providence, R. I. Knowing Mr. Williams tolerably well we are pretty sure that any man who works for him any length of time must know his business since while being a very affable chap, Mr. Williams has ideas of efficiency when it comes to managing a theatre. We mention this in passing that you may judge that Mr. Schneider in writing an article on press books, knows wherein he speaks. Mr. Schneider does know his business yet he praises some press books that if we remember correctly other contributors have condemned which would suggest that there is a difference of opinion as to what constitutes a good press book even among those who use the article. Any way it is a good story and we think entitled to the attention of every exhibitor who intends to keep up to date.

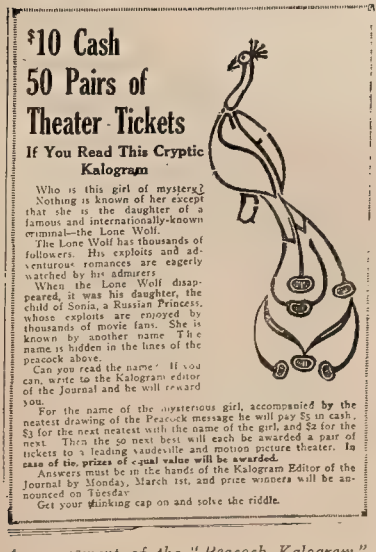
"Peacock Kalogram" Contest Excites Detroit



George Guise Grabs Press Book Idea for Louise Glaum Picture

THE Louise Glaum "Peacock Kalogram" idea for the exploitation of "The Lone Wolf's Daughter" has been put over in Detroit in great shape.

The Glaum picture was booked for Charles H. Miles' Majestic theatre last week and George Guise, press representative for the house, looked about for something unique and new in the way of exploitation. He found it in the "Peacock Kalogram."

Mr. Guise soon interested Marjorie Daw, who conducts the daily photoplay section in the Detroit Journal, a newspaper of more than 250,000 daily circulation, and who welcomed the "Kalogram" as a decidedly novel addition to her bright page of current film news and agreed to use it for six consecutive days. Announcement was carried with the cut offering $10 in cash and 50 pairs of theatre tickets for those who solved the "Kalogram," giving the name of the screen star which the mystic peacock spelled and accompanying the solution with a neatly drawn copy of the "Kalogram," the prizes to be awarded to those who named the star and presented the neatest drawn copies of the peacock.

On the seventh day, on the eve of the opening date of "The Lone Wolf's Daughter," a drawing made by "Lou" Tower, the cartoonist, of the "Kalogram" showing the letters l-o-u-i-s-e-g-l-a-u-m plainly deciphered and announcing the full list of prize winners, was used in the Journal.

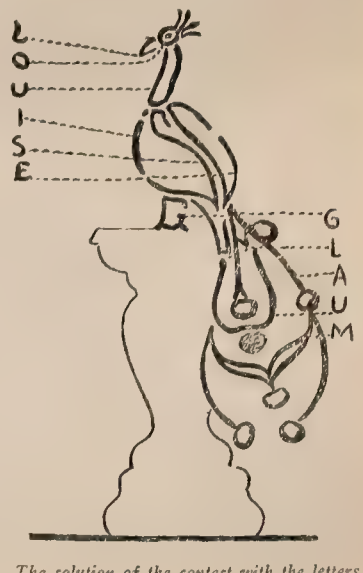
Best Yet in Novelty Stage Settings

PERHAPS the most artistic vocal number presentation ever staged in a New York motion picture theatre is on the bill at the Rivoli this week.

Cutting directly from a Pathe newsweekly strip showing a big ship foundering off the Canadian coast, with only a slight pause to allow the lifting of the screen, a stage setting for "When the Bell in the Lighthouse Rings" is shown that is a marvel of ingenuity and realism. Through set pieces at right and left representing towering cliffs of a rock-bound coast, the spectator looks through an apparent cleft in the rocks out on a stormy sea and sky. High up on the top of one of the cliffs the lighthouse winks its warning to those on the sea. Lower down and nicely situated to give the whole scene proper perspective the singer, Emanuel List, basso profundo, in the costume of the seafaring man, half sits and half reclines as he sings the familiar selection. The exceptional feature of the setting is that the part of the sea shown is apparently the real thing. To get this effect the designers have blocked out a "picture curtain" on the back drop, or, in this case, we think, the back wall of the theatre where the ordinary painted sea would blend with the sky line, and then found several hundred feet of film showing the ocean breaking on a sandy shore. By using a properly cut aperture in front of the lens of the projection machine the image is framed to cut into the V-shaped opening between the set pieces mentioned and the result is absolute realism. The initiated will soon figure out how the illusion is created by the slight unsteadiness of the projection, but we are of the opinion that most of any audience will not believe that part of the setting they are viewing is a "moving picture."

During the appearance of the "Kalogram" in the Journal, Miss Daw received 1873 replies. Guesses varied from Mae Marsh to Theda Bara, the "Kalogram's" real value lying in the fact that it was entirely different from any other similar schemes in being actually difficult to solve.

Not only were the mails to the Journal's photoplay editor literally swamped with letters directed to "The Kalogram Editor" but the editorial department of the newspaper was invaded by an army of "Kalogram" guessers.



The answers showed that great pains had been taken both in solving the mystic letters and copying the peacock, some of the drawings being of truly artistic merit and others being done in water colors. According to Stanley Rushton, assistant city editor of the Journal, telephone inquiries concerning the "Kalogram" came in the same volume which usually accompanies the eve of an election day or a World's Series game.

Simultaneous with the "Kalogram" contest, a superb millinery creation, an exact duplicate of one worn by Miss Glaum during one of the scenes in "The Lone Wolf's Daughter," was placed in the window of the Parisian Company's exclusive hat and gown shop. A display card under the hat announced that it would be given to the holder of the lucky number among the coupons to be distributed at the Majestic theatre during the week's run of the feature.

This stunt also proved of immeasurable value. The interest the Louise Glaum hat aroused is shown by the fact that the Parisian Company during the display received orders to make seven duplicates of the hat for customers who were delighted with the chic design.

Both of these exploitation stunts proved miles above anything ever attempted in that line in Detroit. Both were extremely simple and put over without expense except for the cash prizes for the "Kalogram" and the small cost of the hat. The results were shown in the Majestic Theatre's box office statement for the week and the generous amount the theatre saved in advertising, which could not have brought the results regardless of space used.

The first and last ad carried by the Journal on the "Kalogram" contest are reproduced herewith.

"Bride" Advertises "The Spite Bride" in Buffalo

Buffalo, N. Y., has a number of live Exchange exploitation men who are doing good work in aiding exhibitors to put over pictures in that city. This is a picture of the new car and the "bride" who helped "The Spite Bride" make money for the Strand theatre as described on the opposite page

Buffalo Advertises "Spite Bride" in Novel Manner

A Beautiful Girl in Bride's Garments Rides in A New Limousine

THE Strand theatre, Buffalo, put over some excellent stunts on "The Spite Bride" during it presentation recently, the best of which however was the parading of a new limousine in the downtown streets, in which was a beautiful girl arrayed in bride's garments and with signs in the windows bearing this inscription, "Married to Spite the Other Girl. See About It Today at the Strand Theatre. Olive Thomas in 'The Spite Bride.'" Through the co-operation of "Andy" Sharick, Select exploitation man, Manager E. O. Weinberg procured a new Overland light four, which was being shown at the Automobile show. The machine was decorated with streamers with an Overland ad on them. The car was also trimmed with large white ribbons and bows. The auto, which was loaned without cost, was used Saturday, Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday. On Saturday, preceding the opening day of the picture, the machine was driven about town with a large card in the window upon which was "Watch This Car for the Spite Bride." Stretched over the extra wheel in the rear of the car was a canvas, bearing the ad "The Spite Bride, Strand theatre, February 29, March 1, 2 and 3."

On Monday the Strand brought to Buffalo Sadie Lynn, a vaudeville artist, who alorned herself in a bridal costume and rode around the downtown sections afternoon and evening. This was continued Tuesday and Wednesday. A splendid fur wrap was procured from the New York Fur Store for the showing of a slide on the Strand screen and fresh flowers were obtained daily for the use of a small card in the front window of the auto boosting the florist. The Overland display at the Auto show in the 74th Armory carried a card advertising "The Spite Bride." Inasmuch as the average attendance at the Auto show was 15,000 the value of this publicity can easily be seen. The car with the "spite bride" inside was parked in front of the Strand for a time each afternoon and evening and attracted no end of attention. The stunt was decidedly original and brought many new patrons to the box office.

Another good stunt was the arrangement whereby a window was turned over to "The Spite Bride" by the H. A. Meldrum Company's department store in return for distribution of heralds with the Strand ad on one side and the store ad on the other. The company gave out one of these heralds with every package sent out of the store.

A good display was obtained in one of the large candy stores by advertising Olive Thomas kisses. A dozen good displays were also obtained on office building news stands and the Ellicott square lobby through the showing of a large card advertising Classic magazine which contained a big story on Olive Thomas. Displays were also obtained by a tie-up with stands handling the mid winter number of Pictorial Review which had a full page painting of Olive Thomas by Haskel Coffin.

A three sheet cut out of Miss Thomas was made and mounted in a red curtained shadow box, arranged with red and white lights to give a most attractive effect. This with a life-sized cut out of dog was used all week in the lobby. Another lobby stunt was the placing of a small table upon which was placed a number of money bags and a sign reading "$1,000 to Spite the Other Girl—See 'The Spite Bride.'" The week of the showing this display was fixed on the front of the theatre, second floor, and the lights connected with an alternating switch which flashed, resulting in an unusual display.

Mr. Weinberg had the assistance in the exploitation of "Andy" Sharick, Select exploitation man, who is meeting with unusual success in his work in the Buffalo territory.

How Hewitt Stirred Things Up In Robinson

"Gay Old Dog" Exploitation Which Is Good in Any Town Where Film Is Played

MANAGER HEWITT, of the Strand theatre, Robinson, Ill., is one of the real high-stepping exploitation exhibitors in his section of the country and when news is slow in his neighborhood he can be found stirring things up to the advantage of the Strand theatre. He recently booked "The Gay Old Dog," and decided that he might just as well have them standing in a long line waiting for tickets, he started to work.

As a preliminary he went to a nearby city and sent a telegram to John Cumberland, suggesting that all hotels in the city be tried by the messengers. That night every hotel was paged for the mysterious John Cumberland. He sent other wires from day to day suggesting that different stores and business places be tried. At the end of a week he had the entire town looking for John Cumberland.

By way of variety he called up a laundry and asked that Mr. Cumberland's laundry be sent to the hotel. A vain search for the laundry followed and each day the manager called up the laundry, stating that he was Mr. Cumberland and demanding his laundry. After the identity of Mr. Cumberland became known, it may be explained, the manager of the laundry gathered together all the old lost laundry in his place and sent it to the theatre marked collect. It was taken and the bill paid. The story of the joke found its way into the papers (more exploitation and publicity).

As a finishing touch on the campaign, personals were inserted in the newspapers advertising for information of Mr. Cumberland, who was described as a gay old dog, was very much wanted. Replies were directed to a Post Office box. Before the announcement of the picture was made in the newspapers the Police Department, the hotel clerks, merchants, and all sorts of amateur sleuths were aroused by the mystery of the man named Cumberland who was such a gay old dog.

Crowded houses marked the opening day of the showing and the wisdom of the manager was rewarded to the fullest measure. Mr. Hewitt is keeping quiet for a few days while business is good but the people of Robinson are waiting for the next thrill he is due to give them.

Gives Photos of Murray At Chicago Party.

In conjunction with the showing of "On With the Dance," at the Randolph theatre, Chicago, Daniel Roche, Exploitation Representative of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation at Chicago, arranged an excellent advertising plan with Guyon's Paradise, one of the leading dancing academies of Chicago, that can well be followed in any other city.

Guyon's Paradise is the most fashionable dancing academy in Chicago and the average evening attendance is 1800 persons. A waltz contest was being conducted by the management of the academy, and Mr. Guyon was induced to set aside two Thursday nights as "On With the Dance" nights, when photos of Mae Murray would be given to each woman attending the academy.

Locklear Feature Gets Great Publicity in Chicago

Chicago Exploitation of "Great Air Robbery" Unusual

Unique Tie-up with Newspaper and Packing Company is Arranged

DURING the week of February 21st, continuing well up into the second week of the first run at the Band Box theatre, Chicago has witnessed some of the most unique and concentrating exploitations ever given a production in Chicago. The subject of the exploitation was "The Great Air Robbery."

Two days before the opening of this great production full page advertisements were run in the Chicago Examiner; half page, quarter page, full column and other large copy was spread through the amusement sections of the various Chicago papers. A unique tie-up was arranged between Universal Film Exchange, the Chicago Evening American, Morris & Company, and the Curtiss Aeroplane agency. This particular stunt was the dropping of literature advertising the showing of "The Great Air Robbery" at the Band Box, from an aeroplane which flew over the loop and neighborhood districts of Chicago every day during the first week's showing of this production. One hundred thousand circulars containing an advertisement of Morris & Company, Supreme Ham and Bacon were distributed—several thousand of which were redeemable at the Chicago Evening American circulation office for either a slab of Bacon or one of Morris & Company's Supreme Hams. Morris & Company had redeemed these coupons to the amount of $15.00 up until the fourth day. Each time one of the lucky finders reported to the Chicago American they were given a ham or bacon—their picture was taken and published in the Chicago American during the week. On the first day of this stunt there was a different story with a different picture in each edition.

The first to find one of the coupons for a slab of bacon was Miss Frances Olsen, whose picture accompanies this article.

Another unique tie-up with Morris & Company was the parading through the loop of Morris & Company's prize twelve-horse show team carrying "Queen Locklear," a $10,000 prize short horn named in honor of the aviator. This stunt caused much excitement in Chicago's crowded loop district when it made its daily rounds. Signs on the wagon announced that this prize cow was no bull. Every day the wagon came to the loop with the prize short horn aboard different signs were used.

The most important feature of the exploitation campaign was the coming of Locklear to Chicago for the express purpose of thrilling the Windy City residents with his aeroplane stunts. In the presence of 15,000 people lined along Chicago lake front—while flying at a height of only 200 feet—Locklear mounted to the top plane and while standing erect ordered his pilot to make a complete loop. He seemed to like the sensation of this particular stunt, for within three minutes his performance was again repeated. It may be said at this point that this is absolutely the first time that any man ever attempted and performed such a daring and death defying stunt. Locklear explained that he figured that centrifugal force would keep him glued to the top plane. He said that he had it figured out—and quite properly so—as the result shows, as Mr. Locklear is still with us. After completing the loop, a gust of wind carried the plane over the loop—coming within fifteen feet of the tops of the buildings. As a matter of fact, the daring aviator was compelled to dodge in and about several towers and flag staffs. He was seen to climb quickly into the cock-pit of the plane, which he afterward explained was for the purpose of permitting the machine to gain altitude. This was his only narrow escape while performing.

After Locklear descended this flight, by pre-arrangement several feature writers of the various newspapers in Chicago were taken for a spin over Chicago's Lake front and loop. By this arrangement, feature articles some of which covered two columns in length were run in Chicago's leading papers. The Locklear plane visited Aurora, Elgin, Wheaton, Gary, Joliet, Hammond, East Chicago, South Chicago, Chicago Heights, Blue Island, distributing dodgers and free passes to local theatres showing "The Great Air Robbery."

Last but not least was the novel lobby display provided by John Kane, Manager of the Band Box theatre. Outside of giving great prominence to the name Locklear the lobby was decorated with beautifully colored lobby photos covering almost every phase of "The Great Air Robbery." A miniature aeroplane propelled by a small electric motor was suspended from the end of the overhanging electric sign, and attracted a great deal of attention while spinning through the air.

All in all it has been a great week for Chicago.

This campaign was supervised by Harry Rice, Chicago's new director of publicity, formerly in charge of Universal's publicity and exploitation department.

Artistic Overture Number at the Rialto

DR. HUGO RIESENFELD is leading the orchestra and chorus at the Rialto theatre this week in person, since it is one of the most ambitious efforts that has been attempted on Broadway in a long time. It is "The Hymn to the Sun," the prologue to Mascagni's "Iris."

With only the center dome in deep blue and the remainder of the house in darkness, there are a few bars of the overture and then the members of the male and female choruses of the Rialto-Rivoli theatres file in at the right of the stage, unseen by all but the closest observers. The orchestra continues with the overture until almost half through. Then the blue lights come up in the proscenium dome and lighter through the house, the side curtains at the sides of the stage parting, revealing an expanse of fields, with the dim outlines of the sun in the background and a huge iris blossom in the immediate foreground. The lights then gradually fade into a red and in a few seconds the chorus begins its peal in greeting to the first flush of dawn. These peals of praise continue, with the lights turning to gold at the end, signifying that the sun has burst forth in all its glory.

At the conclusion of the overture the chorus remains at its post until the lights are dimmed for the Rialto Magazine.

Hyman Buys Large News paper Space

Extensive exploitation for pictures is at last invading the metropolis or at least as approached as closely as Brooklyn. Last week managing director Edward L. Hyman of the Strand theatre, Brooklyn, played "The River's End" and decided that no stone would be left unturned to prevent this feature from going over the top, consequently a special advertising campaign was mapped out. The week before the appearance of the feature at the Strand a quarter of a page of advertising was run in the New York Journal and American for four consecutive days. This also was in conjunction with a wide bookstore tie up which proved to be one of the features at Wanamaker's department store, one of the largest in New York. Nearly every bookstore in Brooklyn gave aid, resulting in windows all over the city boosting the feature appearing at the Strand. Street cars and subways carried billboards. The big electric sign on the side of the theatre flashed the news to hundreds and thousands of people returning from Manhattan. Special announcements were flashed on the screen and in the house program.

And the result? Well, Managing Director Hyman claims that it was the best week in the history of the house.

East and West Coast Advertising For "Rivers End"

This is the ancient water wagon which caused such a furore in the exploitation of "Water, Water, Everywhere," at the Rialto theatre, San Francisco

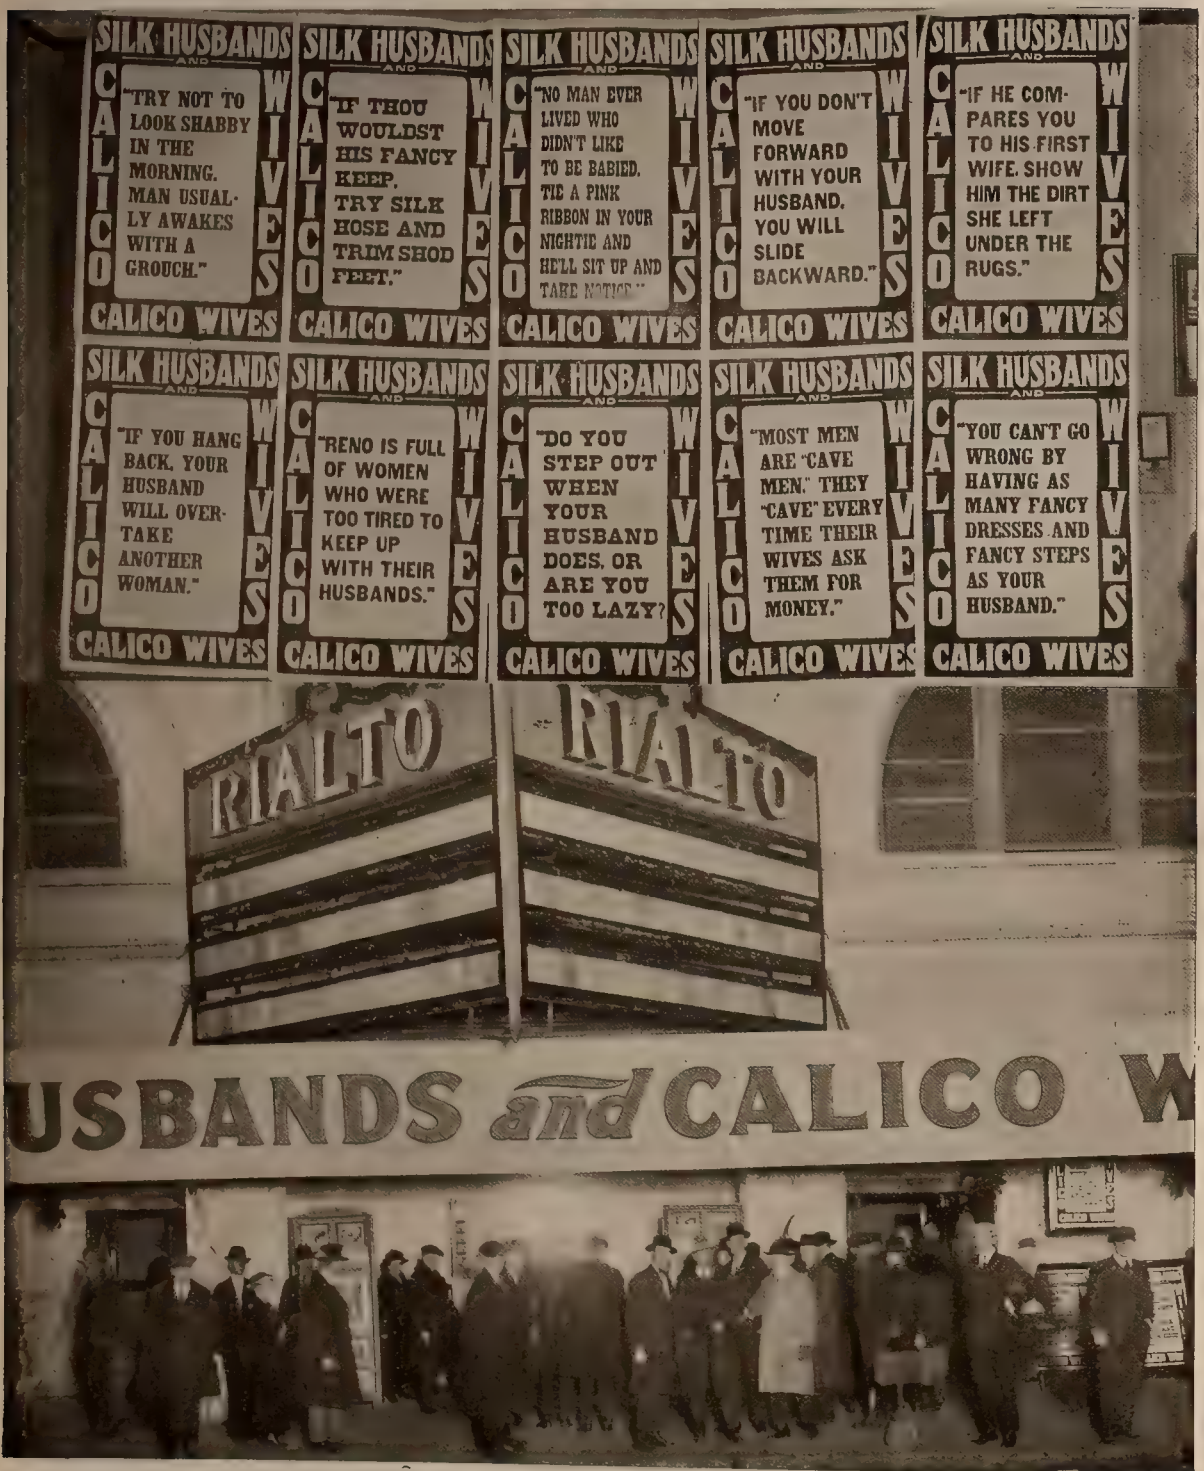
Antiquated Water Wagon Exploitation Aid.

"Jubilo" did much to "make" Will Rogers in San Francisco and the San Francisco territory, so the exploitation of "Water, Water, Everywhere" wasn't the problem that it might have been. San Francisco had not forgotten Rogers since his personal appearance at the California theatre with the showing of "Jubilo" and when the newspapers announced his next appearance at the Rialto half the exploitation had been accomplished.

The picture opened on Sunday. On the preceding day an ancient water wagon paraded the streets of the city, including historic old Market Street, with its daily hundreds of thousands of people. The wagon as shown by the accompanying cut was driven by a "type" dressed in cowboy garb and drawn by a dilapidated team.

The water wagon stunt was a knockout. It was inexpensive, the wagon being procured from the Municipal Board of Public Works, and the team and driver hired. Thousands of persons saw it daily and all got a laugh out of it—and remembered Will Rogers. On several occasions the police stopped the driver and ordered him off the main streets, and threatened arrest, until crowds gathered about in gaping wonder. Whereupon the wise driver flashed a permit and drove serenely on his way.

A nifty prologue—also inexpensive but very effective—was staged by Manager Ed. A. Smith, of the Rialto. Three singers were attired in cowboy garb for "atmosphere." A camp fire in a prairie set, with a rolling hill backdrop, and the trio about the fire, was revealed with the rise of the curtain. They opened with "Sahara" sung to an ominous sounding orchestral accompaniment to emphasize the dreariness of the "dry" theme. After a second number the trio sang "Jubilo," the screen coming down on the first chorus and the singers continuing until the first scenes of the pictures were flashed on. Each of the prologues got a tremendous hand and proved a popular feature of the show.



Allen Should Have Been a Lawyer.

Manager Sim Allen of Wilmer and Vincent's Colonial Theatre, Utica, N. Y., has a peculiar proposition on his hands inasmuch as he is forced to play a Sunday "movie concert" with a picture that he holds over and gives in combination with Keith vaudeville the next three days of the week. Furthermore, despite a good sized lobby, fire regulations forbid him standing his frames at angles while performances are going on. They have to be placed flat to the walls.

"Back to God's Country," which Mr. Allen was playing at the Colonial last week, lends itself to much lobby exploitation, but the numerous city ordinances defining violations were a stumbling block. However, Mr. Allen is an old road man and one for whom handicaps only act as an incentive. Not being able to stand anything in the lobby, he kept the law by hanging business-getting cut-outs from wires stretched close to the ceiling. These cut-outs were animal heads, cut to shape and painted on both sides in black and red. Mixed with them were cards, also suspended, giving the name of the production in bold black letters. A few read "Wapi the Walrus," the name of the James Oliver Curwood story from which "Back to God's Country" was adapted.

This display was made and suspended several days prior to opening and created much interest. Mr. Allen also featured animals in his preliminary newspaper advertising, not forgetting, however, to mention Nell Shipman and James Oliver Curwood. Another bet that might have been overlooked by a less wise showman was to utilize a stage door curtain that was in use by a vaudeville act by mounting a "Back to God's Country" three-sheet on the drop. Mr. Allen also used a generous number of heralds and slides, and tied up with the principal book store in Utica for a display of stills and Curwood stories, each still containing the information that "Back to God's Country" was scheduled at the Colonial.

Exploitation Is Harmful Only When Misleading

Paull of Springfield Tells When and When Not to Advertise Heavily

EXPLOITATION in terms of constructive theatre-building efforts will forever be the dominant factor in the motion picture industry, according to E. C. Paull, manager of the Fairbanks Theatre, Springfield, Ohio. Mr. Paull speaks from an exhibitor's standpoint taking into full consideration all elements that make for box office favor and good will on the part of the theatre-going public. And, as he states, he has found that the entire problem of successfully operating a motion picture theatre is making a picture speak for itself through truthful exploitation.

Is it a fact that exploitation can only be harmful when it is misleading? Is it true that the theatregoer judges entertainment on a comparative basis and this factor must be considered when promotion campaigns are outlined? Is it logical that a theatre that intends to maintain a perfect spirit of public confidence must be operated as a catering establishment instead of on the "go-to-hell-if-you-don't-like-it" basis?

These are some of the facts which Mr. Paull brings out in his discourse on successful theatre management and in his crowning tribute to sensible, inexpensive and feasible exploitation.

Select your favorite restaurant, suggests Mr. Paull. Then try to analyze just why it is your favorite. You'll find the food of quality, the service prompt and courteous, an atmosphere of welcome and cleanliness about the place and that all-powerful utility, respect for the patron.

And in this connection in particular, Mr. Paull points out, there is a great tendency for exhibitors to rely on $10-per-week ushers to make friends of a perfectly agreeable public. But does it work out thus? How many times has the average exhibitor walked down the front aisles of his house and watched the method in which his customers are seated? Has an exhibitor ever heard an attendant make a discourteous remark to a patron? If not, the cause is not due to lack of the evil.

With his acute insight into the ins-and-outs of theatre management, Mr. Paull points out the fact that the balcony is often a place to find theatre-destructive conditions. Simply because a person pays fifteen cents less for his seat is not a reason why he should not get the same courtesy that the man in the orchestra receives. The great majority of exhibitors are likely to feel that the best ushers should work downstairs—the beginners and inferior type in the gallery.

E. C. Paull, manager of the Fairbanks theatre, Springfield, O.

"It's usually the balcony crowd that shifts from theatre to theatre, holding but little good will toward any theatre in particular. Why not build this set of theatregoers into assets? Let the balcony patrons bring their friends. Any time your balcony is filled the prospective ticket buyer will find it natural to buy a down-stairs seat. It is safe to say that if a persistent effort by exhibitors were made to cater and pay strict attention to the brand of courtesy offered balcony patrons, the number of regular attenders of any given theatre would increase by anywhere from fifteen to twenty-five per cent. Because I maintain that the balcony patron is the man who can be made into a regular customer by the right kind of treatment. But he will always be a wanderer so far as regular attendance of any one theatre is concerned if he is not accorded the same grade of courtesy and attention that characterizes the regular patron."

Exploitation, Mr. Paull maintains, is merely the matter of bringing to the theatregoer the vital human interest facts that in themselves create a justified amount of curiosity and attention. That it is just as wrong to mislead the public by innuendo as by point-blank lies is another of Mr. Paull's contentions. "You've heard the story of the boy who yelled 'Wolf!'" said he. "It's the same way with exploitation. The public might come once to the theatre when the fake cry was given; but it's a more difficult matter bringing them to your house a second time, regardless of whether your attraction is the best thing you've shown during the season."

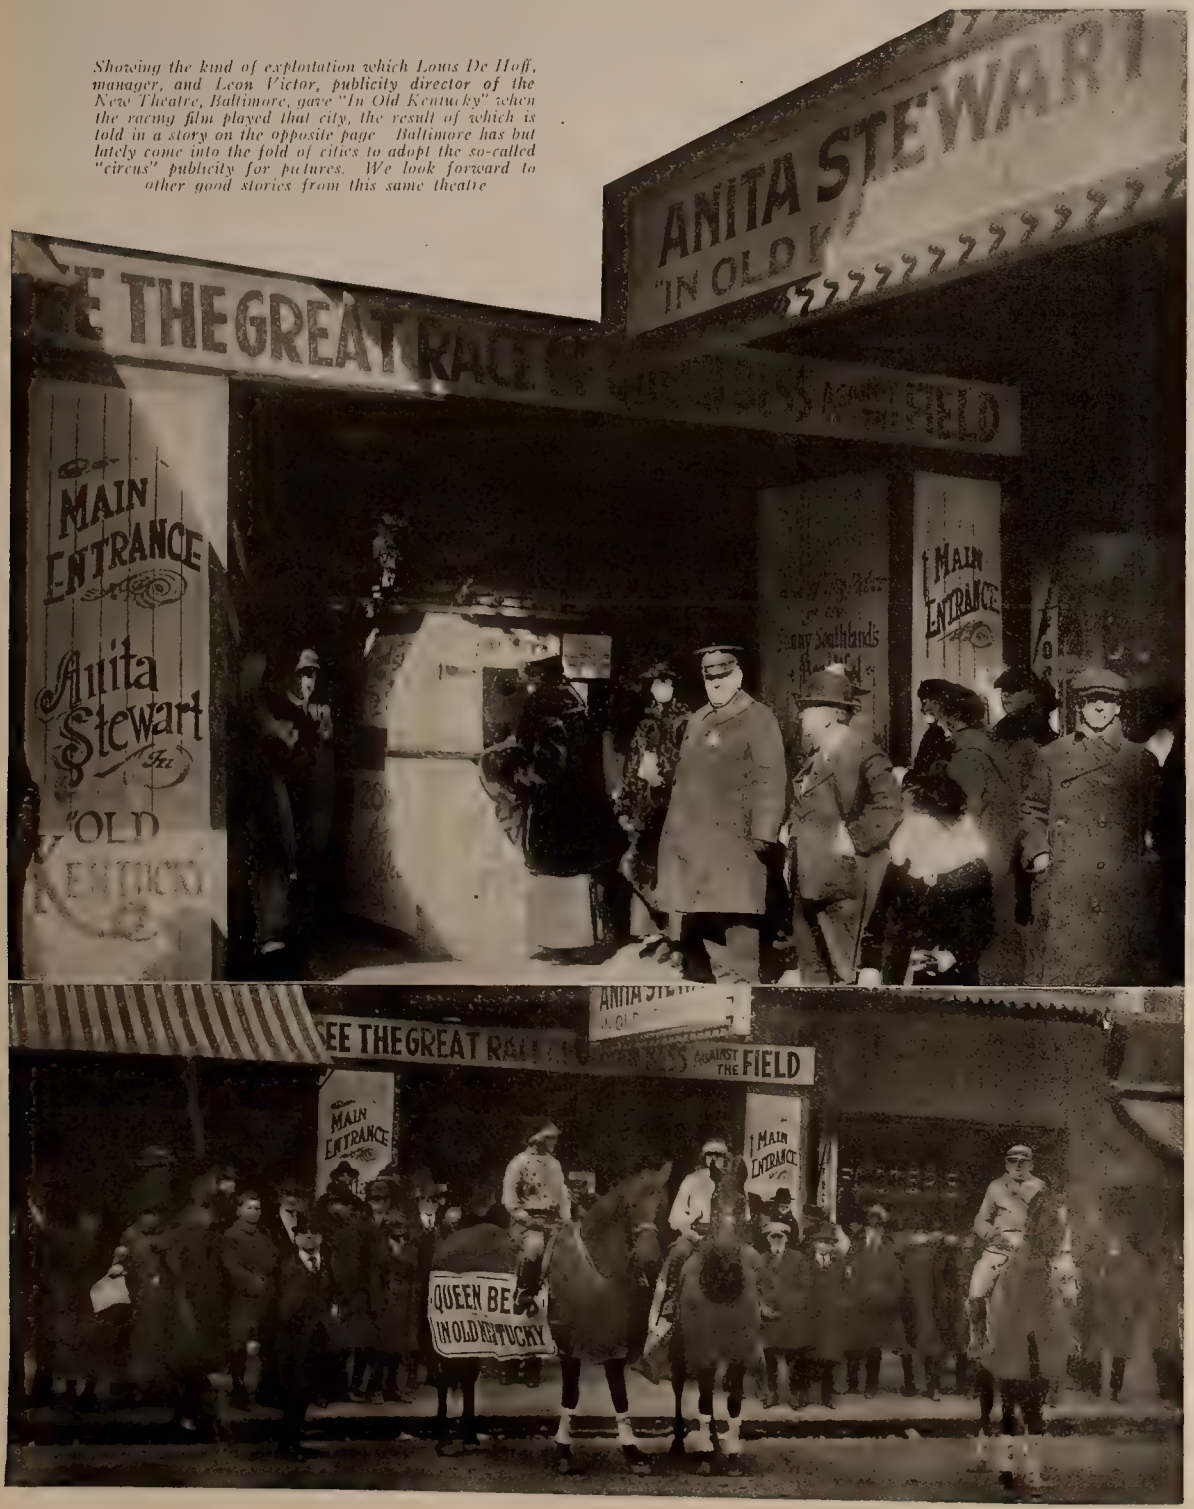
"When we get a big picture we are not afraid to exploit it," said Mr. Paull. When we have a picture of only moderate merit we hold down on our praise, refusing to commit ourselves and to this day not a patron has ever appeared before me with the statement that what we represented in our advertising wasn't carried out by what he saw on the screen.

We try to gauge our public tastes keeping in mind that what pleased a year ago does not necessarily please today. We book our pictures with a "from Missouri" attitude. We sell them to our public in the same way. When we give a big picture a big send off in exploitation our people believe it is a big picture and they all come out to see it. We are satisfied to make a reasonable profit on a medium grade feature and wait for the "clean-up" when we have something big. That's all there is to our success as exhibitors."

Lobby Display Idea for "Desert Gold"

H. H. Bosely, manager of the Alhambra theatre of Los Angeles, aroused interest for his "Desert Gold" showing by an exploitation campaign which even in the Film Metropolis was exceptional.

Mr. Bosley's advertising for "Desert Gold" began a week before the picture opened with the newspapers and in a lobby exhibition for ten days before the first performance, half of the right side of the spacious lobby being given to an immense water-color painting representing the big scene where Nell Belding rushes into the lair of the bandit Rojas and rescues Captain Thorpe from death by the cholla cactus torture.



In the centre of the lobby close to the street Mr. Bosley had installed a phonograph, the bottom of which was decorated to represent a box of gold. A record of "Desert Gold," was played continuously. Back of the phonograph were life-size portraits of Eileen Percy, E. K. Lincoln and Margery Wilson.

A big side-wall display was another unique feature of the Alhambra campaign.

Mr. Bosely also got everything possible out of the Grosset and Dunlap link-up on the production, four of the biggest bookshops in Los Angeles co-operating with the Alhambra management as many effective window displays resulting. Mr. Bosley also obtained some valuable co-operation from local songshops, which pushed the song number, "Desert Gold," to the limit throughout the presentation at the Alhambra.

Display By New Theatre, Baltimore For "Kentucky"

Showing the kind of exploitation which Louis De Hoff, manager, and Leon Victor, publicity director of the New Theatre, Baltimore, gave "In Old Kentucky" when the racing film played that city, the result of which is told in a story on the opposite page. Baltimore has but lately come into the fold of cities to adopt the so-called "circus" publicity for pictures. We look forward to other good stories from this same theatre

Boys Get Impatient but the New Gets the Publicity

POLICE reserves, the riot call and between 200 and 300 college boys who rushed pell-mell into the playhouse without tickets helped make the first showing of "In Old Kentucky" at the New Theatre, Baltimore, on February 23, a record-breaking one. More than 8,000 persons viewed the film during the first day's performance and the theatre has been playing to capacity houses since that time. It is estimated that the week's audiences totalled 45,000 persons.

Attention of Baltimoreans had been attracted for a week ahead of time to the showing of the film, owing to the press-agenting of Leon Victor, as well as by the fact that Mahlon Hamilton, a Baltimorean, is playing opposite Anita Stewart in the leading role. As a result the theatre was crowded at the first performance and not only was the lobby filled but a large line of persons was waiting before the ticket windows to purchase admission, by the time that a group of nearly 300 college boys put in their appearance.

The students started to wait in line for their turn to purchase tickets, but after a while they grew impatient and decided to "rush" the theatre. A near panic ensued, during which the ticket office was shoved to one side, women and children were elbowed out of the way and a number of persons narrowly escaped being hurt.

Despite the fact that he is suffering from a broken arm which he sustained when he slipped on the ice several weeks ago, Manager Louis A. DeHoff personally led a detachment of his assistants in an effort to check the rush of the students. He was unable to do so, however, and they managed to fight their way into the theatre, where they were only dislodged by squads of policemen from two nearby station houses where the riot call had been sounded.

This unintentional bit of exploitation attracted more attention to the showing of the film, perhaps, than Mr. Victor's press-agentry. Several excellent exploitation "stunts" however have been staged by him with the cooperation of Mr. DeHoff.

One of these was the decorating of the lobby and interior of the theatre with scenery redolent of the race-track. Lined along the sides are picket-fences such as surround the paddocks while posted at intervals are signs directing persons "To the Main Entrance." Near the entrance to the theatre proper is posted an "odds board," bearing the names of the horses named in the film.

In addition to this a pickaninny band and four jockeys, two of whom are "Madges," have been riding the streets of the city, attracting attention to the photoplay. Three of the Five-and-Ten Cent Stores are featuring the sale of Anita Stewart's song "In Old Kentucky" with large window displays, while most of the soda fountains in the down-town section of the city are selling "Anita Stewart Mint Juleps."

The photoplay will remain at the theatre for another week. Leon Victor who organized the "pickaninny band" and procured the services of the two jockeys and the two "Madges" is an old trouper. He was publicity man for the first stage production of "In Old Kentucky" when it played 26 years ago and has been identified with the show ever since.

Capital Stages St. Patricks' Day Specialty

THE Capitol theatre, New York, along with most of the other houses on Broadway, is paying some attention to St. Patrick's Day week by presenting a musical concoction under the title of "A Bit of Blarney," same being what is described on the program as an "Irish Festival."

Solos are sung by the various principals of the Capitol stock company and the chorus is used to quite an extent. Most of the vocal selections are good old Irish melodies. Besides the voice compositions, various Irish dances are interpreted and a bag-pipe duet is interpolated. Perhaps the best received of the several numbers is Irish dancing, especially the Irish reel.

The stage setting is by John Wenger and the direction by William G. Stewart. The Capitol chorus and cast are in Gaelic costumes, which lend color to the ensemble. Among the songs used are "The Low Back Car," "Mother Machree," and "Tho' Dark Be Our Sorrows."

"Clips" from News for Own Newspaper

Andrew Karzas, director of the Woodlawn theatre, who is making a reputation for himself in the Chicago territory, as a real showman, has, for the past six months, been getting out a monthly newspaper in the interest of his theatre, which he distributes free to ten thousand people living in the district.

It is an attractive eight-page publication in newspaper form, full of items in regard to stars and pictures, which are sure to interest the fans and is proving one of the best patronage pullers he knows of, according to Director Karzas.

E. J. Ryan, the editor, culls much of the reading matter printed, from the Motion Picture News, and from press sheets gotten out by various producers, and by the use of these news sources is able to turn out a moving picture paper of real interest.

Merchants of the district in which the Woodlawn theatre is located have also found the publication with its 10,000 circulation a valuable advertising medium and are making liberal use of full, half and quarter page ads, so that the space they buy in the publication practically pays for the cost of printing and distributing the Woodlawn theatre "News and Views."

Pomeroy Ties In With Auto Show

The outstanding stunt of "Automobile Week" in Ottawa, Ontario, which was observed during the first week in March, consisted simply of the showing of an automobile in the lobby of the Strand theatre, one of the downtown houses. The presence of a new touring model in the theatre entrance created a sensation and also obtained wide publicity for the theatre manager, the automobile dealer whose car was shown, and others.

A big crowd jammed the street on the Monday morning when the car was being driven into the theatre lobby and from that moment until the end of the week the people surged around the entrance. Every imaginable question was asked, many people believing that the car had skidded into the theatre lobby from the street and that an accident had occurred. The stunt was credited with being the best outdoor feature of the trade week and the theatre also did a big business. The idea was very simple, yet the apparent and immediate results were immense.

When so many people crowded around the box office to inquire why the automobile happened to be there and to ask if it was a real automobile, Harry Pomeroy of the Strand prepared a card bearing the wording, "See the automobile in 'The Web of Chance,' starring Peggy Hyland," this being the special automobile feature which he had booked for "Automobile Week." He also attached a sign "Automobile Week," which was one of the standardized window posters which had been issued by the Automotive Trade Association of Ottawa. A little later came a request for permission to sell tickets at the theatre for the bazaar of the St. Patrick's Church Ladies' Guild for which a Chevrolet car, similar to the one shown, was offered as a prize. An announcement to this effect was also attached to the car.

The results from this one little stunt, which was intended to lend atmosphere to the "Automobile Week" campaign, proved to be far-reaching. The people flocked into the theatre to see the automobile feature; both the theatre and Mr. J. G. McGuire, the automobile dealer, obtained great publicity including numerous "mentions" in the local newspaper; the automobile dealer also secured a number of orders for new cars and the ladies of the church guild sold several hundred dollars worth of bazaar tickets.

Manager Pomeroy is now figuring out similar stunts of a simple nature to catch the crowd on future occasions.

Another good stunt was also seen at the Centre theatre, a few doors away, where the special attraction was an Arbuckle Comedy, "The Garage," which was booked by Manager Stapleton because of its appropriateness for "Automobile Week," This comedy also drew well as a result of time and special advertising and publicity.

Frisco Youngsters Pleased With "Huck Finn"

The appeal of "Huckleberry Finn" to Young America is fully demonstrated by these lines of San Francisco youngsters who are waiting their turn at the box office of the Imperial theatre

Two Live Bulls Head the Procession

Manager George Gildersleeve, of the Kingston Opera House, Kingston, N. Y., used many distinctive stunts to herald Charlie Chaplin's "A Burlesque on Carmen" and the "Carmen Beauties Revue."

In addition to the advertising usually done for opera house attractions? On the opening date of the show, Manager Gildersleeve pulled two stunts which attracted much attention. In charge of keepers dressed as Charlie Chaplin in his Carmen costume, two live bulls were lead through the town carrying banners concerning the show. Following the afternoon performance, motion pictures were taken of the entire Carmen Beauties Company in front of the Kingston Opera House. The posing of the Carmen Beauties Chorus in their costumes attracted wide-spread attention. The motion pictures were taken by George Bunny, son of the late famous comedian, John Bunny, and considerable mention of this fact was made in all of the advertising, both in newspapers and lobby.

Limerick Contest Gets Great Attention.

J. C. Hauber, owner-manager of the Hauber theatre, Pine Bluff, Ark., has just put over a contest that has been highly effective in popularizing "The Adventures of Ruth."

He inserted an advertisement announcing a Limerick contest for prizes consisting of a season pass to the Hauber on each of the 15 nights it presented "The Adventures of Ruth" to the authors of the ten best limericks having Ruth Roland as their subject. The editor of the paper readily agreed to publish the limericks selected by the judge, a prominent woman.

For ten days or more limericks poured into the Ruth Roland Contest department of The Commercial. The pick of the day's yield was published, and thus for ten days before the picture opened the theatre was accorded a prominent place in the columns of the paper. And on the strength of an advertisement a few inches in size Mr. Hauber realized columns of publicity of the most effective sort. He states that he has played to capacity business with each episode of the serial shown thus far.

Kress Features "Potato Matinee."

Harry Kress has a motto: "Unless a man gives, he can not hope to receive."

So when the Memorial Hospital at Piqua, Ohio, where Mr. Kress' May's Opera House does the entertaining, sent forth an appeal for potatoes the exhibitor got busy, very busy. Of course, if the hospital needed potatoes, Kress had to get them.

He advertised a "potato matinee" in connection with his showing of "True Heart Susie."

"Anyone bringing a potato for the Memorial Hospital may present the potato as his admission ticket," advertised Mr. Kress.

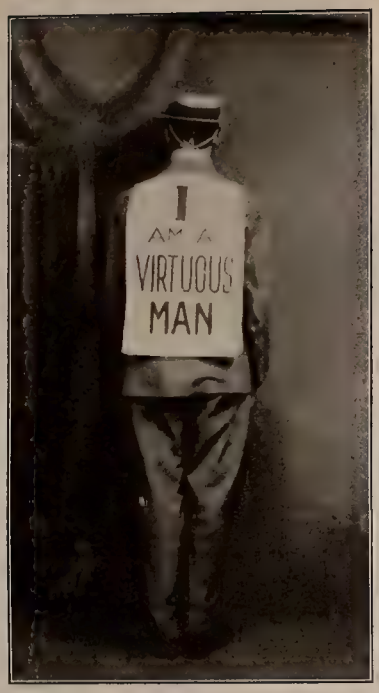
When the spud dust cleared away, a row of bushel baskets full of potatoes remained. The grateful hospital authorities thanked Mr. Kress; the newspapers gave him a lot of space and business boomed on. Children, for the most part, brought the potatoes just as Kress had hoped. Some came with a bag full, others brought only one.

"Checkers" lobby display used by the Broadway theatre, Salt Lake City, Utah, when the racing film played this theatre to a big full week's business recently

"It's an Ill Wind That Blows Nobody Good"

ASHTABULA, Ohio, was in the snow-bound zone last week. In fact, you couldn't have gotten in or out of Ashtabula last week for love or money Trains couldn't get in. Street cars couldn't run. Snow everywhere. The streets were a succession of snow mounds. Good to look at, but pretty discouraging for a fellow whose business depends upon luring folks away from their cozy firesides.

That's the way Ward Johnson, manager of the Majestic theatre, felt about it. He had booked "Pinto," the Goldwyn picture with Mabel Normand, for the week of February 16th, and he was discouraged for he saw failure with a big "F" staring him in the face.



And then, along came C. C. Deardorff, Goldwyn's inventive publicity man. "What's the trouble?" Deardorff asked Johnson. "Trouble, why, how do you expect us to cover running expenses with snow piled up like that?" (pointing all along the main street), Johnson answered.

"Snow piled up in banks? Great! That's just what we want. Come along with me, and help me get as many laths as we can lay our hands on. We'll billboard this town with "Pinto" posters as it has never before been billboarded, and I'll bet a hat that we fill the Majestic theatre all week."

Slightly encouraged, but still somewhat skeptical, Johnson followed instructions. He got the laths. The posters he had. Then they proceeded to stick these laths in each snow mound along every down town street in Ashtabula, building them up like tents and facing them with a full sized window card announcing "Pinto" at the Majestic theatre the week of Feb. 16th. All the streets looked like an army camp. One tent just like the other, and endless rows of them. This method of covering all available space was very effective in the public square. Here the post office is located. And all around the post office is open ground. So a complete circle of the post office was made with "Pinto" posters. Everybody in the town saw it, because everybody went to the post office, even if they didn't go any place else. Deardorff says he has driven laths into the mud, upon occasion, and attached posters to them, but this was the first time he had ever utilized snow banks for a background.

Manager Johnson soon grew warm over the exploitation of "Pinto" and decided to do something on his own book. So he engaged a couple of girls to call people on the telephone. These girls went right through the telephone book and after getting their party would say, "Did You Know that Mabel Normand is Appearing in "Pinto" at the Majestic Theatre this week?" and then ring off immediately. This stirred up a lot of talk among the inhabitants. And what's more it stirred them from their lethargy, and many of 'em put on their arctics and bundled up in their fur coats and went down to the Majestic, who would otherwise have remained peacefully at home.

The Majestic lobby was also called into requisition for the campaign, and looked very festive with a huge Mabel Normand cut-out, throwing a real lasso all the way across the lobby to an equal sized cut-out of Cullen Landis. On pretty days this display was placed in front of the theatre, but when the weather was too severe it was removed to the protection of the lobby.

This straw hat and the sign appearing on the streets of Buffalo made some sensation and was productive of good results for "Virtuous Men"

Season's First Straw Hat Attracts Attention

It is not often that one sees a man clad in a light spring suit, with his crown adorned with a straw hat, walking on the streets of Buffalo in February, especially this February when North Pole temperatures have been the rule in the Queen City of the Lakes. But that is what countless Buffalonians saw when Manager Al Sherry of the Star theatre, Buffalo, engaged a man to adorn himself as illustrated in the "toneau" view herewith and parade the down town streets with the sign "I am a Virtuous Man," covering his back. The backview hammers home this fact, but the necktie he wore, absolutely convinced passers-by. The stunt was used several days to advertise "A Virtuous Man," which was shown on the Star screen and attracted no end of attention, in fact few persons passed the "virtuous" man without turning around to see what it was all about and the big white sign sent home the message.

Gains Cooperation of Finest Stores

T. L. KEARSE, who operates a string of motion picture theatres in Charleston, W. Va., believes in doing things just a little better than the other fellow. This motto of his stood him in good stead when he came to exploiting his one week's engagement (a long, long, long run in Charleston) of Cecil B. DeMille's "Male and Female" at the Strand theatre.

In the first place, Mr. Kearse decided that his newspaper advertising should give a tone of "class" to his engagement, befitting the sumptuous "Male and Female." Through the cooperation of the exploitation department of the Cincinnati Exchange of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, Mr. Kearse was able to duplicate the very effective advertising used for the Strand theatre of Cincinnati when "Male and Female" ran several weeks at that theatre. The names of the theatres being the same, it was easy to adapt the original, special drawings to the Charleston theatre. Mr. Kearse decided to "plunge" on his advertising and used in all space totaling some three or four full pages. In his publicity, Mr. Kearse continued the atmosphere of "class." The Gazette ran the series of illustrated stories "A Day with Gloria Swanson," showing her various gowns, as a woman's page feature. In the Mail proved very effective in connection with a "missing word" contest. Mr. Kearse used a novel way of displaying three-colored window cards. He had his cashiers make cut-outs of them so that they could be used as stands on counters inside as well as in windows. Mr. Kearse's window campaign was distinctive in itself. His wide personal acquaintance made it possible to secure about 15 of the best windows in town. Each of these window displays was made unusual. Mr. Kearse secured especially hand-painted cards in blue and gold, with scene stills mounted on them. The American Sign Company, in preparing these cards, hit a popular chord with exhibitors in the Cincinnati territory and a number are following Mr. Kearse's example. The beautiful cards find easy entry into windows of the finest stores, where lithographs would not be acceptable.

Uses "Inserts" for Novelty Herald

As an advertising medium which would be new and novel and help convince his patrons that the attraction was something unusual, William Brandt, manager of the Marcy theatre, Brooklyn, borrowed the plates from Famous Players-Lasky from which their trade journal colored inserts on "Male and Female" had been printed and after adding some appropriate reading matter at the bottom ran off thousands of heralds in colors which he mailed to prospective patrons miles from the Marcy.

Realart Acquires Big New Studies

THE Morosco studios in Hollywood, one of the largest and best equipped plants in the country, have been acquired by Realart Pictures Corporation. Realart will take immediate possession and in addition will take over the present operating staff of the studio.

The deal was concluded by Morris Kohn, president of Realart, after extended negotiations. The property involved represents a big value as the studios occupy a large tract of ground and are constructed in the most permanent fashion.

The studio buildings are located at 201 to 211 North Occidental Boulevard and occupy ground on both sides of the street. The buildings are all of modern steel or concrete construction and present an attractive and substantial appearance. The building housing the covered stage is a steel structure, covers a ground area of approximately 55 by 200 feet, and will accommodate three sets of ordinary size at one time. The dressing rooms are located in this building and are in two tiers overlooking the stage. An unusually well equipped laboratory, housed in a heavy concrete, fireproof building, is on the same side of the street. Near this building is a large carpenter shop, with equipment in machinery from which material for building the most elaborate and massive sets can be turned out.

Frank Garbutt, who constructed the studios about six years ago for the Bosworth Producing Company, will remain in charge under the Realart management. The principal members of Mr. Garbutt's staff will be: Will M. Ritchey, head of the production department; Mrs. Una Nixon Hopkins, art director; Jack Burrows, Western traffic manager; Frank Biggy, superintendent of laboratory; and Walter Hansen, stage manager.

Wanda Hawley, the new star recently announced by Realart, will make her first production there and is scheduled to begin work very shortly.

Cassidy Awarded Prize at San Diego Fair

Ira D. Gerald Cassidy, a member of the Poster Artists Association, the Salmagundi Club, and the National Arts Club, was awarded the grand prize and gold medal for the best exhibition of painting at the San Diego Fair. After a temporary absence in the far west, Mr. Cassidy has rejoined the Ritchey Litho. Corp.

Famous Pictures Distributes For Tyrad

The arrangement whereby Tyrad Pictures, Inc., assigns all of its products to the Famous Pictures Sales Company for distribution in the New York, Albany and Buffalo territory, went into effect last week. Matthias Radin, of Tyrad, will sell the balance of the country on the state right basis on all pictures bought by his company.

Chicago and the Mid-West

Covered By L. H. MASON

Manager Ben Beadell of the Selznick-Select office is receiving the thanks of all of Chicago's Exchange Managers for his able work in handling the shipping emergency, when the express clerks went out on strike Saturday, March 6.

Mr. Beadell was recently appointed Chairman of Transportation of the Chicago F. I. L. M. Club, and the sudden embargo on express shipments was enough to test the mettle of a railroad president. The fact that film could be shipped by parcel post was known by all, but to get the film through the congested post-office so it would not reach the theatre a week after the playing date—that was the real job—and to Mr. Beadell goes the credit of arranging matters, so that film shipments are going through without delay, regardless of the fact that most parcel post shipments are being held up several days.

Several managers are so well pleased with the way the parcel post shipping system arranged by Mr. Beadell is working out that they are seriously considering using this method of film distribution in the future instead of returning to the express companies after the strike is over.

A number of eastern buyers have become interested in the Commonwealth Pictures Corporation's new series of Billy Whiskers Comedies, and President Harry Spanuth is scheduled to leave for New York next week, to screen the first of the comedies for their benefit.

Mr. Spanuth reports that David P. Howells, who handled the Spanuth's Vod-A-Vil Movies for Europe and sold them in every foreign country, has arranged to take over the rights for the Billy Whiskers Comedies abroad.

In discussing his plans for the sale of the new comedy series, Mr. Spanuth declared that he would prefer to sell to the state rights men, as he is a strong advocate of upholding the independents and assuring them of a good supply of first-class pictures, including short comedies, such as he is producing. He says that he has done well with his Vod-A-Vil Movies on a state right basis and that he desires to do all in his power to maintain the stability of the independent markets and to co-operate with the state right exchanges to that end.

According to word received in Chicago from Al Martin, assistant director, Billy West lost no time in getting busy after arriving on the coast and already is at work on his first picture and promises that within the next few weeks the public will be able to see him in a new character, as he has thrown away his big shoes, baggy trousers, etc., which for so long have been his distinguishing mark. Ethelyn Gibson, his leading lady, is reported to have declined several offers to join other producing companies on the coast and will continue to work with Mr. West in pictures.

"On With the Dance," according to Jones, Linick & Schaefer, has proven the greatest success in the history of the Randolph theatre and they have decided to continue showing this picture for a third week. Another feature was added to the bill on March 14, the new Gump picture, entitled, "Andy's Mother-in-law."

Assistant Manager, W. W. Anderson, and the sales organization of Pathe Chicago exchange, were hosts at a hale and farewell banquet given at the Hotel La Salle, Tuesday, in honor of Manager E. A. Eschman who left for New York this week to assume his new position as Feature Sales Manager and W. A. Ashman, formerly Milwaukee Manager for Pathe, who took charge of the Chicago office as successor to Mr. Eschman, the day the banquet occurred. R. O. Proctor, of The Big Four, was toastmaster, and T. B. Rogers, director of sales of the J. Stewart Blackton Productions, was a speaker at the dinner. Mr. Eschman was presented with a handsome traveling bag as a token of good will, by the men whom he has led to success in Chicago territory and Mr Ashman was the recipient of a handsome bouquet.

The first of the Frolic Comedies, starring James (Fatty) Williams, who is heralded as a second Arbuckle, has been completed at the studios of the Hackley Film Company, Earl Park, Indiana, and this concern soon will be ready to release one each week. According to an announcement by President Kenneth Hackley the entire series will be put on the world rights market.

Marigold Attractions, Inc., recently organized by Harry Spanuth, to purchase the rights to pictures for Illinois and Indiana, has already secured the rights for "Alma Where Do You Live?" The first Chicago showing of this picture was at the Band Box theatre in the loop, starting March 14.

Tarkington Baker, who is manager of Universal City, and who is reported to have resigned his position, was in Chicago for a day last week on his way from the Pacific Coast to New York.

Manager Perlmutter of the Oakley theatre, who is a partner of Salo Auerbach, was held up by a pair of armed thugs last week as he was on his way home from the theatre, and robbed of $500 cash and jewelry valued at $1500.00. He has been taking a long chance wearing those sparklers after dark in Chicago. Perlmutter and Auerbach also operate the New Strand theatre.

W. E. Calloway, formerly connected with Greater Stars and Paramount, has joined the Robertson Cole sales force and will travel Illinois territory

Manager Max Levy of Robertson Cole, Chicago office, and District Superintendent O. R. Hansen, left for New York Sunday to attend the Robertson-Cole convention in that city.

Harry Reichenbach is coming to Chicago to collaborate with Harry Weiss in exploiting "The Virgin of Stamboul," which will be released in the Windy City early in April. A whirlwind publicity campaign is assured when these two Harrys both are behind it and Chicago pressmen are looking for something big. Manager I. L. Leserman, of the Universal Chicago office, visited Detroit last week to confer with E. H. Goldstein, sales manager on exploitation and sales plans for the big production

A. Q. Smith, who was known as the "society photographer of the A. E. F.," has joined the Rothacker Camera force and after becoming acquainted with Rothacker methods, will be detailed to the New York territory. While overseas Mr. Smith covered a number of Gen Pershing's tours and when European nobility and American notables visited the front, Smith frequently was assigned to go along and film the excursion. W. B. Klingensmith, Rothacker cameraman, has gone to Buffalo to handle the technical production on a big industrial picture which will be supervised by George S. Anderson, manager of the Buffalo branch W. C Aldous, another camera expert, is making an industrial subject in Louisiana, Texas and Mississippi under the supervision of Sumter Calvert, of the service department.

Over a year ago, John J. Jones had his initiation into the film business, handling the State of Illinois for a picture called, "The Unpardonable Sin." Sometime later he became assistant booking manager for Marcus Loew's Western Booking Agency, acquainting himself with vaudeville conditions Two months ago, he was appointed Manager at the Lyric theatre and now the direction of all vaudeville bookings of the Jones, Linick & Schaefer string of theatres has been placed entirely in his hands.

Of course J. J. J. is the son of Aaron J. Jones, President of J. L. & S. and this may account for opportunities for advancement which are denied the average man but let it be said that J. J. J. has served his apprenticeship and has absorbed the theatrical ideas of his illustrious father to such an extent that he begins his career with a much better understanding of show business than the average fellow.

His new position will give him absolute direction and control of the vaudeville shows booked into the Rialto and McVickers theatres. J. J. J. is beginning young, not yet having arrived at the age of nineteen, but we hold out great hopes for his future.

Tiry H. Miller, veteran Rothacker cameraman, has been appointed supervisor of the Department of photography. In other words, he's head cameraman. When Mr. Miller joined Watterson R. Rothacker four years ago, he came equipped with a notable photographic experience, particularly in still photography. Once he was a field expert for the Eastman Kodak Co

Locklear Productions has purchased Randall Parishes' widely read novel, "The Air Pilot," and are preparing to picturize this thrilling story with the famous warrior of the air as hero

H. A. Sherman was in Chicago for a few days last week after a trip from the coast which took him through Kansas City, Minneapolis and other centers. Mr. Sherman expects to be in New York this week and will return to Chicago in a few days when he may have an announcement to make which will be of great interest to the entire moving picture industry.

F J Ireland, vice president and supervising director of the newly formed Reelcraft Picture Corporation, has been appointed Chairman of the film division of Mayor Thompson's million dollar a year, "Boost Chicago" organization According to the general outline of the campaign which is intended to make Chicago the best known city in the world, moving pictures are to play a big part and will be used in all parts of the civilized world to spread the fame of the city by the lake

Max Roth, general manager for Sol Lesser, reached Chicago last week after a tour of western picture centers, during which he perfected the details for the distribution of the Special Pictures Corporation's output. Brockell & Elliot will handle the distribution in Chicago; the True Film Company at Dallas, Texas; the Supreme Pictures, Incorporated, F. J. Reinbusch's new company, at Indianapolis; Grand Central Film Company at St. Louis and the Saenger Amusement Company at New Orleans. After a conference with Irving Lesser, who will arrange for distribution east of Chicago, Mr Roth wil return to the coast which is now the headquarters of Sol Lesser. The first Special Pictures Corporation releases wil be made about April 1st.

Exhibitors, reviewers and others of the film business in Chicago were guests of Joe Friedman of the Celebrated Players exchange, at a banquet at the Hotel La Salle, the occasion being the presentation of four episodes of "The Lost City"

Billy Winters, well known around Chicago as one of the bookers for Universal, has been engaged for pictures by the First National and has taken his departure for Los Angeles where he is expected to appear in an early production.

E. C. Davies, of the Special Pictures Corporation, is in receipt of a wire from H. A. Roberts, sales manager, in which Mr. Roberts enthuses over the way inquiries are pouring in by mail and telegraph. He states that hundreds of letters are being received daily by the home office in Los Angeles regarding "Comedyart" productions and predicts a phenomenal success for these pictures which are now being shipped for early March releases. Special Pictures Corporation representatives now are located in the First National Exhibitors Circuit Exchanges and the distribution of Special Pictures will be made through this channel.

Legal Suit to Decide Film Ownership

The Cincinnati Motion Picture Company, which was employed to take some motion pictures of a church at Canton, Ohio, has been victorious in the legal battle which arose out of the matter. Legal proceedings were instituted to determine the ownership of the film, and the court decided last week in favor of the motion picture company.

CINCINNATI

Nate Lefkowitz, local Standard manager, has sent out invitations to exhibitors throughout the territory, inviting them to attend a public screening of the first episode of "The Lost City," at the Boulevard theatre on Friday, March 19th.

A new house, to be known as "The Shakespeare," will be built on State avenue, near Eighth, by the Shakespeare Amusement company, which was organized this week. The company has purchased a lot 42 by 100 feet. The company was organized by persons formerly interested in the Waldorf Amusement company, which ran the National theatre at Eighth and Depot streets.

In the copyright infringement suit of M. Witmark and Sons, New York, music publishers, vs. The Lubin Amusement company, the defendant filed its answer in United States District Court, denying a certain popular song was played in its theatre in violation of any rights of the plaintiff. Court is asked to dismiss the suit.

Unanimous support of the Community Chest campaign, which is to be held in Cincinnati during the week of April 5, to finance the 70 social service agencies in the city, was offered by the Greater Cincinnati Motion Picture Exhibitors' company, following a meeting of the board of directors.

A plan to present pictures suitable for children at "movie matinees" will be inaugurated in Cincinnati in the near future as a result of the activities of the Community Service Committee. An initial step will be the presentation of films at the Orpheum theatre on Saturday morning from 10:30 to 12:30, and if the experiment is successful, other theatres will be added.

Charles Adams, Kentucky representative of the Standard Film Service Company, reports that Col. Fred Levy and Lee Goldberg, of Louisville, who are connected with the First National Exhibitors Association of Kentucky, have purchased ten houses in that state. They include the four houses of the Arcade Amusement company, of Paducah, and two houses which this company has under construction; two houses in Maysfield, and one in Princeton. In addition, they expect to secure control of a number of other houses in the near future.

Jack Conant, Select manager, Bobby Burns, assistant manager, James Carrier, exploitation manager, and R. Flager, Republic manager, will attend the Selznick convention to be held in New York, April 5th.

I. Libson, owner of the Walnut, Strand, and Family theatres, announces that he has successfully negotiated a deal for the Southern Ohio Franchise of Associated Exhibitors, Inc., for the three houses.

The Wilson Film company has moved from its location in the Strand Theatre building to the fifth floor of the Pioneer and Broad street building. Mr. Wilson is now in the East, negotiating for a number of new subjects.

The Boulevard theatre will be opened on March 21st, a week later than was previously announced. In an advertisement in the papers, the management states that only first-run pictures, the very best the market affords, will be presented.

James Carrier, director of exploitation for Select, has contracted for the services of the Maysville Band during the summer months, to tour Ohio in the interests of Select pictures. This band is composed of boys and girls of wealthy parentage, none more than sixteen years of age.

INDIANAPOLIS

The Broadway of Indianapolis deviated from its regular vaudeville policy last week to show Jack Dempsey in "Daredevil Jack." Result: half-page advertisements in all of the Indianapolis newspapers before the last half of the week announcing that the house record had been shattered.

Mary Pickford and "Pollyanna" went over big at the Riviera in Anderson, Ind., as the result of the publicity gained from a special performance given for the children from the Madison County Orphans Home.

While the Riviera was opening its doors to the orphans the Starland in Anderson made a lot of friends for itself among the more fortunate youngsters when Managers Heller and Coffin threw open the doors and let several hundred high school students, celebrating a basketball victory in a district tournament, march in and take possession.

The W. C. T. U. of Seymour, Ind., held a meeting last week in which Sunday movies were denounced and resolutions adopted, advocating their discontinuance on the ground that they are a Sabbath desecration. Theatre managers are watching the situation closely, but nothing further of note has developed.

Indianapolis theatrical circles are sorrowing over the death of Clarence J. Miller, treasurer of English's opera house, who was found in a dying condition in his bed Thursday morning, Mar. 11. Heart trouble was responsible for Mr. Miller's demise.

New Trolley Fare Does Not Affect Theatres

Apparently there has been no perceptible injury to motion picture theatres in Albany, on account of the recent increase in street car fare. A seven-cent fare is now demanded by the local traction company and proprietors in some of the theatres were fearful that their audiences would become smaller because of the jump in fares.

Albany is peculiarly situated, and on account of its hills, street car service to some of the theatres is almost necessary. All houses, however, are reporting an excellent business.

Seek Only the Best Products

Associated Exhibitors Awaiting Favorable Opportunity

ASSOCIATED Exhibitors, Inc., announces that, with numerous important arrangements pending, no product for circulation by the organization as yet has been definitely and finally decided upon. The machinery of the association is working toward the acquisition of only the biggest and best photoplays it is possible to obtain; and, according to one of the officers, no product will be announced until there can be not even the slightest shadow of doubt in the mind of anyone as to the product's superlative attractiveness.

This is in line with the Associated Exhibitors' announced intention and firm plan, according to the statements of H. H. Wellenbrink, secretary of Associated Exhibitors, Inc.

It is known generally in film circles that all sorts of propositions have been put before the consideration of Associated Exhibitors. However, none of these possibilities as yet has materialized into concrete form. Many of them, it is said, may develop into most radical departures from antiquated motion picture precedents—precedents that in the past have proved weak in application but strong in habit.

In the words of Mr. Wellenbrink, the Associated Exhibitors are not working on motion picture precedent. Rather, he says, are they building up and going forward on established values of business experience as applied successfully in any line of endeavor. The secretary of Associated Exhibitors contends that chief of these business values, insofar as the motion picture industry is concerned, is the value of equitable dealing with the theatre owner.

"The issue of equitable dealing with the picture showman is paramount," said Mr. Wellenbrink, "and the very beginning of equitable dealing with the exhibitor is the acquisition for him of the best pictures. That is the first thing to worry about—for when an organization has big attractions to circulate it has a commodity for which an eager market is waiting. This obviously means that such a commodity will show a handsome profit for everyone concerned in its production, distribution and presentation.

"Highest class motion picture entertainment is one of the pillars of the foundation on which this organization is builded—for it must be on such a foundation that any stable motion picture enterprise is erected. And this enterprise is composed of builders—the exhibitors—whose very business existence demands that they build with granite-planned blocks rather than promise-colored mud.

"The Associated Exhiibtors realize just what they are up against when they say that only the biggest attractions will carry their trademark. They know that the scoffers say 'we've heard that stuff before.' They know it is not a simple matter to live up to a promise of only the best. But withal they are wise men, they are backed by the financial resources to carry the plan through, and whether their output consists of one or a hundred pictures a year the exhibitor can rest assured that Associated Exhibitors' pictures will be the best motion pictures obtainable anywhere."

Selznick Studios Active

IN a brief resume of motion picture activity made by Myron Selznick it is stated that the Selznick organization is probably one of the largest production forces in the country. Their producing activities, under which came also the National Pictures Theatres subjects, cover a wide area that links up the East with the West. Two studios are used in the East, one in the Bronx and the other at Fort Lee, N. J., and about an equal amount of space is utilized by the Selznick forces in California. At the present time a large proportion of the studio, technical and acting staff is on the West Coast, where the studios are under the management of Harry Rapf, Mr. Selznick's western lieutenant. The Eastern plants are also running to capacity.

Olive Thomas is now working on "The Flapper," at the Bronx studio, having recently returned from Lake Placid. Eugene O'Brien is busy on the Coast with "The Figurehead," and Elaine Hammerstein is making "Things That Hurt," in the Fort Lee studio.

"Virgin of Stamboul" Opens in New York

The big new Universal-Jewel production, "The Virgin of Stamboul," starring Priscilla Dean will have its initial public showing at the B. S. Moss Broadway Theatre, New York City, Sunday night, March 21st.

Leading moving picture exhibitors of New York City and its environs, including a large part of New Jersey, have been invited to attend on the night of March 22, to see "The Virgin of Stamboul," the new Universal-Jewel master production starring Priscilla Dean. This exhibition will be in lieu of a trade showing, and although the public will be admitted to the theatre, the best seats have been reserved for the visiting exhibitors and for representatives of the trade papers.

Announces an All-Star Cast

IN announcing the cast for his first independent production, to be presented by the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation, Director Sidney A. Franklin emphasized the exploitation possibilities afforded by an all-star company of players. Mr. Franklin is now at work on his initial independent subject, a screen version of Robert W. Chambers' widely read novel, "Athalie" with a cast comprising some of filmdom's most prominent players.

For the role of "Athalie", one of Chambers' fascinating character creations, Mr. Franklin has engaged Sylvia Breamer who joins the Franklin company after appearing with success in a series of features produced by J. Stuart Blackton in which she was starred. In additon, Miss Breamer has been featured prominently in a number of special productions including a screen version of Mrs. Humphrey Ward's "Missing" in which she scored a hit.

The leading male role is in the hands of Conrad Nagle, an actor of wide experience both on the stage and before the camera. Mr. Nagle has won a large following among photoplay devotees as a result of his work in "Little Women", "The Lion and the Mouse," in which he played opposite Alice Joyce, and "Red Head" in which he supported Alice Brady. On the legitimate stage, Mr. Nagle is best known for his performance opposite Alice Brady in "Forever After" and in the leading male role in "The Man Who Came Back" in which he toured the country for more than a year.

Rosemary Theby known the country over for her character portrayals has been entrusted with an important role, while Robert Cain, a "heavy" of repute who has been prominently cast in Paramount productions, chief among which are "Secret Service" and "Victory", enacts an important part in the picture, Sam De Grasse, veteran character actor, who has been seen in support of Mary Pickford in a number of productions, rounds out the cast of principals working under Franklin's direction.

Imbued with the principles of sound showmanship, Franklin, according to his statement, selected his cast for "Athalie" with an eye not only to the fitness of the players to the roles they will enact but also to the box-office. In this connection, the director made the following statement:

"One of the most universally neglected phases of picture exploitation is the all-star cast. By 'all-star' I do not mean an aggregation of obscure players which by virtue of a producer's mandate is given the 'all-star' appellation. I refer to the legitimate usage of the term—a cast which comprises players who have attained wide-spread prominence and who have won the recognition and esteem of motion picture patrons.

"Many exhibitors playing attractions in which all-star casts appear, are content to advertise merely, "An all-star cast" thereby neglecting a golden opportunity to capitalize the popularity of well-known screen favorites presented in the production. The players constituting the truly all-star cast command large personal followings. Why not get maximum box-office value from their names?

"To draw an analogy", continues Mr. Franklin, "a published circulating a book written by Robert W. Chambers, Rupert Hughes, Harold MacGrath or any widely-read author, would hardly consider it profitable to use in place of the author's name a term such as "Anonymous". He recognizes in the author's name an asset of incalculable value—a source of revenue which he develops to its fullest limitations."

Mr. Franklin further asserts that the producer in assembling an all-star cast pays substantial salaries to secure players of established repute in order to enhance the drawing power of his production.

South Seas Views on Way

Martin Johnson Writes Rothacker of Progress Which Is Being Made

WATTERSON R. ROTHACKER, president of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company, has received a letter from Martin Johnson, now engaged in filming some of "the wild men" of the South Seas. The letter follows:

"I must hand it to you people . . . Mr. Beyfuss sends you my Borderland films (for printing) and sends ten-reels to me here in Sydney. They are excellent—in fact, I have never seen better work done. You have gotten things out of some negatives that I did not know was there.

"I gave a private showing at the Picadilly theatre here in Sydney to about two hundred friends. I came away from the theatre feeling mighty proud of all ten reels.

"Then I took the films up to Malekula, and showed them to the South Sea nobility. Nagapate thought the work was the best he had ever had the pleasure of seeing —of course, he had never seen moving pictures before.

"I will have my new film, "Wild Men Of Malekula," out and assembled in about a week. It will go forward by the next steamer to America. I am advising Mr. Beyfuss to send it to you.

"I am sailing to New Guinea with 45,000 feet of film in about two weeks. This film I will develop on the spot. However, afterwards when I go to Borneo and Sumatra and Africa I will travel so fast that I will not have time to develop. I have made the discovery that by proper attention I can expose film in the tropics and keep it four months before it is developed, so after New Guinea I will send all work to you to be developed.

Mr. Rothacker wrote back "Thanks!" and the word that he, along with the rest of America, was looking forward to seeing the wild men.

Cohen and Singer Join Reelcraft Pictures

R. C. Cropper, president of the Reelcraft Pictures Corporation, announces Milton I. Cohen as general sales manager, and Julius Singer as manager of the New York Exchange for Reelcraft. Nat Spitzer is also announced as studio manager of the Coast studios of the company.

Milton I. Cohen was the president of the Bulls-Eye Film Company before it was taken over by Reelcraft. He is well known among independent producers and distributors, and has introduced many screen stars to the public.

Mr. Singer was associated with Carl Laemmle the first seven years he was in the moving picture business. Some years later he was special field representative for Universal.

Ten Companies Busy At Vitagraph Studios

Since the inauguration of its new special production campaign, Vitagraph has ten companies at work at its Hollywood studios. There are three feature companies, three serials, and four comedy groups at work.

Tom Terriss, with a notable all-star cast, is starting work on "The Girl from the Sky," adapted from the novel 'Trumpet Island" by Gouverneur Morris and David Smith is nearing the completion of "The Courage of Marge O'Doone," adapted from the novel by James Oliver Curwood.

Reviews Recent Acquisitions

Robertson-Cole Feels Its Promises Have Been Fulfilled

WITH 1920 only getting under way Robertson-Cole points with pride at the manner in which it has aimed to fulfill its promise to startle the motion picture world with the importance of its 1920-1921 acquisitions. Better than mere phrases are mention of Otis Skinner, who is to give the screen his immortal "Kismet;" Mac Marsh who comes back for four specials a year; Georges Carpentier, the great international figure for whom will be written a story by Willard Mack, the successful playwright; Sessue Hayakawa, who will make four big pictures a year; Dustin Farnum, who will do the same; the Sir Ernest Shackleton South Polar pictures; Albert Capellani, one of the supreme directors whose first picture will be Marjorie Rambeau in "The Fortune Teller;" screen rights to "Grumpy," Cyril Maude's famous play, and Chic Sales, the famous rube comedian, on the screen for the first time.

Contracts covering these stars, writers, directors and plays have been closed. Work in most instances is already under way. So within the first phase of the new year is borne out the substance of the prophecy made by A. S. Kirkpatrick, vice president and general manager of the Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation, to the effect that Robertson-Cole will not spare expense to release motion pictures that will please the patron and so assure a financial harvest for the live exhibitor.

"From this list," reads the statement from the Robertson-Cole office, "it will seem that Robertson-Cole is carrying out with fidelity the policy which it announced. The end has not yet come for more new acquisitions are to follow. The latest of the announcements, regarding Otis Skinner in 'Kismet,' was of great interest to the motion picture world. For many months various producers had been attempting to induce Skinner to place this, his greatest stage part, on the screen.

"In 'Kismet,' Otis Skinner recreated a role which surpasses anything previously done. Klaw & Erlanger produced this play which was tremendously successful all over the country. According to Robertson-Cole's plans, 'Kismet' will be put on the screen in a not less elaborate style than upon the stage.

"Mae Marsh, star of the Griffith masterpiece, 'Birth of a Nation,' is now at work in the Gasnier studios at Glendale, California, on her first Robertson-Cole-Gasnier special. L. J. Gasnier, who supervised 'The Beloved Cheater,' one of the successes of the season, promises a new Mae Marsh when she appears in the first of her new pictures.

"Georges Carpentier, 'Idol of France,' who thrilled the world by his exploits in the great war is now on his way to America to produce a big dramatic picture for Robertson-Cole. Willard Mack, the playwright, is working on an original story, which is to be ready in a few days. In this, Carpentier will be given a role fitting his dramatic capabilities. The signing of the noted Frenchman, further cements the good will which is gaining headway between Robertson-Cole and the exhibitor. It is generally predicted in the trade that the Carpentier film will be one of the sure box office attractions of the year.

"Sessue Hayakawa, whose work on the screen has caused critics frequently to write, 'He is in a class by himself,' has been signed by Robertson-Cole. His new contract provides for pictures over a period of four years, beginning at the conclusion of his present series of pictures in August. Hayakawa is one of the most general favorites of the screen.

"Dustin Farnum, whose film characterizations have made his pictures of first run calibre throughout the country, is another star soon to commence work on Robertson Cole specials. Stories are being selected, which will be used by Farnum for four big features each year."

Patriotism Keynote of Releases

Three Such Pictures on Pathe Schedule for April

FOR what is said to be the first time in the history of the motion picture industry a great organization in the business will release three patriotic productions in one month. The Pathe Exchange, Inc., will release during the month of April productions by J. Stuart Blackton, Edwin Carewe, and Leonard Perret; and all of them are patriotic in theme; are virile American stories; and are still supreme in answering the requirement of the motion picture public for dramatic entertainment. "Lifting Shadows," the Perret production, featuring Emmy Wehlen, will be released on April 4th; the Blackton production, "The Blood Barrier," with Robert Gordon and Sylvia Breamer, will be released on April 11th; and on April 25th, the Edwin Carewe production of Augustus Thomas' story, "Rio Grande," will be released.

The first of the pictures to be released, "Lifting Shadows," deals with the intrigues of a band of Russian conspirators against the safety and peace of the United States; the second, "The Blood Barrier," deals with the efforts of enemies of the country to make an officer of the United States Army betray the secrets of his government; and "Rio Grande" is a thrilling picture of conditions on the Mexican border.

In "Lifting Shadows," as in all three of the productions, the entertainment of the public is the first consideration, and it is a picture of high dramatic value. The settings are on a magnificent scale and the lighting effects are superb. As a young Russian girl, in love with a young American, Miss Wehlen is said to be seen at her best in a powerful role. From the first scene to the last efforts of the Russian conspirators form an exciting and dramatic feature of the story, according to reports. The supporting cast is a strong one. Stuart Holmes is seen as the villain of the screen, the role in which he is so well known to the public. The leading man is Wyndham Standing, who has been leading man for Pauline Frederick, Elsie Ferguson, Norma Talmadge, and Hope Hampton. Julia Swayne Gordon is also in the cast.

"The Blood Barrier" is from the pen of the late Cyrus Townsend Brady, and was written in his most effective fashion. It is the story of a young American Army officer in possession of a secret of great value to an enemy power. Even when his own life is at stake on a charge of murder and the fair name of the woman he loves is imperilled he keeps silence. Sylvia Breamer and Robert Gordon, who have appeared together in "The Moonshine Trail," "Dawn," "My Husband's Other Wife," and "Respectable by Proxy," are also seen together in "The Blood Barrier."

Prepare Rousing Welcome

Georges Carpentier, Due to Arrive March 21st, to Get Big Reception

IN addition to the delegation from the Robertson-Cole Company that will meet Georges Carpentier, when he arrives in New York from France about March 21st, preparations are being made in many quarters to give the Frenchman a rousing reception when he reaches the shores of the U. S. A.

Committees from many military organizations, ex-service men and members of the Foreign Legion are planning to be on hand as well as representatives from all of the big sporting organizations, sporting editors and special writers on the big magazines.

It is learned that in view of the repeated utterances of Georges Carpentier that he is an advocate of temperance, representatives from both the wet and dry forces will be there when he arrives, anxious to get first hand statements on his views of the prohibition question.

Whether Carpentier favors temperance only as a rule of training or whether he carries the rule into his private life is of the deepest concern to the forces lined up for and against liberal enforcement. It is pointed out by the advocates of light wines and beers that Carpentier, being a Frenchman, undoubtedly has taken these beverages as part of his daily diet since childhood and will therefore not only be in entire sympathy with their views but stands out as a shining example of the beneficent qualities of mild stimulants.

Dry apostles, on the other hand, are equally strong in their convictions that Carpentier would never have reached the vigor that carried him to the pinnacle of physical prowess in Europe.

The circumstances of Carpentier's recent marriage has also attracted the attention of the romantic writers on the various publications, and a race is in progress to get a beat on a human interest story when the big fellow arrives.

Accompanied by his manager, Deschamps, Carpentier sailed from France on the 15th, and he is due to arrive in New York harbor on March 21st.

Park Tells of Latest Film

Explains Nature of "The Scarlet Dragon," State Rights Feature

LESTER PARK, who is associated with Edward Whiteside in the production of pictures for the State Right market, this week issued from his office at 500 Fifth Avenue, New York City, an important statement to the trade in behalf of their second production, "The Scarlet Dragon," starring Gail Kane and directed by Frank Reicher from Willard King Bradley's story.

Of "The Scarlet Dragon" Mr. Park said: "It is a film frankly sensational in its appeal to the public. While sensationalism is not its aim, nevertheless the very nature of the story of 'The Scarlet Dragon' and the manner in which it has been developed has provided opportunity for a series of unusual scenes of a sensational character.

"'The Scarlet Dragon' contains a powerful story. It is developed in a manner which places it in a class with good literature and good drama, but the thrills and the sensational climaxes are presented with such force that they out distance the high spots of even the regular melodramatic stage thrillers.

"'The Scarlet Dragon' will be handled through Photoplay Libraries, Incorporated, who report great interest in our first offering, 'Empty Arms.' Its subject lends itself to unusual exploitation, and our advertising and publicity experts are extending themselves in an effort to arouse interest in the production."

Universal Puts Stunt Over

Press Carries Arabian Story and Universal Gets Effective Tie-Up

UNIVERSAL has let the cat out of the bag, and the escape of the feline has brought to light some amusing revelations. A few days ago there appeared in the New York dailies a story, to which a generous amount of space was allotted, about the arrival in New York of one Ben Mahomet, an Arabian sheik and brother of the Amir of Hedjaz. With Ben came a fully accoutered entourage, servants appropriately costumed, baggage loaded high, n' ev'rything. The Sahara setting and Oriental cast were without a flaw. Sheik Ben was here avowedly to trace an heiress, affianced to his brother, but lately female principal in an elopement from Constantinople, the male principal being represented as an American marine. Here was a human interest story, and in due time the newspapers got busy.

Ben Mahomet and his swarthy attendants first made their appearance on Sunday, March 7th, when they rolled up to the entrance of the Hotel Majestic in a great limousine. The suite engaged a suite of rooms. Then the fun started. First the hotel crew got busy with the Sheik's equipment. American furniture was disposed of hastily, and in its place were arrayed pallets, taborets, fleecy draperies and other evidences of Oriental luxury and ease. Next the reporters got busy, and in short order the Sheik was conducting solemn interviews with representatives of the fourth estate. His broken English, voluble French and occasional Arabic effusions, the latter directed at the servants, enhanced the effect.

Monday morning the dailies carried column length stories about the strange visitor and the details of the search for the missing heiress, some in a jocular vein and with a note of suspicion.

Press agencies telegraphed particulars to great centers across the country. Tuesday papers informed of the employment of the Val O'Farrell Detective Agency by the Sheik. Wednesday's columns brought the news of the heiress's discovery in a menial position in New York's Armenian colony, deserted by her lover and happy to be reunited with her people.

Meanwhile Universal's publicity department had been busy with teaser ads and various other methods, all with the aim of concentrating the roused public attention on the forthcoming release of "The Virgin of Stamboul".

Plan Second of Big Series

Prepare All Details for Second of Olive Tell's Feature Series

HAVING completed "Love Without Question," the first of the series of six Olive Tell features, Director B. A. Rolfe lost no time in beginning the second of the series. He is now busily engaged in the work of preparation on "A Woman's Business," adapted from "Nothing A Year," the popular novel by Charles Belmont Davis.

Mr. Rolfe expects to have everything in readiness to begin "shooting" scenes within the next few days. The scenario is all in shape, sets and locations have been selected and a supporting cast for Miss Tell is now being carefully chosen. These details will be attended to by the first of the week and then the first of the interior scenes will be taken.

"A Woman's Business" calls for quite a large cast. In addition to Olive Tell, the star will be seen in the role of a modern society girl, a number of well known players are being cast for important roles.

The locale and nature of the story demand lavish and elaborate interior sets. These have been designed under the supervision of Mr. Rolfe and his art director and are said to be exceedingly beautiful, offering a most artistic background for the action of the photodrama.

Miss Tell, as usual, will display a number of the latest creations of Fifth Avenue Modiste's. For the past two weeks she has been engaged in the selection of her wardrobe for "A Woman's Business," and promises us that she will appear in many startling gowns and frocks.

"A Woman's Business" is the sort of modern dramatic story that has a genuine appeal to the large majority of theatre goers. Throughout the deeply interesting drama is woven a pretty love story in the best style of Charles Belmont Davis, who is considered to be one of our most popular novelists and magazine writers.

Exhibitors Interested in Five-Star Comedy

"Tillie's Punctured Romance," the six-reel comedy feature now being released on the State Right market by Tower Film Corporation is arousing a great deal of speculative interest among exchangemen and exhibitors in every section of the country.

"Tillie's Punctured Romance," features five prominent comedy stars—Charlie Chaplin, Marie Dressler, Mabel Normand, Chester Conklin and Mack Swain.

Chic Sale is Cast for Irvin Cobb Story

Al Christie and Scott Sidney are co-directing on the production, "The Smart Aleck," by Irving Cobb, the first of a series of pictures, featuring Chic Sale, to be released by Robertson-Cole.

Chic Sale is surrounded by a feature cast which includes Colleen Moore, Walt Whitman, Colin Kenny, Bert Woodruff, Lydia Yeamans Titus, J. P. Lockney and others.

Republic Will Distribute "Common Sense"

Announcement is made this week by Briton N. Busch, president of Republic Distributing Corporation, that Republic has acquired and will shortly release "Common Sense," a five-reel production directed by Louis William Chaudet. The case includes Viola Vale and Ralph Lewis.

Viola Vale has appeared in such productions as "The Woman He Feared," "The Secret of the Black Mountain," and "The Son of His Father." Ralph Lewis will be remembered for his work in "The Birth of a Nation" and other productions, including "The Kid is Clever" and "Jack and the Beanstalk."

Goldwyn Closes Deals for Foreign Market

Arthur Ziehm, manager of the foreign sales department of Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, last week closed several large contracts for the handling of the third year series of Goldwyn Pictures in foreign countries.

The countries covered by the new deals are Spain and Portugal, Mexico and Central America, and Japan, the arrangements for marketing the Goldwyn product in the latter country being made by Geoffrey Nye, who is now on a tour of the far East.

Griffith Makes Ninety Interiors in One Day

Edward Griffith, director of the Vitagraph company, headed by Corinne Griffith, accomplished the feat of taking ninety interior scenes in nine hours recently for Miss Griffith's latest picture, "The Garter Girl." The scenes were filmed in the Irving Place Theatre at Irving Place and Fifteenth street. It is believed that this sets up a new record for picture taking.

New Book Purchases Named

IN line with its schedule of big stories for "Flying A" Specials, the American Film Company has purchased the moving picture rights to the best novels for screenization which such authors as Albert Payson Terhune, Cosmo Hamilton, Samuel Merwin, Pelham Grenville Wodehouse, and David Anderson and Henry Russell Miller have been able to produce.

Following "The Honey Bee," which was selected for the American debut of the opera singer, Mme. Marguerita Sylva, will come "The Thirtieth Piece of Silver," by Albert Payson Terhune. Mr. Terhune's travels in Syria and Egypt, living among the Bedouins and exploring the secrets of the far-away past, are said to have laid an excellent foundation for his novels; but in "The Thirtieth Piece of Silver" he merely reaches into the first years of the Christian era, it is stated, for the only existent piece of the Judas blood money—a grisly memento of the Master's betrayal—and places it in the hands of a very up-to-date, twentieth century society man.

How this Hebraic coin, heavy with its gruesome traditions, influence all the affairs of its young owner, coloring his love and his home with mystery and intrigue, Mr Terhune unfolds in a plot which is reported by American Film to be unparalleled for holding the interest of the reader and baffling the mind which would run ahead of the actual developments for a solution of the problems and an end to the suspense.

"The Blue Moon," published by Bobbs Merrill Company, furnishes a fresh setting for a plot among the pearl hunters on the Wabash flats of Indiana. The finding of the Blue Moon, a gorgeous pearl, forms the basis of the plot. Here the author, David Anderson, draws his hero from among the reckless, daring and dangerous river-men, whose strange mode of life and strange occupation affords a unique background for a romance replete with action, charged with mystery, vital with drama and ennobled with true heroism, says the "Flying A."

Scene from "Slam-Bang-Jim," starring William Russell and produced by the American Film Company, Inc.

"Their Mutual Child," a 1919 novel by Pelham Grenville Wodehouse, plays on the question of eugenics and pokes fun at the attempt to bring up children by rote and according to a mathematical schedule. The futility of modern so-called "society life" is the background of an amusing love drama. In "The House of Toys" the American will present, it is stated, a strong drama of love and ambition, a story written with much insight by a man who has had ample opportunity to view life as it is—a Pennsylvania lawyer, Henry Russell Miller. Other novels by the some author are "The Man Higher Up" and "His Rise to Power." The scenario, written by Daniel F. Whitcomb, is already in the hands of Director George L. Cox, at the American's Santa Barbara studio, and "The House of Toys" will soon be in picture form.

"The Week End," by Cosmo Hamilton, will be the basis for another American super-feature. The producers are well aware that "all the world loves a lover," and "The Week End" will be brought forth on the screen with this fact in mind. How a charming young miss, harassed by an unwelcome suitor, made more aggressive by her parents' stamp of approval, works out her own matrimonial salvation during one week-end' is unfolded in double quick time by the author with the help of Arthur J. Zellner's scenario.

"Slam Bang Jim" adapted from "Snap Judgment," and "The Gamesters" are also on the way.

Cochrane Urges Greater Care

Good Characterization Necessary to Please Critical Public

BETTER stories, better characterizations, and presentation methods that are original, artistic and different are necessary in the moving picture industry to satisfy the increasingly insistent demands of a discriminating clientele, according to a statement by R. H. Cochrane, vice-president of Universal Film Mfg. Company, in a recent interview.

"A spectacular scene, a costly set, or a trip around the world by some company will not always attract an audience," he continued. "But if we give that audience a human characterization in a good story that is logical, and embellish it in presentation with beautiful sets and wonderful lighting effects, then we are making progress in meeting the demands of our public."

"Mr. Cochrane admits that the exhibitor has no small part to play if the silent drama is to be made more popular than it is to-day. The luxurious cinema palaces have attracted a refined, highly educated, and highly critical class of patrons who are demanding a better standard of pictures. To the exhibitor falls the task of creating the proper atmosphere to bring out all the latent possibilities in their attractions.

"I find that the producers eve where are fully aware of this demand for better pictures," Mr. Cochrane said. "In fact this subject has been treated from so many different angles in recent months that to some it may seem hackneyed.

"Every company is putting forth great effort to obtain the best story material. The stars of to-day and the stars of to-morrow are, and will be, players who can interpret their characters so well that their own identity in many instances will be lost in that of the character. However, there always will remain with us a limited few whose personality and whose mannerisms ever will be more acceptable than any character interpretations they may attempt.

"It is also a notable fact that all companies now demand the utmost in realism—by that I mean that every scene in a story being filmed must be absolutely true to life and historically and scenically correct in every respect.

"As evidence of Universal's realization of the importance of good stories I may state that in our current list of releases such authors are represented as H. H. Van Loan, J. G. Hawks, Peter B. Kyne, Elizabeth Jordon, Edgar Franklin, Holman Day, A. H. Fitch, Randall Parrish, Baroness DeMeyer, Henry Rowland and others of equal prominence."

How Realart Got Miss Hawley

Morris Kohn Issues Statement About the Deal

ACCORDING to a statement from the Realart Pictures Corporation, "Realart stole Wanda Hawley from the Famous Players-Lasky Company's producing forces in a close contest of wits and resources. By personal influence and much manouvering I was able to spirit this new star away from Famous Players just as they had completed plans to launch her as a star in a big million dollar special." So spoke Morris Kohn, president of Realart Pictures Corporation, in discussing the deal by which Miss Hawley became a Realart star.

The statement confirms the reports that a number of other producing companies had sought Miss Hawley and entered the bidding so strongly as to establish her unquestionably as the prize star of the year. This competition for the services of a young actress was the keenest of which he had ever known, according to Mr. Kohn.

"There is no reason," he said, "why the facts in this case should be withheld. It is just such incidents as this that make motion picture production the fascinating business it is. Considerable interest in our new star appears to have been aroused by the advertising campaign we have been conducting for several weeks, and the facts of the deal seem to me to be worth relating.

"As everyone knows, Miss Hawley has been a leading woman for some time. Even before that, when she had been in motion pictures only a short period she might have been starred, but chose to bide her time and gain experience. She has played with every important Famous Players-Lasky star. No part has been too big, too difficult or too different for her to do. Consider the range in ability of an actress who has been cast successfully opposite such different types as Charles Ray, Douglas Fairbanks, William S. Hart, Wallace Reid and Bryant Washburn.

"If it had been possible, Famous Players-Lasky would have undoubtedly chosen to have kept her indefinitely as a leading woman for its male stars. But her time to become a star had arrived. Famous Players realized this no less than others, and prepared to put Miss Hawley over in a big way.

"For this purpose one of the biggest stage hits of the last ten years was purchased. The picture was made with Miss Hawley as the star. It was to have been launched as a million dollar special, the biggest thing of the year.

"Then the production was tied up by litigation. The incident was a misfortune for everybody concerned, the public included. I do not need to name the case, as the facts are common knowledge. But the point is that Miss Hawley was to have been the subject of that tremendous campaign.

"Immediately we opened negotiations for Miss Hawley. No sooner had we done so than we discovered others were aiming in the same direction. A many-cornered battle quickly developed. Such a contest is entirely novel in my experience. I have never heard or known of a similar case and I believe I can safely say it is without parallel.

"Whether the campaign Famous Players-Lasky planned will be carried through now or not I do not know. But whether it is or not makes no difference to Realart. We are thoroughly confident of our ability to properly launch Miss Hawley as a star. Our strongest efforts will be centered on that objective as they were centered a short time ago on Miss Binney. Our success with that young lady is too well known to need comment now.

"We are confident that Miss Hawley will more than justify our investment in her. She is not only Realart's choice, but I am convinced she is a popular choice. We have simply placed ourselves in the fortunate position of being her sponsors. And that part of the job we are going to do well. A most excellent stage success has been purchased as her first vehicle."

James Vincent, president of the Motion Picture Directors' Association

Director Speaks at Utica

Convention Is Addressed by James Vincent, Head of Directors' Assn.

"DIRECTORS and exhibitors are working toward the same end and, consciously or not, they are working together," declared James Vincent, President of the Motion Picture Directors' Association, in his address to the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association at Utica on March 9.

Addressing the exhibitors on behalf of the motion-picture directors, Mr. Vincent drew attention to the fact that all of the work of the director is based upon the effort to make an appeal to the audience; that the interests of the director and those of the exhibitor are identical.

"It is doubtful," says Mr. Vincent in this connection, "if the exhibitors have realized to what an extent their point of view is the point of view of the director who is working, always, with the idea that each scene and set will have a certain effect upon those who come to see it in the theatre. The director must study the psychology of audiences. He builds upon this knowledge. He creates a certain emotion in an actor with, perhaps, the intention of creating a totally different emotion in the audience. From first to last he makes his production with the same question in his mind that occurs to the exhibitor on viewing a picture—what will the audience think of this?

"Today the progressive exhibitor creates in his theatre an atmosphere designed to harmonize with the spirit of the picture. In the matter of lobby displays and decoration, musical accompaniments and even stage settings, he is now setting a high standard. That this is not without due effect upon audiences, is shown by the popularity of those houses whose proprietors are most ingenious in this respect. The director, in the studio, practices the same tactics in getting proper effects, creating atmosphere for his actors to get them into their parts."

Edith Day Release Arranged

Republic to Distribute "Children Not Wanted," Crest Feature

AN announcement deamed of special interest to exhibitors was made this week in connection with the feature, "Children Not Wanted," starring Edith Day, which has been advertised in the trade press. It is to the effect that Republic Distributing Corporation, of which Lewis J. Selznick is advisory director, will distribute the production.

Herbert Rawlinson, who has the leading role in the Wm. J. Flynn series of two-reelers released by Republic. The fourth picture is titled "Chang

"Children Not Wanted" was secured by Republic from Crest Pictures Corporation, of which Carle Carlton is general manager. Edith Day, the star, is well known to the motion picture public, having appeared in films that were acknowledged winners. She is now appearing in "Irene," a musical production on Broadway.

"Children Not Wanted" was written by Stuart Sinclair especially for Miss Day, and was produced by Crest pictures of which Mr. Carlton is general manager. In the cast is "K. C. B.," whose column in a New York daily is widely read.

The story of the picture centers around Miss Day as a working girl looking after a smaller girl who has been orphaned. Everywhere she turns an unwelcome attitude is shown her and her small charge. How she overcomes rebuffs and wins a home for the little girl and herself is said to be shown very dramatically in the production, in which an element of mystery keeps the audience at high pitch until the finish.

New Story for Mrs. Chaplin

"Old Dad," Popular Novel, Star's Next Vehicle for First National

IT has been definitely decided by Louis B. Mayer that the third Mildred Harris Chaplin picture to be released through the First National will be "Old Dad," founded on a story of the same name by Eleanor Hallowell Abbott.

The story of "Old Dad" had its first publication serially in the Woman's Home Companion. It was while running in this magazine that it attracted the attention of Mr. Mayer, who was so impressed with it that he lost no time in acquiring the world's motion picture rights by purchase. So great was the interest aroused by the story, that several well known book publishers sought permission to issue it in book form. It finally made its appearance and has proven one of the biggest sellers of the past year. It should prove an ideal vehicle for Mrs. Chaplin and in it she should do by far the best work of her career.

At least three other producing companies have made offers to Mr. Mayer for the picture rights of this story, one of them aiming to secure it for one of the best known female stars on the screen, but all offers were refused as Mr. Mayer had determined to keep for both Miss Stewart and Mrs. Chaplin the very best material obtainable.

It has not yet been decided when "Old Dad" will be released, but when it is, it will go through the First National, the same as all other Anita Stewart and Mildred Harris Chaplin productions.

Shirley Mason shows some fancy steps in "Molly and I," a Fox production

Star Must Suffer For Sake of Realism

The deprivations in the way of personal comfort and appearance that picture stars are obliged to experience in order to instill an atmosphere of realism into their parts is made the subject of special comment by William Fox in speaking of Shirley Mason's new role—that of an ignorant, hard-working country girl—in "Love's Harvest." Fox states:

"For this part Miss Mason in prompt compliance with the request of her manager, Mr. Fox, has cut her nails well down. Further, she has neglected them and has allowed the formerly pink and white shells to be lined with a rim of real, honest-to-goodness dirt—the kind of dirt that one's nails acquire around the house and yard of a farm where life is close to nature and the soil."

Close-ups of the star's hands are said to play an important part in the development of the story, and in these scenes no doubles are used.

Burnt Wings" Featured by Universal

"Burnt Wings," featuring Frank Mayo and Josephine Hill, is the special attraction on the Universal release program for the week of March 29th. It was directed by Christy Cabanne and is the screen version of Bayard Veiller's play "The Primrose Path" which played on Broadway last season.

Beginning the week of March 29th, the International News which is released on Wednesdays will be changed. All future releases will be shipped Tuesdays and Fridays. International News released on the 29th will be known as number 13 and will run consecutively thereafter.

Fix Release Date for "The Blood Barrier"

J. Stuart Blackton's next production, "The Blood Barrier," is scheduled for release by Pathe on April 11th. The story, which was written by the late Dr. Cyrus Townsend Brady, while it is not propaganda, was written in the hope of lessening the movement fostered by foreign influences to obtain American trade secrets.

Sylvia Breamer and Robert Gordon are featured, and the cast includes William R. Dunn, Margaret Barry, Louis Dean and others.

Reelcraft Corporation Formed

Absorbs Big Interests; Will Specialize in Short-Subjects

REELCRAFT Pictures Corporation is the name selected by Mr. R. C. Cropper and his associates for their recently formed five million dollar corporation, organized for the purpose of producing and distributing "short subjects" exclusively. Temporary headquarters have been established at 729 Seventh avenue, in New York City, pending the securing of a permanent location.

The officers of the company are R. C. Cropper, president; J. B. Ferber, vice-president, to supervise finance; Frederick J. Ireland, vice-president, to supervise production; Samuel Spitzer, secretary; and Samuel W. Farney, treasurer.

In speaking of the new corporation, Mr. Cropper said: "For nearly two years, through the medium of my various exchanges, I have heard the continual cry of exhibitors for more and better short subjects; and most of all for an exclusive short-subject exchange, where the exhibitor might book the necessary one and two-reel pictures which he must have to surround his big feature picture production. It is to cater to this demand that Reelcraft was organized.

"Reelcraft has taken over all of the releases, stars, studios at Chicago, Long Beach, and Hollywood of the Bull's eye Film Company, the Emerald Motion Picture Company, of Chicago; the business and exchanges of the Bee Hive Film Exchange Company in Chicago, Milwaukee, Minneapolis, Indianapolis; and the Interstate Film Company of New York with its exchanges.

"This gives us six established offices with allied connections in other principal cities. We have six producing units at work, and more are being organized. The releases taken over include the Texas Guinan two-reel westerns; Alice Howell two-reel comedies; Billy West two-reel comedies; the Moranti comedies; the William Franey one-reel comedies; and the Burrud (Sunset) Scenics. Numerous other educational, serials, novelties and short subjects will be added. Reelcraft also continues the lines being handled by the exchanges it takes over.

"While the various units have but recently been taken over, the management is being unified and organized with many important changes and valuable additions to the above mentioned units.

"The present intention and aim is to identify Reelcraft to the exhibitor and the trade following public as well, as the indelible mark of perfection and quality for all 'short subjects.' There is an ever increasing demand for such releases. Producers who have specialized in one and two reel pictures have nearly all gone in for five and six reel productions. Fatty Arbuckle and Chaplin have both adopted the policy of fewer but longer pictures; many other smaller producers have done likewise, until it has created an actual shortage for the exhibitors who must have the "short subjects" to round out their programs. It is to satisfy and fulfill this demand that we have incorporated Reelcraft, to be a national producer and distributor."

Prior to the organization of Reelcraft, Mr. Cropper was the president of the Cropper Distributing Company and the Bee Hive Film Exchange Company. He is well known among film men, being one of the pioneers, owning and operating one of the very first strings of exchanges in the United States.

Seven Metro Units Start Work

SIX companies on the West Coast and one in the East are getting under way on the big special of Metro's "fewer and better" pictures series of photoplays adapted from big stage successes and best-selling novels.

The fourth round of the "fewer and better" series includes May Allison in Eugene Walter's drama of a woman's love of luxury, "Fine Feathers;" Bert Lytell in a picture version of a colorful novel of India, by I. A. R. Wylie and entitled "The Temple of Dawn;" Viola Dana in the boudoir farce, "Parlor, Bedroom and Bath," from the stage hit by C. W. Ball and Mark Swan; Alice Lake in "An Outsider;" a second Herne play, this one by the daughter of the author of "Shore Acres," Julie Herne; a third melodrama from the Drury Lane theatre in London, "Hearts Are Trumps," by Cecil Raleigh; Taylor Holmes in a picturization of one of the stage hits which contributed so much to William Collier's popularity, "Nothing But Lies," by Aaron Hoffman; and Mitchell Lewis, in the first of his cinema productions of four Jack London novels, this one being "Burning Daylight."

In speaking of the timeliness of "Fine Feathers," a Metro official said: "It is a play which follows with fearlessness and inevitable, unswerving logic the result of extravagance. Nearly every paper and magazine in the country is pointing out to the public, in these times of skyscraping prices, that the solution of the high cost of living and the bringing of articles down to pre-war levels depends chiefly upon collective individual thrift. And so now this play not only depicts with unsparing fidelity a cross-section of representative American life and ideas, but carries with it the weight of a vital message."

King Baggot, who plays opposite May Allison in "The Cheater," a new Metro special production, starring Miss Allison

Bert Lytell's part in "The Temple of Dawn" will come as a marked contrast to his last two characters, that of the brilliant young Montreal lawyer, Charley Steele, in Sir Gilbert Parker's "The Right of Way;" and of the title character of "Alias Jimmy Valentine," the reformed crook, Paul Armstrong's great melodrama made world-famous.

"Parlor, Bedroom and Bath" will be something of a novelty, too, for Viola Dana, last seen in "The Willow Tree," by J. H. Benrimo and Harrison Rhodes. Edward Dillon, one time director of Irene Castle, Madge Kennedy, Ann Pennington, Bessie Love and George Walsh, has been selected by the production staff at the Metro studios to stage "Parlor, Bedroom and Bath." Chief in the support of Miss Dana is Eugene Pallette, and more recently with Bert Lytell.

In "An Outsider," by Julie Herne, Alice Lake at the head of an all star cast will be given the part of a manicurist. "Hearts Are Trumps" is the third of the big Drury Lane melodramas of the five Metro purchased last year while Richard A Rowland, president of Metro Pictures Corporation, was in England. This third of the thrillers is the sole work of Cecil Raleigh. As the title implies, "Hearts Are Trumps," deals with gambling, high social life in England, and intrigue.

"Nothing But the Truth" and "The Very Idea," the latter by William Le Baron, have been finished; and "Nothing But Lies" will be in the course of production within the near future. This picture is being made by Taylor Holmes Productions, Inc., in the East.

Mitchell Lewis has Edward Sloman as director for "Burning Daylight," the Jack London story of Alaska and New York which will be the first of five such Mr. Lewis will appear in on the screen, for C. E. Shurtleff, Inc. The director spent several weeks seeking locations, and actual production is now well advanced.

Three "shots" from Mack Sennett's newest comedy, "Down on the Farm," which is to be released by the United Artists

Zellner Comes East to Write Continuity

Arthur Zellner, of the Metro scenario staff, is en route from California to New York, where it is planned that he will write the continuity for the first of the big special productions to be made at Metro's Sixty-first street studios under the personal supervision of Maxwell Karger. According to present arrangements, Mr. Zellner will write only one script in New York, and then return to the Pacific coast.

Arthur Zellner made the picture version of "Shore Acres", which Alice Lake has just finished, and has adapted I. A. R. Wylie's novel, "The Temple of Dawn", as Bert Lytell's next stellar vehicle for Metro.

"Daredevil Jack" Turns Them Away in Ohio

Reports indicating that the demand for "Daredevil Jack," the Pathe serial starring Jack Dempsey, could be met only by holding the episode over for a longer run than originally intended are not rare. The Lyric theatre, Tiffin, O., played the first episode on March 1. The management conducted a newspaper advertising campaign of the showing and anticipated a big crowd, but apparently realization was greater than anticipation for early the next morning the Exchange received a wire asking if the picture could be held over for another day.

A "champ" laugh creator, Al St. John; and Benny Leonard, lightweight pugilistic "champ," featured in "The Evil Eye" serial. Warner Brothers distribute the St. John comics.

Sennett's Latest Is Sought

Contracts Pour Into United Artists for New Five-Reel Comedy

An avalanche of contracts poured into the office of Hiram Abrams, of the United Artists, last week, immediately following the signal announcement of the early release in April of Mack Sennett's latest five-reel comedy sensation, "Down on the Farm", which has been heralded everywhere by the executives of the "Big Four" organization who have seen it, as the most spectacular comedy that has ever been produced and undoubtedly the greatest feature that has come from the studios of the "Laugh King".

This production upon which Mr. Sennett personally spent many months of hard labor and expended large sums so as to make it the greatest picture he ever turned out of his studio, was suggested to the "comedy king" by certain excruciatingly funny episodes that happened "down on the farm" of the Sennett estate in Los Angeles.

In their leisure moments the stars of the Sennett studios undertook to discourage the high cost of living and the re-establishment of relations between ham and eggs. Their efforts at seeding, milking and fattening the gay and festive porker were so fraught with elements of comedy that "Down on the Farm" just naturally grew like Topsy and clamored for screen presentation.

Thrills, laughter, suspense, travesty, satire, a tinge of the burlesque of high art, and spectacle are all combined in this sensational comedy and Hiram Abrams, of the "Big Four" has been most enthusiastic about the entire production.

Will Keep Advance Information On "Mollycoddle" from Public

For the first time since he entered upon a screen career Douglas Fairbanks has taken steps to prevent advance information from reaching the outside world as to the nature of his activities in his studios.

With his return from Arizona this week, together with the hundred members of his company who had been on location in the desert filming a number of the more important and thrilling scenes for "Mollycoddle" the next Fairbanks production for United Artists, the order was issued by the star to see that no loitering be permitted about the grounds of the plant and that every "set" whether on the stage or otherwise, be hidden from the view of outsiders.

The precautions are due to the fact that there are so many novelties being introduced in "Mollycoddle" which will cause even greater comment than the nightmare and flood episodes of "When the Clouds Roll By".

Robert Fairbanks, manager of productions of the organization, has followed his brother's instructions to the letter and things have been camouflaged to such perfection that even the eyes of the trained army aviators who continually fly over the film colony in Hollywood, have been deceived.

For nine weeks preparations were made before activities started on "Mollycoddle" during which time the star developed his original idea into what is believed to be one of the best stories he has ever had to work with. Tom Geraghty, who was responsible for Doug's last screen adaptation, prepared the scenario again and Victor Fleming who supervised things from the front in the making of "When the Clouds Roll By" is again directing with Ted Reed occupying the first aid to the director.

Directors Form Million Dollar Company

Joseph Byron Totten and Joseph W. Smiley, two of America's leading motion picture directors, have formed the Tri-Star Pictures Corporation, with a capitalization of $1,000,000, to produce a limited number of special super-film productions annually.

The first star Messrs. Totten and Smiley have enrolled under the Tri-Star banner, is Ethel Barrymore, the aristocrat of the screen and stage who at present is at the zenith of her dramatic career in the star role of "Declasse."

Messrs. Totten and Smiley will personally supervise and direct all productions of the new organizations, they being well known as pioneers in the industry among the exhibitors and screen fans throughout the United States and Canada. In the past they have directed such prominent stars as Mary Pickford, Alice Brady, Bryant Washburn, Owen Moore, Gloria Swanson, F. X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne, and Henry Walthall.

Business Calls Quimby From Los Angeles

General Manager F. C. Quimby, of Associated Exhibitors, Inc., has cut short his stay in Los Angeles and he is now on his way to New York. Mr. Quimby was on the coast for only a few days. He stated that he had intended to remain for some weeks, but that his presence was required in New York at once in connection with the contemplated consummation of several arrangements of vital importance to Associated Exhibitors, Inc.

"Blind Love" is Booked For Loew Circuit

Gerald F. Bacon's six reel production "Blind Love," starring Lucy Cotton, has been booked over the Loew Circuit in Greater New York. The New York and Northern New Jersey bookings are handled by Nathan Hirsh who is state righting the picture. "Blind Love" is adapted by Basil Dickey from a play by Max Marcin. Oliver D. Bailey directed.

Mr. Cassidy, who has rejoined the Ritchey Litho Corp. staff, was awarded the grand prize and gold medal for the Art Exhibition of Painting at the San Diego Fair

Republic Moves Office Unites With Select

In order to establish a closer relationship between Select and Republic executives and to insure a greater efficiency in various departments several important department transfers were made last week in the home offices of the two organizations.

The Republic executives moved their offices to the Select home office building, 729 Seventh avenue, New York, and a number of the departments which were formerly in the home office building are now occupying the offices given up by the Republic officials, and which are located at 130 West Forty-sixth street. The transfer of these departments is the result of a plan which General-Manager Sam E. Morris has contemplated for some time.

T. C. Deitrich to Produce Stage Farce

Theodore C. Deitrich, well known as a producer of motion pictures, is to enter the field of spoken drama. His first production, already in rehearsal, is the farce-comedy, "Oh, Henry!" by Bide Dudley, co-author with Otto Harbach of the Casino's current success, "The Little Whopper;" humorist of the New York Evening World, and creator of "Lucile, the Waitress," "The Mayor of Delhi," "Jeff Nutt" and other comedy newspaper characters.

United Schedules Collier and Ray Releases

"Better Late Than Never," starring William Collier, will be released by United on March 28th. It is a Recreated Triangle Comedy. "The Pinch Hitter," a Recreated Triangle Play, with Charles Ray in the leading role, supported by Sylvia Breamer, will be released on the same date, just about the time the big league teams get back from the Southern training camps.

Le Guere Starring in Harvard Prize Play

George Le Guere, who formerly appeared on the screen in "Blind Love," "The Soul of a Woman" and "The Birth of a Race," is now playing in one of the stellar roles of the Harvard prize play, entitled "Mamma's Affair," which at present is running at the Fulton theatre.

H. M. Hobart Issues Statement

Points Out Reasons for Past Success of Cosmopolitan

"THE REASON why Cosmopolitan Productions' pictures have been so successful for us and for our exhibitors is because we never lose sight of the box office angle. In other words, the element of popular taste plays a most important part in our production plans, for we know full well that no picture can rightly be called a success if it doesn't draw at the box office."

Thus did Henry M. Hobart, vice-president and general manager of International Film Service, Inc., 729 Seventh avenue, New York, producers of Cosmopolitan Productions and Hearst News Reels sum up the why and wherefore of his company's success since Cosmopolitan Productions made its first appearance on the motion picture horizon.

"After all, the proof of the motion picture is in the box office," continued Mr. Hobart. "A commercial failure overshadows whatever artistic success a picture may achieve simply because success in anything is measured to-day by the yardstick of commercialism. If a venture doesn't make money it's a failure. So it is with that idea in mind that we make our pictures and it is with that idea in mind also that we exploit and market them. Our exhibitors must make money with our pictures—that's our first slogan.

"Taking the production end first, I can say for it, and I am sure that our exhibitors will bear me out in this, that we consider no expense in the making of Cosmopolitan features. Our star, Marion Davies, is too well known to the trade and the fans to require any introduction. Her box office pull has been well demonstrated in the past and her following is legion. Miss Davies is given only such stories as fit her rare personality. She is always surrounded by a cast of exceptional screen players and she has the best directors as well as the best in scenic assistance, etc. In support of this statement I recall to mind 'The Cinema Murder,' in which Miss Davies starred. This picture is a tremendous financial success and is still in demand among exhibitors. This holds true too of 'The Miracle of Love' which featured Lucy Cotton. The same elements that go to make up Miss Davies' starring vehicles go also into the making of our other productions which feature Lucy Cotton and Alma Rubens individually.

"These productions which are the first and only contribution made so far to the screen by Cosmopolitan Productions proved to us that we are on the right track. They made big money and are still making big money for exhibitors everywhere. There's the proof of the pudding. We have been in receipt of unsolicited communications from representative exhibitors to the effect that our pictures have made money for them and I have yet to receive one letter to the contrary.

"This brings me to 'April Folly', Miss Davies' latest screen work which will receive its first showing anywhere at the Capitol theatre, New York, beginning March 28th. We have great hopes for 'April Folly' because in our judgment it has every element of popularity and because it has every sign of a sure fire box office success about it. In the first place it has Marion Davies for its star, and in the second place the story was written by Cynthia Stockley a famous author.

"Then again 'April Folly' will be given such a publicity and exploitation send off as none of our former productions has had. That is saying a great deal, I know, when one recalls to mind the splendid publicity which surrounded 'The Miracle of Love,' and 'The Cinema Murder.' We believe that our duty to the exhibitor does not end with the selling of the picture to him but actually it begins there. After we give him a fine production it is up to us to help him sell it to his patrons and that's where our exploitation campaign comes in. I have no hesitancy in saying that the publicity and advertising on 'April Folly' will be a revelation to all the case hardened film folk who think they have seen the best in exploitation.

Vivian Rich Completes Picture

Makes Her First Fox Starring Vehicle in Record Time

EIGHTEEN days of actual working time is the record set by Vivian Rich, the new Fox star, in completing her first production for William Fox at the California studios, according to a statement from the Fox offices. "The previous record," says a report from the William Fox office, "for the completion of a production of this nature and length was established some time ago—also by a woman star—and totaled twenty-one working days. Miss Rich's progress in her first film for this producer, under the skillful direction of Scott Dunlap, is a notable one.

"Scott Dunlap has made some very fine pictures for Fox, and it is with pleasurable anticipation that the trade looks forward to seeing this first Vivian Rich film. Since completing 'Her Elephant Man' with Miss Mason, Mr. Dunlap has put the sensational Buck Jones through the filming of Charles Alden Seltzer's western novel 'Forbidden Trails.' This also is promised as a novelty in screen entertainment, presenting many new human touches and ingenious camera angles, for which this director has become noted."

Vivian Rich in two different moods in the Fox society drama, "Would You Forgive?"

The name of Miss Rich's first picture for William Fox is "Would You Forgive?" It is a drama of domestic life and furnishes the brilliant young actress a role that puts her ability to a much severer test than that which she met so successfully in appearance under the Fox banner—in the melodrama "The Last Straw" which introduced Buck Jones as a screen star, and in which she was his leading woman. The story, written especially for Miss Rich, is from the pen of Julius G. Furthman, one of the four writers recently added to the Fox scenario staff on the west coast. There are but four principals in the story, and the entire picture was filmed within the walls of the studios in Hollywood without loss of time on location work. Supporting Vivian Rich in this, her first offering as a Fox star, are the popular Tom Chatterton, who plays the part of John Cleveland, husband of the star; Ben Deely, whose work in recent Fox pictures has won much favorable comment; and Lilie Leslie, a screen actress of merit.

The part of a child in "Would You Forgive?"—a part very small but very important in the unwinding of the plot—was assigned to little Nancy Caswell, and in it her work is one of the most touching bits of child acting seen this season.

Mons Randall Goes West

Equity Artist Wants to Be Close to Production Source of Pictures

WITH the departure of Mr. Mons Randall for the West Coast, New York lost one of her most valuable and most prominent film trade artists. Randall left for Los Angeles on the Overland Limited last Saturday, accompanied by Mrs. Mons, sister of Edith Johnston, prominent film star under contract with Vitagraph. Randall takes up his duties at the coast as special advertising artist for Equity Picture Corporation working in connection with Nat. G. Rothstein, advertising manager for Equity on the New York end.

In leaving New York, Randall said: "New York is a great art town, possibly the greatest in the world for high quality advertising art, but the difficulty in the production of art for the film business on the New York end lies in the trouble that all producers are up against, i. e. that of not being able to see each production so that the right keynote of advertising exploitation can be given it. Times without number have I worked on pictures without seeing them, and I know by my own personal observation that nearly every New York film advertising department works under the same handicap of advertising and exploitation on pictures without seeing them beforehand, which to my notion is all wrong. Advertising men and artists are constantly working in the dark by using only such meagre advance information on pictures as they secure from their coast studios.

"No picture can be fully exploited by this method, whereas with an artist right on the lot for the procurement of stills that he himself knows to possess the advertising and selling wallop means a 50 per cent more complete exploitation campaign for any picture."

"King Spruce" Ready Soon

Hodkinson Assembles Prints of Dial Feature for April Release

PRINTS of "King Spruce," the Holman Day story of the Maine forests starring Mitchell Lewis, and produced by Otto Bollman and Roy Clements for the Dial Film Company, are being assembled at the Republic laboratories for early dispatch to the thirty-four Hodkinson branches. Simultaneous with the inauguration of a powerful advertising drive, trade showings of "King Spruce" will be held by all Hodkinson managers in the field. The feature will be released on April 18th.

A cast of merit was assembled to support Mitchell Lewis by Roy Clements. Chief in support of the star is Mignon Anderson, the prepossessing little ingenue star, who though still in her teens has supported such famous stage celebrities as Joseph Jefferson, Richard Mansfield, Julia Marlowe and Effie Shannon. The erstwhile child star enjoys wide popularity among patrons of the silver sheet, the result of her splendid characterizations in "A Wife on Trial," "The Getaway," "The Master Spy," "The Claim" and as leading woman for Frank Keenan in "The Midnight Stage."

Melbourne MacDowell has a role commensurate with his ability in "King Spruce," and Arthur Millette, the ever-busy heavy, introduces a new brand of villainy in the Mitchell Lewis vehicle. An important part in "King Spruce" is in the hands of Betty Wales. Joe Ray, James O'Neil, Gus Soville and Frederic Herzog are seen to advantage in the minor roles of "King Spruce."

"Deadlier Sex" Is Booked

Many Theatres Sign for Feature After Its Premiere in New York

FOLLOWING the announcements of the booking of the latest Blanche Sweet production released by Pathe, "The Deadlier Sex," by the B. S. Moss Broadway theatre many of the finest theatres in the Metropolitan area have contracted for the picture. The Broadway theatre run of the picture for one week started on March 14 and many exhibitors visited the theatre to see for themselves the manner in which the production went over. Important bookings resulted.

Among the important houses contracting for the picture are the Moss Regent and the Moss Flatbush theatres; B. F. Keith's Prospect; Academy of Music; Proctor's 23rd Street, and Proctor's 125th Street; Harlem Opera House; Keith's Jersey City; Proctor's Mount Vernon, and Proctor's Yonkers; Halsey Street; D. V. Picker's Rio theatre; Adelphia; 77th Street; Symphony; Fox's Nemo ,and the Majestic on Washington Heights.

In all of the big exchange centers the most representative exhibitors have either booked the picture or have arranged for a screening as soon as prints are available for them. The success of the first two Blanche Sweet pictures released by Pathe "A Woman of Pleasure" and "Fighting Cressy" is believed to have established the star on a firm basis in the theatres.

Big Houses Feature Lloyd

Partial List of First-Run Houses Booking Comedy Series Announced

WITH the release of "Haunted Spooks," fifth of Harold Lloyd's $100,000 two-reel comedies, set for March 21, and with the sixth and last of the initial series about completed, Pathe is now prepared for the first time to name the principal first run theatres booking the comedies.

From Atlantic to the Pacific, the foremost exhibitors and circuits of theatres have signed for the Lloyds. In every key city of the country the Lloyd comedies are now being played by one or more first-run theatres, and according to Pathe, the subjects are receiving the widest exploitation accorded any comedies. "Exhibitors are finding Lloyd a real box office attraction, and in scores of instances he is played above the feature by leading showmen," says the theatres playing Lloyds include:

In the New York territory the big theatres playing Lloyds include

Strand, New York City; Rialto, New York City; Marcus Loew Circuit, New York City; Proctor's Fifth Avenue, New York City; Strand, Brooklyn, N. Y., and Keith's Prospect, Brooklyn, N. Y.

In the New England territory some of the first big run accounts are:

Modern and Beacon, Boston Mass.; Washington, Boston, Mass.; Orpheum, Malden, Mass.; Strand, Providence, R. I.; Waldorf, Lynn, Mass.; Owl and Royal, Lowell, Mass., and Capitol, Springfield, Mass.

Lloyd is being featured by these theatres also:

California, Los Angeles, Cal.; Hoyt's, Long Beach, Cal.; Strand, Pasadena, Cal.; Gayety, Springfield, Ill.; West End Lyric, St. Louis, Mo.; Portola, San Francisco, Cal.; Mission, San Francisco, Cal.; Fillmore, San Francisco, Cal.; Strand, Fresno, Cal.; Liberty, San Jose, Cal.; Majestic, Reno, Nev., and the Leland, Albany, N. Y.

Universal Managers Meet

Initial Convention of Exchange Men Will Be Held in New York

UNIVERSAL exchange managers from all branch exchanges east of the Mississippi and north of the Ohio will meet in convention at the Hotel Astor, New York City, March 22nd, to discuss plans for the next season's sales campaign. This convention, which will last several days, will be followed by other conventions of Universal sales managers in other sections of the United States and marks the beginning of an elaborate system of conference and co-operation by which Harry M. Berman, general manager of Exchanges for Universal, plans to perfect the Universal sales machine.

The initial convention in New York City will afford the exchange managers in the eastern district, under A. A. Schmidt, an opportunity to see the opening, Sunday night, March 21st, at B. S. Moss' Broadway theatre, of "The Virgin of Stamboul," Priscilla Dean's new super-production. Plans for handling this picture will form an important part of the convention business. The assembled film men, including several of the publicity men in the embraced territory, will hear talks by Carl Laemmle and other Universal officials. A dinner will be one of the features of the convention.

Among the managers who will be present at the New York convention besides Mr. Schmidt, whose headquarters are in Cleveland, are George Uffner and Charles Rosenzweig of New York; F. S. Hopkins, Buffalo; Herman Stern, Pittsburgh; E. J. Smith, Cleveland; Louis Baum, Cincinnati; W. D. Ward, Detroit; Ralph Abbett, Indianapolis; Edward Golden, and W. H. Hill, of Boston, and Vernon Carrick of Philadelphia.

Philip Masi To Direct Kaufman Subjects

Philip W. Masi has been added to the staff of directors now engaged in filming the Herbert Kaufman editorial subjects, it was announced this week by Myron Selznick. The Kaufman series is under way at the Fort Lee studios of Selznick.

Forthcoming News Reel Is Booked Already

Included in the theatres which have already booked the new Selznick news reel, plans for which have been in the process of completion for over a year in the Selznick executive offices, are the Strand on Broadway in New York, Sid Grauman's new palace of motion pictures in Los Angeles, the Clemmer in Seattle, and the Colonial in Indianapolis. These three representative houses in the East, Middle West and the West, indicate that the entire country is in line for the Selznick News reel The subject will be released on Easter Sunday.

Additional bookings, scheduled to begin with the first reel are the Regent in Buffalo, the Temple in Toledo, the Dome in Youngstown, the Crystal in Indianapolis, the Alamo in Louisville, the Regent in Rochester and the Madison in Detroit.

Guessing Contest Aids Louise Glaum Film

The Louise Glaum "Peacock Kalogram," said to be one of the most unique motion picture guessing contests ever devised in connection with the exploitation of a picture, played a prominent part in the record-breaking engagement of J. Parker Read, Jr.'s "The Lone Wolf's Daughter" at Charles H. Miles' Majestic Theatre, Detroit, Mich., last week.

Marjorie Daw, who conducts the photoplay section in the Detroit Journal, welcomed the "Kalogram" as a novel addition to her page of film news. Announcement was made offering $10 in cash and 50 pairs of theatre tickets for those who solved the "Kalogram."

Kelley Press Representative for Hackett

Joseph L. Kelley has been engaged as personal press representative for James K. Hackett, actor-manager-producer. Mr. Kelley's immediate duties in connection with this engagement will be the handling of publicity for Mr. Hackett's opening in Lillian Sabine's dramatization of William Dean Howells' novel, "The Rise of Silas Lapham," at the Montauk Theatre, Brooklyn, March 22nd for a week's run, moving to the Standard, New York, for a week and then on tour through the East and Canada.

Madame Chautard Dies in New York City

Emile Chautard, Mayflower director, is receiving condolence from his many friends upon the death of his wife, Alice Archainbaud Chautard who passed away on March 12th at the Chautard residence, 790 Riverside Drive, New York, following a stroke of paralysis. Word that his wife had suffered a third stroke reached Mr. Chautard while he was working on a picture at Fort Lee. The director rushed to his wife's bedside and was with her when she passed away.

Before her marriage Madame Chautard was a well known French emotional actress.

King Vidor Sets Forth Opinions

IN the hope of getting a new angle on comin, productions, the Motion Picture News has asked several of the producers to give their candid opinion of their own work with any suggestions that they may have to the exhibitors in the matter of exploitation, advertising,etc., and the first of this series is an interview with King Vidor, whose first release for First National, "The Family Honor," is set for an early date.

Mr. Vidor, before beginning the production of this series for First National planned in his own mind the kind of pictures that he wanted to make and the kind that would fit the needs of the film industry best. He set a standard which he wanted to reach with every subject and has certain ideals to incorporate in every film. Exhibitors will no doubt find his statements most interesting.

"In the first place," said Mr. Vidor, who sprang into fame with 'The Turn in the Road,' "if I were an exhibitor, I should always buy a director's picture, in preference to others. In doing so, the theatre owner is practically assured of the merit of every part of the picture. The director is entirely responsible for every part of the production. If he is a director who can be trusted to do the best that is in him—as I hope I can be trusted—it is a guarantee that story, acting, photography, continuity, settings, titles, are up to a uniform good standing which that man is endeavoring to maintain.

"Having decided this, the exhibitor should then determine what is the best sort of director to choose. There are some directors who are making pictures with their own organizations, whose only attribute is that the picture will be well directed. It may be almost any kind of a picture, about anything, based on any sort of places, people or situation.

"But King Vidor Productions will always be marked by certain things. 'The Family Honor' is the first of a series which, with proper exploitation can be used to create a following, a public of their own. People who like one King Vidor Production can be certain that the next picture bearing that name will contain in some measure the things for which my pictures stand.

"For this year at least, I can tell the exhibitor that my pictures will all be laid in the United States, in an average locality, and that they will deal with familiar, understandable, human types. They will attempt to appeal through human interest and heart appeal rather than through anything exotic, adventurous or unusual.

"Here is another highly important factor in connection with my pictures. They deal with the boy next door, the girl across the street your own home folks. If you will stop a moment you will see that in the very nature of things people are more interested in the fact that Uncle Joe Jones has bought a new automobile, than in the battle of some South African tribes for a new string of beads for the chief's favorite wife. The novelty of a thing may prevent absolute boredom and rouse a detached interest, but it isn't the heart throb, the warm fellow feeling of intense interest that comes from the lives of those you know. It's of more concern to you if Cousin Susie's beau takes another girl to the church social, than if Lady Vere de Vere discovers that she no longer loves his Lordship.

"Also, I am glad that I can offer you the advantage of the way in which the First National Exhibitors present their productions. Each organization which release through First National stands upon its own merits. There is no effort to make First National the thing, but simply to make it a guarantee. As long as human nature continues, there will be mistakes. But it seems to me that in this way, the other companies do not suffer for the mistake of one.

"Frankly, I am convinced that people want clean stories, true to life, honest, without hokum or wild flights of imagination for their basis. I will always guarantee that my pictures are clean, wholesome, right intentioned."

"Teaser" Campaign Pleases

Not Only Trade, But Public Also Took Part in Realart's Contest

RESULTS that were wholly unexpected are reported by Realart Pictures Corporation to have followed the three weeks' mystery campaign on Wanda Hawley which Realart conducted in the trade papers. The campaign was conducted in the trade papers alone and was directed solely toward the trade, but a surprising number of queries was received from persons who are not exhibitors and not connected with theatres, according to Realart.

Realart officials expected that many persons would guess the name of the new star from the data about her career furnished in the advertisements. They were surprised, however, that most of the correct guesses were based upon the parts of photographs which were published. In the first advertisement, two pages of the colored insert gave glimpses of Miss Hawley's eyes, mouth, nose, feet, hands and head. It was these clues that prompted most of the right answers. Numerous post cards, letters and even telephone calls were received at the home offices, asking if the star was this, that or the other person, asserts Realart.

Commenting on the unusual results, J. S. Woody, general manager of Realart, said:

"Our only purpose in this campaign, was to reach the trade, and, of course, we are gratified to discover our advertising has had a much wider appeal. It has served to confirm forcibly our opinion that the selection of Miss Hawley as a star was not only our verdict but the popular one."

"The results have been most unusual."

Ray Owes His Fame to Screen

DO the motion pictures develop great dramatic talent in themselves or are the outstanding figures of the screen contributed by the legitimate stage?

The statement of a well known actor this week to Arthur S. Kane of Kane Pictures, citing Charles Ray as an eminent example of a dramatic genius, developed by the screen itself, renews the discussion of the place of films in the arts, and attacks the general criticism that the big personalities of the screen have come, already mellowed in experience, from the legitimate stage.

"I have watched Charles Ray with the utmost care," declared the legitimate actor to President Kane in discussing the First National star. "The cinema has been rightly criticized by many members of my profession as a medium of artistic expression still in its infancy. In my opinion it is a medium which has been trying to make articulate the dramatic material natural to it. I have followed it closely and am forced to disagree with the general statement that the motion picture has developed, of itself, no great dramatic artist.

"It is with increasing pleasure that I have noted the progress of Charles Ray in motion pictures. I have put him through elaborate, rhythmical, technical analysis, as to his art, and find more of him in each picture, yet none of him in each part. He is a true actor; he is my idea of a clean, well thought-out actor.

In commenting on this opinion of a member of the legitimate stage regarding Charles Ray as purely a product of the motion pictures, Arthus S. Kane declared that the artistic future of the screen was not only a matter of the better story, but required in addition the better actor, so that the demands of the country for high-class entertainment might be met on all counts.

Arthur S. Kane

"On every hand we hear that production is being curtailed," declared President Kane in a statement. "The slogan has become fewer pictures and better ones. With the movement for longer runs in the picture houses, it becomes necessary to furnish exhibitors with large scale productions that merit a run extending over a week or two weeks or a month.

"This demand is being met with the acquisition of great story material, with absorbing plot and good characterization. A legitimate show cannot hold the boards without a good artistic reason. The machine-made dramas of Broadway meet exactly the same fate that the machine-made products of the studio receive. To achieve longer runs we must first achieve stronger photo-dramas, and we are going a long way in this direction by taking over successful stage plays whose stories are well adapted to picturization, also by making into screen plays the novels and literary works that have earned attention and interest by their literary merit.

"However, just as the stage play requires a strong personality, an actor of finesse, to carry the dramatic material, so the screen will find in its approach to dramatic perfection the need for great interpreters of the unspoken drama. The opinion of a well known legitimate actor states that the screen is developing its very own talent, and that it is untrue we must depend upon recruits from the successful stage people.

"Motion pictures are a dramatic art in themselves. Their development has been little short of miraculous, until now the most gorgeous temples of amusement in the land are dedicated to their use. The pictures are giving us expert apostles of pantomime, risen from the ranks of screen players and devoted exclusively to this art. The citation of Charles Ray as an eminent example of an actor who owes his present dramatic position to a long apprenticeship in the films is limiting the proofs of the proposition, for there are others in a similar position.

"Charles Ray has been chosen because he, more than any other, expresses a particular art, of universal response and appreciation. He has struck the human note of the screen and stands as an artist who has done a great deal to elevate the industry in this respect. The call will henceforth be even more insistent for skilled, accomplished interpreters of the unspoken drama. Lessened production calling for longer runs in the theatres means that producers must justify their assumption that their photoplays merit runs equalling very often those of stage plays in the same theatre."

Louise Glaum at Work on Her New Vehicle

Louise Glaum on her arrival in Los Angeles, was greeted by a number of newspaper people, friends and studio associates, among them A. Lincoln Hart, who is production manager for J. Parker Read, Jr.

Production is said to have commenced at once on a new Glaum vehicle, the idea for which was purchased by Read and developed by Louis Joseph Vance in New York.

A new director, whose name has not yet been divulged, has been named by Read to direct Louise Glaum in her new vehicle, and casting has been going on by telegraphic communication for the past fortnight, it is stated.

"The Lost City" Gets Chicago Showing

The Celebrated Players Film Corporation, through its president, Joseph L. Friedman, was the host on last Tuesday to more than three hundred exhibitors and press reviewers, who attended a private showing of "The Lost City" in the Red Ball Room of the La Salle Hotel. Those present were very favorably impressed by the serial, many declaring that it belongs properly in the feature class. A showing of the "Gumps Animated Cartoons" also evoked much laughter on the part of the audience. A luncheon followed the pictures. An orchestra furnished an excellent musical program for the occasion.

Drew Comedy is Booked Throughout Country

Announcement of the release of the second comedy of the Mrs. Sidney Drew series on April 18 finds many first-class houses throughout the country under the contract for the series of six pictures, according to reports received at the Pathe Exchange. The second comedy is "The Stimulating Mrs. Barton" and, as in the first, John Cumberland is featured.

Pathe Feature Breaks Records

EDGAR LEWIS'S heart throbbing special, "Other Men's Shoes," has been responsible for the smashing of record after record hung up by Pathe Exchange, Inc., on its big specials, but none has been more noteworthy than the feat just accomplished with this attraction by the Chicago branch. One month after release date, and following the showing of the production in the leading Chicago first run theatres, the Windy City office, on March 4, reported to the Home Office the booking of another 150 days in first and second run theatres in its territory. The total number of days received thus far by Chicago on the Lewis production is now 480.

Outside of Chicago proper "Other Men's Shoes" was booked during the drive conducted by Manager E. A. Eschmann, and which will continue throughout March, to the following theatres:

Hartley, East Chicago; Orpheum, Ottawa, Ill.; Empress, Peoria; Empire, Auburn, Ind.; Lyceum, Columbia City, Ind.; Palace, Muscatine, Ia.; Grand Opera House, Dubuque, Ia.; Colonial, Delavan, Ill.; Wigwam, Geneseo, Ill.; Lincoln, Ill.; Temple, Mishawaka, Ind.; De-Luxe, Lake Forest, Ill.; LaSalle, South Bend, Ind.; Orpheum, Elkhart, Ind.; Garden, Michigan City, Ind.; Princess, Monticello, Ill.; Riviera, Peru, Ill.

"Other Men's Shoes" Booked Heavily in Chicago

The local houses booking the picture included: Delphi, Clark, Bowen, Shakespere, Kimbark, Lucille, Ben Hur, Victory, Stanley, Marshall Square, Vernon, Prairie, New Home, Illington, Broadway Strand, Atlantic, Boulevard, Halfield, Archer and Ewing.

In all other territories "Other Men's Shoes" is surpassing the records established by any previous Pathe Special, not excepting "The Thirteenth Chair," "Common Clay," or any of Pathe's biggest money-makers.

Among the theatres booking the production during the past week there were: The William Penn, Chester, Pa.; Palace, Ardmore; Grand, Pullman, Washington, D. C.; Paramount, Lewiston, Idaho; Empress, Spokane; Rialto, Loveland, Colo.; Strand, Shelbyville, Ind.; Luna-Lite, Marion, Ind.; Majestic, Florence, Ala.; Rex, Bismarck, N. D.; Opera House, Wadsworth, O.; Valentince, Defiance, O.; Royal, Upper Sandusky; Playhouse, Dover, N. J.; Empire, Rahway, N. J.; Avenue, Elizabeth, N. J.; Delphi, Detroit; Miami, Detroit; Wuerth, Ann Arbor; Crystal, Detroit; Lakewood, Detroit; Majestic, Charleston, Pa.; Family, St. Mary, Pa.; Park, Franklin, Pa.; Palace, Hamilton, O.; Auditorium, Dayton; Rex, Middleton, O.; Linthonian, Little Falls, N. Y.; Maetin, Globe, Ariz.; Forepaw's, Philadelphia; Poli's, Wilkesbarre, Pa.; Opera House, South Bethlehem; and a host of other theatres.

Already the minimum quota for "Other Men's Shoes" has been surpassed by virtually every exchange and the indications are that within a fortnight each branch will have passed the high mark.

Next Keenan Picture Has Moral Lesson

The next Frank Keenan picture will be another big moral lesson on the screen full of the drama and philosophy for which this actor's productions are noted. It will be released under the title "Dollar for Dollar," and reports of the first screening of the picture indicate that it will prove to be a success.

One of the thrills in "Trailed by Three," with Frankie Mann and Stuart Holmes the Beck serial to be released by Pathe.

Rapid Sales Reported by Great Western

Rapid sales have been reported to have been made on the Emmett Dalton two-reel westerns produced in California by the Great Western Pictures Corp., and releasing to the independent field through Film Specials, New York. Mr. Dalton is scheduled, according to the plans of the company, to make twelve productions. The first three, "Across the Chasm," "When a Man's a Pal" and "The Desert Man" are ready for release. The entire series were written by William Addison Lathrop. The sales reported covering all the productions are as follows: Virginia, N. Carolina, to Trueart Pictures, Richmond, Va.; Georgia, Florida, Alabama, So. Carolina, to Exhibitors' Booking Association of Jacksonville, Florida; Texas, Oklahoma, Arkansas, to Specialty Film Co., of Dallas; and to First National of Louisville, was sold Kentucky and Tennessee.

Full Vaudeville Bill Shown on Screen

The latest in the film field is the appearance on the screen of a regular vaudeville bill shown in Universal Educational's new reel, "Vaudograph." The stars in the one-reel "Vaudograph," according to Harry Levey, managing director of Universal's Educational Department, comprise five big headline vaudeville acts now playing on B. F. Keith's Orpheum Circuit.

Those who will lead both a celluloid and vaudeville stage existence for the next few months are Ted Lewis, King of Jazz; The Cameron Sisters; The World-Renowned Mosconi Family; The All Star Trio and George and Dick Rath, now appearing at the Winter Garden in New York.

Earle Williams Starts on "The Three Keys"

Following his completion at the Hollywood studio, of exterior scenes for "Captain Swift" the interiors of which he made at the Brooklyn studio, Earle Williams, the Vitagraph star, has begun active production on his first feature on the coast since his return.

His new vehicle is "The Three Keys," adapted from the novel by Frederic Van Rennselaer Dey. The scenario was written by H. Thompson Rich and Lucien Hubbard.

Robertson-Cole Re-Signs "Jap"

Sessue Hayakawa Signs Agreement Covering Next Four Years

NEARING the end of a succession of dramatic triumphs which have proved him one of the most talented screen actors, Sessue Hayakawa has just closed a new contract with Robertson-Cole, which will cover the next four years and give him opportunity to make pictures even greater than any in which he has starred in the past. Within a short time the new contract will go into effect, and soon after that Robertson-Cole will announce the title and nature of the first of the new productions.

According to the terms of the new contract Hayakawa will make only four pictures each year. From four to five months will be devoted to one of the four with the purpose of making it a super-feature of a standard never surpassed, says Robertson-Cole. Money, time and care will be expended so that these productions of the next four years will be the greatest of Hayakawa's career. The best of direction, deliberate casting, careful selection of locations, and close scrutiny of all stories wil be some of the elements which will contribute to the success of these pictures announces Robertson-Cole.

Commenting on the close of the present engagement of Hayakawa with Robertson-Cole, a statement from the offices of that organization expresses the opinion that the star has firmly established himself, as one of the most remarkable figures of the screen world. "With all the teachings and lore of the Orient at his back, says Robertson-Cole, Hayakawa completed his education in America. Here, he assimilated the American spirit and American culture without losing any of his Eastern outlook. Consequently he is not only the best actor of Oriental roles but a producer, whose judgment on Eastern matters is unparalleled. In many of his Robertson-Cole pictures he has personally assisted his director in obtaining the very faithful atmospheres, which have made his pictures so successful.

"Through his Robertson-Cole productions, which have been made at the Haworth Studios, Hayakawa has found a world-audience. It is his determination to fix himself in the good will of his audience, by even greater pains and care during the years which are still ahead.

"After a stage career in the Far East, Hayakawa came to America, where he began acting for the screen. The finish of his acting and his fine photographic personality won the attention of leading directors. He became widely known through his work in 'The Cheat', in which he appeared with Fannie Ward. 'The Typhoon', 'The Bottle Imp', and other pictures continued his success and stamped him one of the best artists of his class.

Sessue Hayakawa, who has signed again with Robertson-Cole for the next four years

"Somewhat more than a year ago, Haworth closed a contract with Robertson-Cole for the release of Hayakawa pictures. Officials of this producing company have carefully studied the work of the famous star. Regarding it one of them said recently: I consider Hayakawa's personality one of the strongest on the present day screen. He should be given parts which allow him to assert himself vigorously. By this I mean, he should either be a hero of an especially strenuous type or he should be allowed parts which border on the heavy.

"Beginning his Robertson-Cole career by a remarkable series in 'Bonds of Honor', Hayakawa continued in 'A Heart in Pawn', 'The Courageous Coward', 'His Debt', 'The Illustrious Prince', 'The Man Beneath', 'The Dragon Daughter', and 'The Gray Horizon'. In 'The Tong Man' he gave a character portrayal, which has caused comment throughout the entire country, and in 'The Beggar Prince', a fantastical picture of great beauty."

"Comedyart" Release Soon

Pre-view Showing of 2000 Feet Held; to Be Released March 28

THE first "Comedyart" release of the newly formed Special Pictures Corporation has been edited, cut and titled and is ready for release on March 28. A pre-view showing of the first 2000 foot reel, which includes comedy, novelty, and scenic features, was given this week to representatives of the motion picture press in Los Angeles. The reel includes a 1400 foot comedy, "Uneasy Feet," a 400 foot scenic, "God's Country", and a novelty of 200 feet "Memorial"

"Uneasy Feet" is a decided novelty in screen comedies. Not a single face is shown until the end of the picture, and there is not one subtitle in the entire 1400 feet. Director Ward Lascalle has told the entire story simply by the use of the nether extremities. It is full of laughs, and has a surprise ending that gives the spectator a tremendous wallop.

"God's Country" colored by the Handschiegl process shows Zion Canyon, Utah, which many outdoor critics claim is superior in scenic beauty to the Grand Canyon of Arizona. The scenic contains some of the most picturesque mountain and canyon scenery that has ever been projected on the silver sheet.

The "Memories" film of the March 28 issue pictures the barroom of the "Good Old Days?" with the boys making merry over their [illegible] and later shows the same barroom de-alcholized into an ice cream parlor.

Radin Pictures Enters State Rights Field

One of the new companies to make its appearance in the independent market is the Radin Pictures, which this week makes its bow to the States right buyers of the country under the guidance of Matthias Radin, president and general manager of Tyrad Pictures, Inc. This announcement does not mean that Mr. Radin has retired from the Tyrad organization. He still continues as its active head and will operate the Radin Pictures entirely apart from Tyrad, handling separate and distinct product through the latter named company, so that the two will in no way conflict.

The first feature to be offered state right buyers by Radin Pictures is a five-part drama of mystery featuring Frank Mayo, Ben Alexander and Claire MacDowell, entitled "Thru the Eyes of Men."

Many New York Houses Book Louise Glaum

Manager Nathan, of the Hodkinson New York Exchange, reports contracts on J. Parker Read Jr.'s Louise Glaum picture, "The Lone Wolf's Daughter," for presentation on the entire Sydney S. Cohen circuit, which has already started a big 24-sheet poster campaign in the Bronx; for Moss' Hamilton, the Charles Steiner circuit, the M. & S. circuit, the latter having arranged for extended engagements at all its houses. The Cohen circuit has also contracted for Zane Grey's "Desert Gold," "The Capitol," starring Leah Baird, "His Temporary Wife" and J. Warren Kerrigan's "Live Sparks."

Good Characterizations Mark Baird Vehicle

In commenting on the attractive features of the new Leah Baird's starring vehicle, "Cynthia-of-the-Minute," the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation expresses the opinion that one of its strongest points is "its wealth of superb characterizations contributed by the finest cast ever selected to support Miss Baird. With big, human roles to portray and a star, known to picture players generally as one of the few celebrities who do not seek to monopolize all the glory of a production, such distinguished actors as Burr McIntosh, Hugh Thompson, Aleaxnder Gaden and Ruby Hoffman found opportunities galore to win individual triumphs only scarcely less noteworthy than Miss Baird's 'Cynthia-of-the-Minute.'"

"Flying A" Special is under Production

"The House of Toys," a society drama, is the "Flying A" special now under production at the Santa Barbara studio of the American Film Company. Daniel F. Whitcomb, himself the author of numerous original film stories and continuities, adapted the popular novel by Henry Russell Miller, and George L. Cox is directing the filming of this new photo novel. Assisting Mr. Cox is Sidney Algier, and S. A. Baldridge, who is responsible for the interiors in "The Honey Bee," is the technical director.

"Aphrodite" Star in Film

Dorothy Dalton Starts on "This Man—This Woman," Hopwood Play

Marguerite Clark in "Easy to Get," a Paramount-Artcraft picture

AFTER a vacation of two weeks Dorothy Dalton has commenced work again at the Fifty-sixth Street studio of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. She is still occupied with the stage production of "Aphrodite," which keeps her busy nights and matinee days. The title of the picture is 'This Woman—This Man" by Avery Hopwood.

"This Woman—This Man" was produced in 1908 with Carlotta Nillson in the leading role. It is one of the first plays written by Avery Hopwood, author of the "Gold Diggers," which is making such a big success in New York at present. He also wrote "Letty" and "Nobody's Widow" and collaborated with Mary Roberts Rinehart on "Seven Days."

Miss Dalton and Harley Knoles, who will direct, are enthusiastic about the story. The adaptation for the screen was done at Rosina Henley who was associated with Mr. Knoles in producing "Little Women." Mr. Knoles regards the story as having the most human appeal of any he has ever done, even eclipsing "Little Women."

The cast selected is made up of a number of well known people of the stage and screen. Among them are Edward Langford, leading man; Augusta Anderson, Julia R. Hurley, Charles Lane, Henry J. Carvill, Douglass Redmond and Ivy Ward.

Miss Traverse in New Role

William Fox Star to Be Featured in Roles Other Than Society Type

ANNOUNCEMENT is made from the executive offices of Fox Film Corporation that William Fox, president of the organization has decided to equip his star Madlaine Traverse with a type of role distinctly different from that in which she has been playing.

During the past two years Miss Traverse has been given a series of roles of the society type, such as her talents, her figure and her taste in dress naturally suggest. Her work, however, in the recent production "The Hell Ship" has convinced Mr. Fox that she possesses an ability which reaches far beyond the confines of the drawing room. As the daughter of a sea captain in this drama the producer discovered a new side to the abilities of the star, and for this reason has decided upon a series of new roles for her.

The first of the new parts selected for Miss Traverse will be found in the production upon which she has just started work at the studios in Hollywood. The story is known by the working title "The Spirit of Good" and offers the star role of a music-hall singer. The title will probably be charged before release. The story is said to deal with the uplift of the fallen and to enable Miss Traverse to draw on her versatility of character design and make-up.

Denison Clift, the author-director, who made his debut in the directorial field in staging "The Last Straw" with Buck Jones as the star and recently completed his second Fox picture, "The Iron Heart" with Miss Traverse will again direct the actress. Mr. Clift has written several successful vehicles for her and the success of each has been credited primarily to the fact that the author has studied carefully the temperament of the actress, her non-professional self and her work in the various roles she has assumed. Among some of the stories he has written for Miss Traverse are such popular films as "What Would You Do?" "Lost Money" and "The Hell Ship."

Republic Managers To Attend Convention

Managers of the Republic branch offices are to be included in the second annual convention of the Selznick managers which will be held at the Astor Hotel, New York, beginning April 5, according to an announcement made this week by Briton N. Busch, president of the Republic Corporation.

This decision was reached after a conference held last week by Lewis J. Selznick, Mr Morris and Briton Busch. In view of the fact that the topics of discussion at the convention will deal largely with the expansion of the Selznick interests it was deemed advisable to bring together the representatives of the Republic organization with those representing the Select interests.

Appreciation of the money-getting power of "Nothing But the Truth," produced by Taylor Holmes Productions, Inc., is voiced in a letter from Frank N. Haff, of the Swanton Amusement Company, Inc., to Metro Pictures Corporation, which is distributing the pictures.

"Nothing But the Truth" is the screen version of William Collier's stage success written by James Montgomery from Frederic S. Isham's novel. In its third incarnation, as a screen production with Taylor Holmes in Collier's part, it seems to be going better than ever before.

United Acquires Rights to "Face to Face"

President J. A. Berst, of United Picture Productions Corporation, announces that his organization has purchased the releasing rights to "Face to Face." United believes that this photodrama tells one of the most unusual stories ever published, working up to a climax that it is impossible to fathom until the very last few feet of film. So mysterious is the story of who killed John Weston that United is going to back up exhibitors in offering a large money prize to anyone, who, after seeing the first four reels, is able to pick the guilty party.

Producers Confident of "The Harvest Moon"

Theodore C. Deitrich and Arthur F. Beck, producers of the new Gibraltar picture, Augustus Thomas' "The Harvest Moon," starring Doris Kenyon, for W. W. Hodkinson distribution, are confident that their new production will take its place among the recognizably big pictures of the year.

Besides Miss Kenyon, the cast includes Earl Schenck, Grace Barton, Daniel Pennell, Marie Shotwell, Mrs. E. M. Holland, widow of the famous actor, and Ellen Olesen, the Swedish stage celebrity whose work is confined to the Normandy scenes of "The Harvest Moon."

Sawyer to Visit South American Centers

Chester E. Sawyer, of David P. Howells, Inc., sailed on the Vauban on March 17 for South American film centers to conclude negotiation for rights to recent First National Exhibitors' Circuit attractions. Before joining David P. Howells, Inc., Mr. Sawyer organized the Caribbean Film Company, which operates theatres and distributes pictures in Cuba and the West Indies.

Equity Announces Two New Productions

Equity Pictures Corporation announces the last two of the first series of Clara Kimball Young productions of the coming year. The first of the series are "Eyes of Youth" and "The Forbidden Woman." The next two units will be "For the Soul of Rafael," which is now in the making, and Sir Arthur Wing Pinero's "Mid-Channel," which will be made in the summer at the Garson Studios, Los Angeles.

"Fatty" is Coming in Features

IN response to the insistent demands of exhibitors, who for a long time have wanted him to appear in feature pictures, Roscoe (Fatty) Arbuckle has just signed a three year contract with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation to appear hereafter only in five-reel feature comedy productions as a Paramount-Artcraft star.

Mr. Arbuckle's new contract not only will bring him into five-reel comedy features exclusively but also adds another to the list of Paramount-Artcraft stars. In the past Mr. Arbuckle has been producing for himself, under the name of the Comique Film Corporation, of which Joseph M. Schenck is president and general manager.

Mr. Arbuckle has just returned to Los Angeles, after having been in conference with his manager, Mr. Schenck, and representative of Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, in charge of production. The upshot of these conferences was that Mr. Arbuckle signed a contract for three years, during which time he will devote his screen activities exclusively to five-reel feature comedies.

ing the last two seasons Arbuckle's popularity has increased greatly. Indeed, the fat comedian is said to have become such a box-office attraction that an increasingly large number of exhibitors have advertised the Arbuckle comedies as features. This tendency placed the exhibitors in the position of paying for feature productions and then being obliged to bury their features under heavy advertising of the two-reel Arbuckle comedies. An instance of this growing policy was given recently on Broadway when the four biggest Broadway motion picture theatres played the Paramount-Arbuckle comedy, "The Garage," for a week, and advertised it over their feature productions.

Mr. Arbuckle will begin work at once in the Lasky studio at Hollywood. Several well-known stories, unusually well-adapted to his talents, are being considered, and preparations are being made to give each of the new Arbuckle features a lavishness of production that will make them unique in film comedies.

Because of the great care and attention given to the production of Paramount-Arbuckle comedies, only three of these two-reel subjects have been released since last September. These are "Back Stage," "The Hayseed" and "The Garage."

Arbuckle's first picture for Paramount was "The Butcher Boy." Then followed "A Reckless Romeo." "His Wedding Night," "Out West," "Fatty at Coney Island," "A Country Hero," "The Rough House," "Oh, Doctor," "Moonshine," "The Bell Boy," and others.

Cartoon Creator Signs Up with F. P. Lasky

"Pat" Sullivan, creator of "Felix, the Cat," and other animated comics, has signed a long-term contract with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation to make cartoons for the Paramount Magazine. Outside of Bobbie Bumps, Sullivan's cat, Felix, is one of the best known characters of the motion-picture comics, and its antics have had a record run at leading houses throughout the country.

Sullivan hails from Sydney, Australia, but he left the Antipodes before attaining full maturity to continue his art studies in Paris and London. Subsequently he came to America, where he drew cartoons for leading publications, notably the McClure Syndicate and the Evening World. His most recent cartoon of "Felix" will be released in the Paramount Magazine of March 28.

Educational Acquires Stereospeed Films

A few weeks ago an announcement appeared wherein Johnson and Hopkins Company reported that a series of stereospeed pictures, the output of Earle Emlay's new stereospeed camera, would soon be put on the market. Within a week E. W. Hammonds, vice-president of the Educational Films, had completed negotiations for the exclusive distribution rights on these subjects, it is stated. The contract provides for the weekly release of 500 ft. for the next year.

The Educational releases will embrace a great array of novelties and humorous subjects, it is reported. The action of this new series is said to be depicted twenty-four times as slowly as in real life, and this fact is expected to assure an immediate response on the part of all theatregoers.

Success Greets Latest Alice Joyce Release

Following its feature run at the Broadway Theatre in New York, the Vitagraph super-feature, "The Sporting Duchess," of which Alice Joyce is the star, is reported to be making good headway from a booking standpoint.

In many localities "The Sporting Duchess" has been booked to succeed Vitagraph's other current feature, "The Fortune Hunter" of which Earle Williams is star. A notable fact relating to "The Sporting Duchess" is that an unusually large number of chain theatres have booked it.

To Tie-Up Picture With Old Comedy Revival

"Those were the happy days," say the theatrical producers who are reviving the "Florodora" of two decades ago and cashing in on the sentiment which invariably accompanies a comedy revival from the unforgettable yesteryear. And the ever-alert exploitation men, who are already looking ahead to the publicity value of Charles Ray's forthcoming First National production, "Forty-five Minutes from Broadway," are planning to tie up the photoplay with the renewed interest in "Florodora."

United Plans Poster Campaign

Company's Paper to Be Placed Throughout Many States

ONE of the most extensive, elaborate and far-reaching poster advertising campaigns ever put over by any motion picture organization is about to be launched by the United Picture Productions Corporation, according to announcement of that company.

Contracts have just been signed with the Poster Display Company by which United paper will be posted in considerable quantity in the territories covered by the organizations' twenty-four branch offices, including Atlanta, Ga.; Boston, Mass.; Buffalo, N. Y.; Chicago, Ill.; Cincinnati, Ohio; Cleveland Ohio; Dallas, Texas; Denver, Colo.; Detroit, Mich.; Kansas City, Mo.; Los Angeles, Calif.; Milwaukee, Wis.; Minneapolis, Minn.; New Haven, Conn.; New Orleans, La.; New York, N. Y.; Omaha, Neb.; Philadelphia, Pa.; Pittsburg, Pa.; St. Louis, Mo.; Salt Lake City, Utah; San Francisco, Calif.; Seattle, Wash., and Washington, D. C.

Because of the great scarcity of stands, it is quite possible that no other organization will be able to inaugurate and put over such a campaign. It was through the foresightedness of President J. A. Berst and the United officials that arrangements were made whereby the signing of the poster advertising contracts was made possible.

For some time United officials have been planning and preparing to give all exhibitors who book United attractions the benefit of a most comprehensive exploitation campaign. The signing of the contracts for the use of many thousands of "stands" throughout the country is one of the results of this planning which is to be part of United's national advertising and publicity campaign designed and to be carried out for the direct benefit of every theatre in the country which is served by the United organization.

The unusually large contract covers a period of twelve months. During each of these months, various sized posters will be posted with twenty-four sheets predominating. The contract of course calls for frequent changing of paper and is is planned to put on the boards all over the United States some of the finest paper ever posted. Special artists are now at work on the first of the designs for the posters, the lithographing will be done by one of the foremost concerns in the business and it is expected that the completed product will be the kind of paper that "talks right out from the boards" for every exhibitor fortunate enough to be getting United Picture Exchange service.

President J. A. Berst and his associates believe that by talking directly to the public by means of billboards, newspapers and other media that comes directly before the eyes of the theatregoer they can best be of real help to the exhibitor. The "fan" is the ultimate consumer and to help the exhibitor interest the "fan" and get him to patronize his theatre is what the up-to-date motion picture theatre manager wants and most appreciates. That is the reason the United Picture Exchanges have signed contracts running into what is probably the largest amount ever spent by a motion picture concern for poster advertising.

The first consignment of paper under this contract will be on the boards in the very near future. From then on for the next twelve months, United features will be advertised by this means all over the country. The territory surrounding each of the twenty-four branch exchanges will be thoroughly covered —the city itself and the outlying districts—in fact all of the territory served by each branch office will be covered so that each and every theatre served by United in each and every territory will be benefitted by this comprehensive advertising campaign.

It is expected that President Berst will have other announcements to make regarding exploitation and advertising plans of United within a short time.

Three Large Circuits Book Realart Films

The ranks of big circuits booking Realart's specials was swelled this week by the addition of Rubin and Finkelstein, the dominant Twin City exhibitors, Jensen and Von Gerberg, the important Northwestern circuit, and Poli's chain of theatres in New England. "The Luck of the Irish," an Allan Dwan production, and "The Mystery of the Yellow Room," an Emile Chautard production, are the two features that have been booked.

Paramount-Artcraft Releases Two Comedies

Robert Warwick in "Jack Straw" and Dorothy Gish in "Mary Ellen Comes to Town" are the Paramount-Artcraft feature releases for March 14. Both the comedies, the first named being an adaptation of W. Somerset Vaughan's stage play in which John Drew starred with great success, and the Gish picture being from an original story by Helen G. Smith.

As adapted by Olga Printzlau, the central figure of "Jack Straw" is an iceman who falls in love with one of his customers, the pretty daughter of a hard-working clerk and a mother with social ambitions. As Mr. Warwick's leading woman, Carroll McComas, erstwhile stage favorite, was chosen, this being her first appearance in pictures in several years.

Ralph Graves is Miss Gish's leading man, and the support includes such well-known players as Adolphe Lestina, Charles Gerrard, Kate Bruce, Raymond Cannon, Rhea Haines.

"Dangerous Days" Pulls Well at the Strand

The Strand Theatre, New York, is showing Mary Roberts Rinehart's picture "Dangerous Days" produced by Goldwyn as an Eminent Authors Picture and a Reginald Barker production. This is the second Eminent Authors Picture shown at the Strand in two weeks; the first one being Leroy Scott's "Partners of the Night." "Dangerous Days" is regarded as one of the finest pictures that has been brought to the screen this year and is said to be proving a great box office attraction at the Strand. Mary Roberts Rinehart's own genius is evident both in the adaptation of the story and the subtitles, all of which she wrote herself.

Gilmore Will Star in "Isle of Destiny"

The first of the new series of Character Pictures will be "The Isle of Destiny," from the popular work of Mack Arthur. Paul Gilmore, well known stage star, who was recently signed by Character Pictures, will be featured in the production which will be his first vehicle for the company.

Ralph Ince, director of Selznick pictures

Two scenes from "Sex," a J. Parker Read, Jr., production, starring Louise Glaum and distributed by W. W. Hodkinson

"Sex" Features Louise Glaum

THE W. W. Hodkinson Corporation states that J. Parker Read's presentation of Louise Glaum in "Sex," due for release in April, brings to the screen a tremendous money-making production. The W. W. Hodkinson organization will distribute the picture which was written by C. Gardner Sullivan and directed by Fred Niblo, by special arrangement with Thomas H. Ince. An advertising campaign of extensive proportions is promised by the Hodkinson Corporation for this picture. In connection with the forthcoming release of this new production, the W. W. Hodkinson has issued the following statement:

"Sex" is the drama of the sorrow and suffering that refines the soul of woman; the drama of experience without which no life is complete and of the great unknown, the great gamble that is life. It ranges from being before the eyes of audiences a drama of a hundred persons, these hundreds being typical of millions of men and women throughout the world. In a flash it narrows down to the life of two or three persons who live within reach and touch of your elbow.

In color, in crowd, in costuming it has the touch and richness of pageantry at moments and the next is confined with terrific force to the picture of two women fighting the battle of their lives for their happiness. C. Gardner Sullivan reveals the genius of the dramatist in his choice of a title. "Sex" is not the physical in life, but has been made to throb and live by Louise Glaum as the great allure; the great appeal of love, of heart-hunger.

Louise Glaum shows the liberality and democracy that have been responsible for her great success in the past year in the excellence of the cast of supporting players that she and Mr. Read have engaged for this production. These players themselves have established popularity and followings in the screen theatres of the world and an engaging star has bid them take every ounce of values out of their roles in direct and unrestricted rivalry with herself. Her supporting cast includes Myrtle Stedman, many times starred on the screen; Peggy Pearce, Irving Cummings, often acclaimed in pictures as a star, co-star and featured leading player, and William Conklin, a finished actor with a score of successes to his credit.

J. Parker Read, Jr., again reveals his fine intelligence; his knowledge and appreciation of refinement and technical organization in "Sex." It was these elements that made "Sahara" instantly successful last year and stamped its producer as a top-rank maker of splendid pictures. He repeated this success in increased measure with "The Lone Wolf's Daughter" by Louis Joseph Vance, which since its release in early December has been a record-making picture.

Advertising Campaign Planned; Hodkinson Issues Statement

The W. W. Hodkinson organization has distributed the J. Parker Read, Jr., productions under the selective system of distribution. Each picture has received the attention of specialists. Each one has been kept free and clear of other pictures and handled as if it were the only picture to which the organization was devoting its nation-wide energies. "Sex" now in its turn receives such promotion and management. The picture is not available except in its most restricted form as of April 11. It is protected against such rush showings or imperfect exploitation by being turned over only to such first runs as guarantee it exclusive and liberal showmanship of the highest grade of advertising of the most expansive character. Each pre-release showman who gives it such treatment receives an ample period of protection

Mayflower Aids in Drive

Makes Special Effort to Advance Its Product Released by Realart

WHAT is believed to be a precedent in motion picture exploitation has recently been established by the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation for the promotion of pictures presented by Mayflower through the Realart Pictures Corporation. Under the direction of John W. McKay, general manager of distribution, Mayflower has launched an extensive exploitation campaign as a result of which exhibitors showing the Mayflower product will be afforded the personal services of a corps of exploitation experts. "This, it is believed, is the first time an organization devoting itself exclusively to production has taken such vigirous steps toward assisting exhibitors to promote its product," says the Mayflower Corporation.

Manager McKay is now getting his staff of exploitation men into the field and it is expected that within a few days, Mayflower will have at least twelve publicity representatives co-operating with exhibitors in all parts of the country. Realart will lend every possible co-operation in carrying out this plan, in order to stimulate box office activity all along the line, it is stated.

McKay's men will work in conjunction with Realart's exchange managers, covering all key cities and contiguous territory with elaborate exploitation drives. It is asserted that each exhibitor will be favored with individual attention and campaigns especially suited to his particular requirements will be outlined and put into effect through co-operative work between the exhibitor and the exploitation man working that particular territory.

At present, Manager McKay's forces will concentrate on Allan Dwan's "Luck of the Irish," being handled through Realart, and Emile Chautard's "Mystery of the Yellow Room," also under the Realart banner.

Corinne Griffith in the Vitagraph production, "The Garter Girl"

O. Henry Title Is Changed

Vitagraph Names Latest Corinne Griffith Feature "Garter Girl"

BY the kick of her foot while sailing over the heads of an audience, Corinne Griffith, the Vitagraph star, the other day changed the name of her newest picture. The feature is an adaptation of the famous story by O. Henry entitled "The Memento," and it had gone half way into its celluloid life under that title, until Miss Griffith's foot and the four hundred eyes of the upward gazing audience changed it. "The Garter Girl" is now its name, and "The Garter Girl" is likely to be the pseudonym of Miss Griffith for some time to come.

The star had aerial experience in the old Irving Place Theatre, at Irving Place and Fifteenth street, New York. She sailed in a little trapeze suspended from a slack wire from the stage to the first balcony, singing and gesturing and flipping her pretty feet. Midway across the sea of faces, while five cameras cranked and three spotlights bathed the girl in wondrous glow, she flipped loose the garter on her right limb, and sent it fluttering into the throng below. There was a scramble of sedate men and active youths.

Two hundred regular film players of various types were engaged for the audience. They played their parts with a degree of appreciation that would fill the hearts of stage players with wistful envy.

Edward Griffith, who is directing the production, believes that more numerous and original lighting effects have been accomplished in the theatre scenes than ever have been taken in a similar setting.

Ray Gets Technical Experts

George E. MacCormac and Frank Ormston Are Added to His Staff

WITH the addition of several well known technical men to his staff this week, Charles Ray has completed the organization of his studio personnel, and he has commenced to work on the introductory details incident to production at his new Los Angeles studios.

Mr. Ray who is entering upon a new era in his screen career, having begun independent production under the direction of Arthur S. Kane for release through First National, has gathered to his organization a staff of high priced technical experts, every member of which is well known in the industry.

The star declares that he will spare no expense to make his independent films of the highest standard possible, not only to justify his position as an independent producer but to merit the faith which his sponsors have placed in him in their promises to the exhibitors of the country.

In addition to director Jerome Storm, camera man Chester Lyons, studio manager Wesley Gilmour, and continuity writer Isabel Johnston, Mr. Ray has appointed this week George E. MacCormac, formerly with Famous Players, as chief of the electrical department; and Mr. Frank Ormston as head of the art department.

Mr MacCormac has recently completed a year and a half of service with Famous Players Lasky as head of that corporation's electrical department, and he brings to the new concern undisputed talents in devising novel and startling lighting effects. Mr. MacCormac has had entire supervision of the wiring of Mr. Ray's Fleming street studios. An experimental laboratory has been built adjoining the plant where Mr. MacCormac expects to try out several original departures from modern methods of lighting.

The second addition to the Ray studios announced this week is Mr. Frank Ormston who will take charge of the Art Department. Mr. Ormston comes of a family of painters, and in addition to his studio work he is, in private life, an artist of note. Mr. Ormston has been connected with theatricals for many years, having commenced as an apprentice to the scenic artist, John H. Young.

Coast Studio Sought by Gibraltar Pictures

Arthur F. Beck, president of Gibraltar Pictures, has been in negotiation for some time with the owners of desirable studio properties in Los Angeles, one of which is to be leased for the use of Leah Baird who left recently for the coast. Mr. Beck and Sidney Garret of J. Frank Brocklis, Inc., have also started for the coast and the studio deal will be closed upon Mr. Beck's arrival there.

Selznick Company Returns to New York

The members of the cast composing the company producing the special Selznick picture, "The Prince o' Pines," returned last week from New Hampshire, where they had been making the logging camp scenes for the picture. Work was immediately started on the interior scenes at the Selznick Bronx studios.

Feature Nears Completion

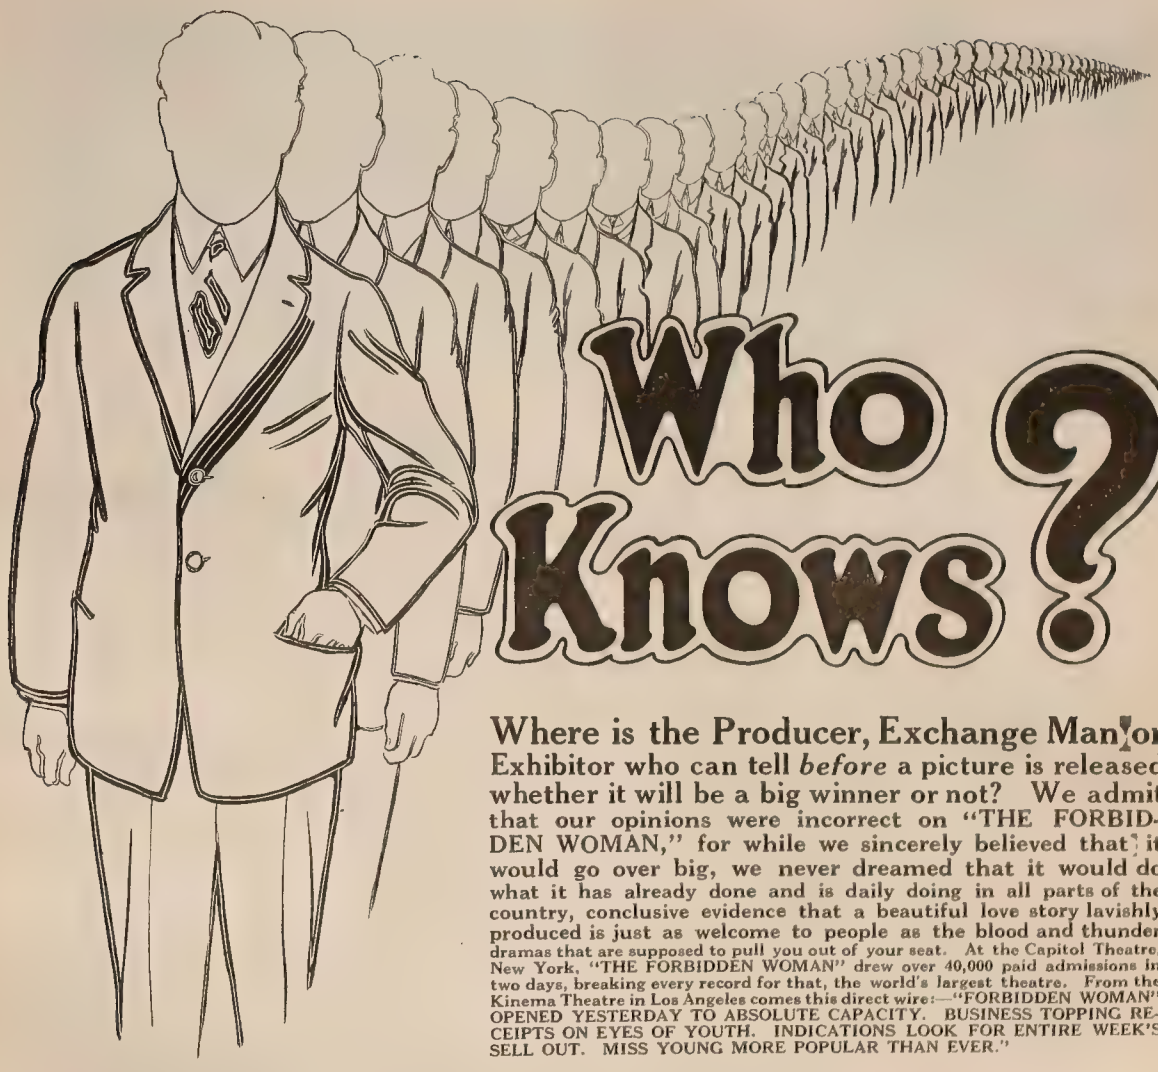
Picturization of Terhune Novel, "Flying A" Special, Ready Soon

"THE Thirtieth Piece of Silver," a new "Flying A" photonovel, is in the final stages of production. Special art work on the titles adds the last touch of perfection to a Special which gives the producers a great sense of satisfaction in anticipating its future.

The plot in itself is unusual, a product of the study of a well-known author, Albert Payson Terhune. The thirtieth piece of silver, which is the base of the story, is the only existant coin of those infamous thirty talents for which the Master was betrayed by Judas. This historical relic, locked away in a cabinet by its owner, with the preemptory order of a Bluebeard to his young bride forbidding her to go near it, works havoc in an otherwise ideal home. Around this incident is built one of the most unique plots on the silversheet. The action is said to be quick, compact and convincing, and the heroine is carried unscathed through compromising, but justifiable, predicaments, which ought to hold the spectators under tense excitement. Resort to a crystal gazer brings mystery and humor into the story in generous proportions.

A strong cast, which includes Margarita Fisher, King Baggot, Lillian Leighton and Forrest Stanley, has made an excellent picture of Mr. Terhune's novel. George L. Cox directed the production. The American announces that it will be ready for distribution in a few weeks.

Explain Neilan's Success



Free Hand to Produce as He Wished Made "River's End" Popular

AT the Marshall Neilan headquarters in New York last week, it was pointed out that the success of "The River's End," which is said to be breaking box-office records everywhere, is proof of the soundness of the policy of production instituted by the director-producer with the formation of his own company several months ago.

During his career of eight years as a director, it is stated, Mr. Neilan has formed several ideas affecting the production of motion pictures which are away from the beaten track. With the formation of his own producing organization last fall, Mr. Neilan was for the first time in his career, enabled to produce a picture as he felt it should be produced.

"'The River's End' took four months to produce. The average film company would have turned the picture out in two months. If the indications were evident that the film would take longer, it would have been hurried to get it finished 'on schedule' or to meet a certain release date.

"'The River's End' had no release date. Mr. Neilan gave no thought to its release. His ambition was to make a big picture, a film that would stand out as one of the real achievements of the year. Many modern facilities, involving the technical effects, were installed and experts placed in charge. For many months a location hunter was busy seeking the exteriors. A month was taken in selecting the cast. Each player was given more than ample time to familiarize himself or herself with the respective part. Sets were built with unusual care and study. Nothing was spared in time or money to get the most of James Oliver Curwood's wonderful story."

Who Knows?

Where is the Producer, Exchange Man or Exhibitor who can tell before a picture is released whether it will be a big winner or not? We admit that our opinions were incorrect on "THE FORBIDDEN WOMAN," for while we sincerely believed that it would go over big, we never dreamed that it would do what it has already done and is daily doing in all parts of the country, conclusive evidence that a beautiful love story lavishly produced is just as welcome to people as the blood and thunder dramas that are supposed to pull you out of your seat. At the Capitol Theatre, New York, "THE FORBIDDEN WOMAN" drew over 40,000 paid admissions in two days, breaking every record for that, the world's largest theatre. From the Kinema Theatre in Los Angeles comes this direct wire:—"FORBIDDEN WOMAN" OPENED YESTERDAY TO ABSOLUTE CAPACITY. BUSINESS TOPPING RECEIPTS ON EYES OF YOUTH. INDICATIONS LOOK FOR ENTIRE WEEK'S SELL OUT. MISS YOUNG MORE POPULAR THAN EVER."

And here's a follow-up wire received by the Manager of the Blue Mouse Theatre in Baltimore from its personal representative in New York: "JUST SAW CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG in 'THE FORBIDDEN WOMAN.' FOR SHEER BEAUTY SURPASSES ANYTHING I EVER SAW. SHOULD BE SENSATION AMONG FEMININE PATRONAGE" (Signed) B. L. Tolmas. With wire reports like this coming in daily from all sections of the country we must admit that our most sanguine expectations have been surpassed, so, we have quit guessing and will allow the PICTURE ITSELF to do all the talking. When a picture will pull over 40,000 paid admissions in two days we can't say anything more that will mean quite so much to you as that fact. All we urge you to do IS TO SEE "THE FORBIDDEN WOMAN" with your own eyes at your nearest Equity Franchise Holder's exchange and pass your own opinion.

Selznick Men Active At New York Convention

The Lewis J. Selznick organization was very much in evidence at the recent convention in Utica, N. Y., according to reports received from the convention city. Publicity and exploitation men from the Buffalo and New York offices were on hand, and are said to have demonstrated some excellent exploitation to the showmen.

Zane Keefe was the Selznick "mystery girl." Through a tie-up with a Utica newspaper, a prize of $50 was offered to the women who could pick out and identify the star in the street. A convention number of the Selznick Bulletin also surprised the exhibitors, and the Selznick booth attracted much attention.

Good Reports Received on Jewel Feature

Reports received by Universal indicate that the big Universal-Jewel production-de-luxe, "The Great Air Robbery," starring Ormer Locklear, is going over even greater than had been anticipated. The picture is being booked for extended runs in the larger cities throughout the country. It is being heralded by elaborate exploitation in practically every place it is booked.

Special Campaign Will Boost Pathe Picture

A special campaign of advertising and exploitation has been arranged by the Pate Exchange for the Leonce Perret production, "Lifting Shadows," in which Emmy Wehlen is starred. The billboards of New York and Brooklyn will be used as one feature of this campaign.

Pritchard with Educational

Former Newspaper Man and Film "Vet" Made Publicity Director

ANNOUNCEMENT is made that R. E Pritchard, who for the past seven months has been director of advertising and publicity for the chain of some fifty theatres of the Allen Enterprises in Canada, has returned to New York to take a similar post with the Educational Films Corporation. He will direct the special exploitation determined upon by E. V. Hammons, vice-president and general manager, as the result of the vastly enlarged scope of operations of the company.

As news editor of the New Orleans Item, Mr. Pritchard established there the first daily and Sunday motion-picture department outside of three or four of the biggest cities of the country. The Sunday department eventually developed into an eight-page, full newspaper size section, the largest amount of space to ever be regularly devoted to the screen. In that capacity he developed advertising among scores of exhibitors who hitherto had never used newspaper space.

From this post he went to the Motion Picture News, where he established the Exhibitors Service Bureau, which he conducted until the time he resigned to go with the Allens in Canada. In the latter position he was able to suggest some new methods in theatre co-operation that brought excellent results. His experiences in Canada gave him an insight into conditions in North America generally that few men in the advertising and publicity field have been fortunate enough to gain.

Under the direction of Mr. Hammons, the department expects to work out a number of practical ideas for exhibitor cooperation that will enable the showman to get increased returns from the short subjects. His instructions are that each exhibitor is to be given the fullest possible individual attention and furnished every possible aid, no matter the trouble or expense.

Sales Policy Makes Good

Pathe Reports That "Selling the Salesman" Plan Stands Approved

THAT February, the shortest month of the year, has established a new high record for the business of Pathe Exchange, is taken as an emphatic indication that the policy of "selling the salesman" is the strong productive principle of scientific business getting. Paul Brunet, vice-president and general manager points to February as the promise of what may be expected during the rest of the year, with a perfectly functioned system of sales, and the strong personal element of achievement so well fostered by Elmer R. Pearson, director of exchanges, who points out that, though February consisted of only twenty-two barking days, yet the total cash business exceeded any previous month, with the exception of November and January; and it rubbed those two months records very close.

"Seven or eight of our branches had the biggest month's business in February, exceeding their highest previous month by goodly margins," says Mr. Pearson. "Quite a number of theatres throughout the United States were closed during February on account of the flu. Our reports indicate that very few theatres now remain closed on that account.

"The feature business continues to increase in the most gratifying manner. 'Other Men's Shoes,' released Feb. 1st, is establishing a wonderful record, bookings thereon to date exceeding any previous Pathe Feature release by over 100 per cent.

"Serials also are showing splendid business increases, particularly 'Daredevil Jack' has a volume of bookings to date far exceeding any previous serial. And most gratifying of all is the fact that not one single disappointment has been called to our attention, whereas we have been in receipt of hundreds of telegrams and letters."

Strong Cast Is Seen in "The Branding Iron"

A strong cast is among the features claimed for the Goldwyn picture, "The Branding Iron." Barbara Castleton, who plays the role of Joan Carver, has never had a part which gives a better opportunity for her talent.

Playing opposite Miss Castleton is James Kirkwood. In the characterization of Pierre Landis, the untutored forceful young rancher, he has a part which is perfectly adapted to his rugged personality.

Russel Simpson is cast in the role of John Carver, the dissolute, utterly degraded father of Joan. Richard Tucker and Albert Roscoe are also included in the cast.

"Edgar" To Be Seen in Capitol Theatre

Closely following the enthusiastic reception given the first of Booth Tarkington's "Edgar" comedies, which had its initial public showing in Los Angeles, comes the announcement that Goldwyn Pictures Corporation has booked the series to the Capitol Theatre, New York. "Edgar and Teacher's Pet", as the opening episode is called, is scheduled for the week of March 21st.

The second and third episodes have been completed and will be ready for distribution soon, but it is not announced at what intervals they will be shown at the Capitol. It is certain, however, that not many weeks will elapse between the presentation of the installments.

"The Sagebrusher" Is Proving a Success

Although the Benjamin B. Hampton production, "The Sagebrusher," has been released but six or seven weeks, there are said to be not more than a dozen big cities in America at the present time that have not set play dates and announced the coming engagement of "The Sagebrusher."

C. E. Stilwell, the prominent Spokane showman who stirred the townspeople with a spectacular promotion campaign on Mr. Hampton's "Desert Gold" last Fall, duplicated that drive on "The Sagebrusher," the attraction at his Casino Theatre last week, resulting in an engagement that reached the high attendance mark set by the powerful Zane Grey picture.

Miller Returns From Northern Location

Charles Miller and his company arrived in New York city this week after three months spent at Port Henry, N. Y., during which time camera work on "The Law of The Yukon," his first production for Mayflower Photoplay Corporation, was practically completed.

Director Miller voiced a solitary but emphatic paean of praise for the winter that is passing. The blizzards which had worked suffering and great financial losses in various cities had been of incalculable value, Mr. Miller said, in obtaining the "frozen North" and Yukon effects which he desired.

Mr. Miller brought with him numerous still photographs of the production and of scenes connected with the production. These evoked the greatest enthusiasm from Realart officials to whom they were shown.

"Buried Treasure" Next Marion Davies Story

Having completed her work in "The Restless Sex," at International Studio, 127th street and Second avenue, New York, Marion Davies is preparing for her next Cosmopolitan Productions' starring vehicle. The story is "Buried Treasure," by F. Britten Austen which appeared in Hearst's Magazine for January. It is a romantic adventure tale of the Spanish Main brought up to date and it has an unusual twist to it. Miss Davies' role in it is said to be particularly charming and unusually well suited to that star's rare personality. Following a brief rest, Miss Davies will begin work on her new production.

Beg Your Pardon

In Motion Picture News of March 13th, page 2541, there appeared a picture of Lee Herz in connection with a story announcing his purchase of the Monopol Pictures Company's feature, "Crimson Shoals" for the states of Illinois and Indiana. The caption under the picture stated that Mr. Herz was president of the Monopol Pictures Company. Mr. Herz, as everybody in the central west knows, is head of the Silee Film Exchange, Chicago, and is not connected with the Monopol Pictures Company.

C. B. Price Co. Gets "His Pajama Girl"

C. B. Price Company, Inc., an active factor in the export and domestic market, has recently purchased "His Pajama Girl," featuring Billie Rhodes, and at the present time is making elaborate preparations to exploit this feature production, in which the Clark-Cornelius Company are directly interested.

National Nearing 100 Per Cent

Chicago Reaches Quota with Other Cities Close Behind

FOLLOWING the release of its first subject, "Just a Wife," it is disclosed that National Picture Theatres, Inc., of which Lewis J. Selznick is president, is nearing the 100 per cent. mark in all sections of the country. Chicago, it is made known, has reached its quota in National Picture Theatres. In the Windy City territory "Just a Wife" will play through a circuit of National franchise holders whose combined rentals, based upon the picture's total cost, will show a decided profit in that territory to the company's stockholders. This result has been achieved since November when National first offered its franchise to the Chicago exhibitors.

One hundred of the best theatres in Chicago and many more smaller ones are National franchise holders. This membership includes every big chain theatre group in the city. The theatres of Lubliner and Trinz, Jones, Linick and Schaefer, Ascher Brothers, Balaban and Katz, and Andrew Karzas were among the first to join, and they were quickly followed by scores of individual theatre owners, who follow the lead of the big ones.

Dallas and Philadelphia offices are expected to reach their quotas within two weeks. Although Chicago is the first territory to reach its quota in National, and Dallas and Philadelphia quotas are practically reached, several other offices are close behind, says a statement from the Selznick offices, and within the next four months at National's present rate of growth, every territory in the United States will have reached its quota.

Two of the most recent big chain theatre interests to enter National are the Saxe theatre, of Milwaukee, and the Swanson Theatre Circuit, of Salt Lake City. The Saxe Enterprises in addition to large theatre holdings, control the Loew Vaudeville Franchise in Milwaukee, and Tom and John Saxe are looked upon as among the far-seeing exhibitors of the Middle West. Tom Saxe will be a member of the Board of Directors of National.

The Swanson Circuit is one of the largest and most important in the West, and Mr. Swanson himself is considered one of the livest showmen in the country. In indorsing the National movement, Mr. George Maine, vice-president of the Swanson Circuit, in a letter to Mr. Selznick, under date of February 28, wrote:

"We have watched very carefully every co-operative plan that has been offered by the producers. We have studied them carefully because we thought it was for our best interest. We have investigated the National co-operative plan, and we firmly believe that it will result in the exhibitors getting fair play. We also believe that we will get consistent high-class pictures at fair rentals and a square deal."

In commenting upon the rapid growth of National, an official of the company said: "The tremendous growth of National in such a short time is significant. It clearly indicates that exhibitors, both large and small, are wide-awake to the present day conditions. They have watched the growth of the film octopus the entry of Wall Street money and Wall Street methods in to the film industry and they are fully alive to the menace that confronts their property investment.

"These exhibitors know they must insure for themselves an adequate picture supply at rentals far below the ruinous prices that octopus methods are demanding and will demand.

"They clearly realize that by co-operative purchase on a National basis they can not only insure an adequate picture supply, but by minimizing distribution overhead eliminating middlemen profits as well."

Arthur Ziehm Makes Reply

Goldwyn Sales Manager Believes Foreign Field No Cause for Fear

STATING that the present condition of the foreign market is not as bad as some critcs would paint it and that calamity howlers will have a depressing effect on the American producer, Arthur Ziehm, foreign sales manager of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, recently issued a statement in regard to foreign market conditons. He said in part:

"It appears to me that recently there has been a tendency to paint the foreign market, as it concerns American producers, in unnecessarily dark colors. A number of film men, whose word carries weight in the trade, have subscribed to views that are likely to have a depressing effect on our producers and exporters, whereas a careful consideration of the situation should lead to more optimistic conclusions.

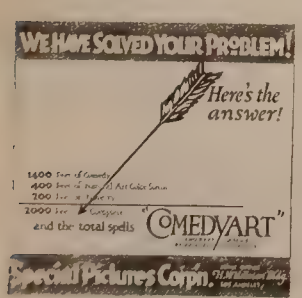
"As near as I can figure, well informed business men in other lines, quite as dependent upon European trade as the motion picture producers and distributors, believe that there is nothing at all extraordinary about the money markets of the European countries in the first stages of recovery from the demoralizing effects of a devastating war. There is every reason for motion picture men to assume that in due time foreign exchange will be stabilized, just as it has been in the past. Why magnify a temporary situation into a permanent menace?"

SIMPLE SOULS

Alleges An Attempt to Defraud

James Oliver Curwood Consults Copyright Specialists Here

CHARGING that exhibitors soon will be subjected to deceptive and unfair sales practices by producers who are planning to capitalize his current popularity as an author of successful novels and screen stories by elaborating into five and six-reel length stories purchased from him years ago as material for two and three reel pictures, James Oliver Curwood, writer and head of the recently organized James Oliver Curwood Productions, Inc., is in New York this week consulting with copyright specialists in an effort to prevent by advance legal action what he terms "unscrupulous tactics intended to victimize exhibitors by deliberate misrepresentation."



Mr. Curwood's fame as an author of short stories and more than a dozen novels has been equalled in motion picture circles by the success of his own production of "Back to God's Country," and Marshall Neilan's production, "The River's End," released as First National attractions. Mr. Curwood is about to begin production work on "Nomads of the North," one of the best known of his novels, for which he has prepared the scenario and of which he will be co-director with David M. Hartford. This production also will be released by First National.

Information sent to Mr. Curwood at his home in Owosso, Michigan, was responsible for his hurried trip to New York to head off the plans he claims are under way by several concerns to build up to five and six-reel length a number of alleged two and three-reel scenarios written by him years ago, and with which, he declares, the originators of the idea intend to realize thousands of dollars in revenue from state rights or direct rentals to exhibitors by heralding them as new pictures, made from recently published stories of actual feature length.

"Exhibitors are entitled to know the truth about the age, merits and value of stories, whether they are written by me or any author who has been fortunate in creating fiction that has genuine screen value," says Mr. Curwood. "If there is no law which will protect authors and exhibitors from being imposed upon by unscrupulous producers who dig up old material, sold to them years ago as one and two-reel stories, and which they "pad" into feature length because those particular authors have made reputations, it is time that one was created. I am only one of many authors who have been, and are being, taken advantage of in this way, with exhibitors as the unwitting instruments, and I am in New York now to complete plans with twelve of the best known writers in the country for making it mighty uncomfortable for the producers who use unfair methods to cash in on our reputations by deceiving exhibitors with material we wrote long ago. As a member of the National Council of the Authors' League I studied copyright and protective laws thoroughly, and with special legal assistance I am going to test the matter to the limit.

"It was only last week that definite news reached me of the plans of certain producers to build up old one and two-reel stories of mine, written years ago, by writing in action and by the generous use of sub-titles, anything that will make footage up to five or six thousand feet. Assured of exhibitor interest because of the success of my own production, 'Back to God's Country,' and Marshall Neilan's production of my story, 'The River's End,' and knowing that I am starting work on my own second picture, 'Nomads Of The North,' adapted from my novel of that name, they propose, I am told on excellent authority, to offer their title-inflated revivals of one and two-reel Curwood scenarios as new pictures from stories written by me concurrently, or after, completing my novels for 'Back To God's Country' and 'The River's End' and 'Nomads Of The North.'

"Only a few years ago a three-reeler was the longest picture made, and two-reelers were considered long pictures. It didn't take much of a story to get over then. In one year, along with my fiction work, I dictated more than two hundred reels. Much of this stuff was never produced in pictures, probably because a great deal of it was so rotten. I suppose that in this country today there are thirty or forty of my old one and two-reelers, sold at $100 a reel, stored away in producers' vaults—and there are old and worthless stories by many other writer's pigeon-holed in the same way. Years ago they would have made decent one and two-reel pictures; but today, if produced under new picture conditions, they would be an absolute menace to the reputations of the men and women who wrote them to be produced as one and two-reelers, and not as special features and to exhibitors who show them to a public which cannot distinguish fraud from genuine until after it has paid its money at the box office."

To Inspect Foreign Market

Paul Mooney to Go Abroad in the Interest of L. Mayer Productions

PAUL C. MOONEY, general sales manager of the Anita Stewart, Mildred Harris Chaplin and Louis B. Mayer Productions, will start for Europe shortly in the interest of these companies and others who have not been divulged. He plans on remaining abroad for at least three months, during which time he will visit England, France, Italy, the Central Powers and the Scandinavian countries.

The primary object of Mr. Mooney is to open up the foreign markets for the Anita Stewart productions. Mildred Harris Chaplin productions, and other productions he is to handle. He will also pave the way for the gigantic exploitation campaign which has been planned in connection with "In Old Kentucky" in England and on the Continent.

Regarding his proposed trip, Mr. Mooney had this to say:—"The terribly unsettled condition of the foreign market at the present time makes it almost imperative to secure first-hand information regarding conditions as they really are over there. Every one returning from abroad brings a different story of these conditions, but all seem to agree that American producers must act promptly and energetically if these conditions are to be changed materially for the better.

"Its useless for me to tell just what I expect to accomplish on the trip, for any plan of action I may evolve now might have to be radically changed on my arrival. But I intend to secure the best possible market for our Stewart and Chaplin productions, as well as for other productions I shall handle, a market which for class and quality will compare with the market which these productions have secured in this country."

Simplex Notes

The Simplex factory during the past week was indeed a very busy place. Aside from the usual scene of bustle and activity attending the building of the famous projector, there were in town the following Simplex distributors: J. George Feinberg of Minneapolis, Bert Weddige and Max Rubin of Detroit, Leo Dwyer of Cincinnati and George Perkins of Canada, each of whom just happened in and while here made the best of their visit both in the way of visiting the local theatres and in becoming acquainted with the future additional Simplex developments.

Another interested visitor was Mr. Edwin A. Keller, late of the Graumann projection staff of Los Angeles who has been selected by Major Grierson to take full charge of the projection in the fifty odd theatres controlled by the Provincial Cinematograph, Ltd., throughout the United Kingdom.

Mr. Keller had booked passage on the S. S. "Cedric" which sustained some damage to her steering apparatus while in mid-stream. The accident necessitated making a new booking on the S. S. "Baltic" which sailed a few days later.

Mr. Keller is a member of Local 150 M. P. O. U. of Los Angeles and has held every office in that union. It might be well to say that the Graumann theatre of Los Angeles has an international reputation for the manner in which the various photoplays are projected and Major Grierson in making his recent cross-country visit while in the United States was greatly impressed with the manner of photoplay reproduction in the Graumann.

Mr. Keller was greatly interested by what he saw at the Simplex factory and spoke very highly of the Simplex Projectors with which he is very familiar, having used that type of machine almost exclusively while in Los Angeles. Mr. Keller together with Mr. Fred Weaver, a fellow-projectionist, has perfected a device for a dissolving-change-over, which he will incorporate in the projection system across the water.

Two of the distributing forces of the Simplex Company spent a very busy week in New York looking over the many new developments at the factory and incidentally picking up a few valuable points on Simplex exploitation.

Mr. Bert Weddige, President of the Michigan Motion Picture Supply Company, Detroit, Mich., and Mr. Max Rubin, his assistant, are the two in question. Mr. Weddige while at the Simplex offices spoke very optimistically of the future Simplex business in his territory and announced his intention of going into larger quarters immediately and also arrange for the issuance of a monthly house organ with which to reach every exhibitor in his territory.

Since the Michigan Motion Picture Supply Company have taken over the distribution of Simplex, the Michigan territory has rapidly become "Simplexized" and much of this success can be attributed to the popular methods employed by "Square-Deal Weddige," as he is familiarly known and his energetic assistant, Rubin.

STATE RIGHTS EXPORT

First Issue of "Illiterate Digest" Ready

Following the announcement of the screening of Will Rogers' Illiterate Digest by the Marion H. Kohn Productions, Joe Brandt, eastern representative of this company, received many inquiries from exhibitors regarding the release of this novelty.

It is understood that the first issue is ready for release and that the second and third are now being filmed. The new Kohn reel had its pre-release showing at the California Theatre in Los Angeles. According to a statement issued by Brandt, "The Illiterate Digest" will be marketed on the state rights plan.

Trade Showing of "Love Without Question"

Reports have been made by the New York Offices for Jans Pictures Inc., that a special trade showing will be given at the Southern Hotel, Baltimore, Md., shortly for their first release of the Olive Tell series "Love Without Question", an adaptation of the book "The Abandoned Room" by C. Wadsworth Camp.

Mr. Jans is said to have made arrangements for this private showing in answer to a popular demand from the exchangemen in Maryland and vicinity, and according to reports the affair will be well attended. Many notables, it is said, will be present as invitations to the city officials and other prominent politicians has been sent and favorable replies received.

Jack Cohn Sees Demand for Short Subjects

The addresses made by prominent speakers at the recent convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of the State of New York in Utica were indicative of a popular demand in the line of short subjects and comedy reels, according to Jack Cohn, producer of Hall Room Boys Comedies, who attended the convention.

"The great demand at this time, from what was gleaned from the convention speeches," said Mr. Cohn, "is for clean, wholesome comedies with a minimum of offensive slapstick and a maximum of genuine humor, portrayed by skilled actors and actresses."

"Lost City" Prints Arrive

Negative and Sample Prints for Final Episodes Ready for Buyers

WORD comes from the Warner Brothers, who are rapidly disposing of the territorial distribution rights of Selig's wild animal serial, "The Lost City," that the negatives and sample prints of the final episodes have arrived from California and are ready for the state right buyers.

After a private screening of the last three episodes, those present were very much enthused, and the consensus of opinion was that the last three episodes were even greater than the first three. Harry Warner, in commenting on the serial, had the following to say, "I believe I can honestly say without fear of contradiction that 'The Lost City' is without question the greatest ever produced and will prove the greatest box-office attraction in serial history. Never before has a serial production offered such thrilling situations and such sensational climaxes at the end of each episode."

"Already reports are coming in from the exchanges who have the various territorial distribution rights that all pre-release booking records have been broken. Many of the largest first-run theatres throughout the country that have never before offered a serial as an attraction have booked 'The Lost City,' and, judging from the record breaking business done at the premier showing at the Orpheum Theatre in Cleveland, where each episode will be shown for seven days, the serial will establish an attendance record for others to try and equal.

"To assist in the exploitation, circus methods have been followed. Every sheet of paper has a wild animal in tense situation on it. In addition to the paper, circus dodgers, banners, cuts, novelties, etc., there is an advance reel of three hundred and fifty feet showing sensational scenes taken from the early episodes, which will surely start the audience talking."

Chaplin Picture Pulls Strong in Chicago

The Mickey Film Corporation of Chicago, owners of "A Burlesque on Carmen," starring Charlie Chaplin for the State of Illinois, has broken all booking records with this Kremer attraction, it is asserted. In several instances Chicago theatres have booked Carmen for the same day and date, and many of the largest downtown theatres will show the Chaplin comedy within the next few weeks.

New Title Is Given To Marie Doro Picture

The executives of the Pioneer have agreed to change the name of the first Marie Doro production from "Midnight Frolics" to "Midnight Gambols," so as not to conflict with the musical revue owned by Flo Ziegfeld, Jr. Contrary to rumors that have been current for the past few days of a wide breach with the Pioneer interests and Mr. Ziegfeld, the matter was amicably settled and friendship exists on both sides.

All details of the plan of exploitation of the "Midnight Gambols" are progressing on schedule time, and it is expected that both the picture itself and all accessories will be ready by April 15th, the date set for its initial release in the New York territory.

Beban Production to Be Ready in a Month

The final cutting, editing and titling of "One Man in a Million," the latest George Beban production, which is to be released under the Sol Lesser banner, is being done at the Haworth studios under the personal supervision of Mr. Beban, who wrote, directed and played the leading role in his most recent photodrama. It is estimated by Mr. Lesser and Mr. Beban that the picture will be ready in thirty days for a road show tour with the author-star director personally accompanying the tour.

George Beban, Jr., a youngster of less than five years, has an appealing role in the picture, while Helen Jerome Eddy plays the leading feminine role.

Edwards Will Continue As "Percy Hallroom"

Jack Cohn in an announcement to the trade this week, puts at rest all rumors and stories to the effect that he and Harry Cohn, producer of Hall Room Boys Comedies, have lost the services of Neely Edwards, formerly of Flanagan and Edwards. The facts in the case are, according to Mr Cohn, that upon the dissolution of the Flanagan and Edward combination, the latter was prevailed upon by the Cohns to accept the feature role in the comedy series because of the popular success he has attained.

Price Issues Indian Reels

THE fifteen "Indian Dramas," released by C. B. Price Co., Inc., are to be shown at the Broadway theatre, New York, next week, beginning Monday, March 22. Each one of these one-reel dramas will be programmed for fifteen consecutive weeks. It is some time since the Indian drama, so artistically portrayed and historically correct, has been presented on the screen. All the participants in the casts are indigenous, so to speak, to the territories in which the incidents are portrayed. The Indian Princess, Mona Darkfeather, of the Pueblo tribe of Indians, enacts the female lead.

All of these Indian dramas have a peculiar significance at this time, showing the aborigines of this country in their native state, giving a clear and authentic idea of the full meaning of Americanization. They bring before the present generation things about which it has probably read, but has never seen visualized. It impresses upon its mind and presents to the newly arrived comers to this country what the Indian meant in the colonization and growth of the land of the free and the home of the brave. They are the reincarnation of a fast dying race.

The Ritchey Lithograph Company has produced a line of paper for these productions that is the acme of lithographic art that greatly enhances their attractiveness.

"The Broadway presentation is merely a forerunner of similar offerings in the best theatres throughout the country," remarked Mr. Price. "We are now making arrangements for pre-run showings in the leading theatres in all the film centers. These pictures are not a throw-back to those which were familiar to the screen years ago, but have been produced in such a style that they form a welcome part of any program. The direction back of these subjects are faithful in every detail and the stories are so prepared that they offer entertainment of a calibre that would be worthy of many five-reel productions."

New Serial Books Quickly

Benny Leonard in "The Evil Eye" Pleases at First Trade Showing

FOLLOWING the trade showing on Thursday in New York City, of "The Exil Eye" by Roy L. McCardell, the new Hallmark serial starring Benny Leonard, there was a rush to cover on bookings by exhibitors who had put off signing their contracts until they had seen the first three episodes.

At the New York Exchange of Hallmark, Phil. E. Meyer, the branch manager and his salesmen were kept busy by exhibitors who were anxious to get their dates in ahead of their competitors.

"On the face of contracts in hand," said Mr. Meyer, it appears that all previous records for booking a serial will be smashed beyond recognition, not alone for the number of play dates given, but for the prices paid. One contract calls for a three days run at $3,750, which I believe establishes a new record price for all serials in the market.

"The unusual interest in this serial "The Evil Eye," I attribute to the wonderful popularity of the star, Benny Leonard, who stands aces high in the esteem of the American public, not only on account of his wonderful prowess with his fist, but on account of his clean record, both in and out of the prize ring.

"Another reason attributed to this demand for booking "The Evil Eye" is that the story by Roy L. McCardell parallels the accounts of the notorious gang that has startled the entire world by their sensational and daring operations in the great Wall street bond theft plots, which makes "The Evil Eye" not only a "thriller" of the first water, but probably the most timely and absorbing story ever told in picture form."

Tracy Pictures Disposed Of

Inter-Ocean To Handle World's Rights for Gibraltar Pictures

A CONTRACT has been signed between Gibraltar Pictures and the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation conveying the world's right to all Louis Tracy productions exclusive of the United States and Canada to that organization.

Louis Tracy Productions, Inc., is the most recently incorporated of the Gibraltar Pictures units, four of which are now in active operation. At least two more are shortly to be launched, and announcements covering these will probably be made within the next thirty days, after Mr. Beck's return from Los Angeles.

The production rights of Gibraltar Pictures include Mr. Tracy's most famous works, among these being, aside from "The Silent Barrier," "The Bartlett Mystery," "The Terms of Surrender," "His Unknown Wife," "The Stowaway," "Diana of the Moorland," "Cynthia's Chauffeur," "The Wheel of Fortune," "The Red Year," "Flower of the Gorse," "The Revelers," "The Postmasters Daughter," "The Message," "The Captain of the Kansas," and "Carl Krier."

"The Silent Barrier" company has already been at work for more than four weeks.

Lucille Rubey, who will be featured in a series of two-reel comedies by the National Film Corporation of America

Post and Lucille Ruby to Appear in Farce

National announces a new series of two-reel farces featuring "Buddy" Post and Lucille Rubey, on which production has already started. "Buddy" Post has had many years experience before the camera, having taken part in many well-known photoplays. His latest work was in Sessue Hayakawa's productions, "The Courageous Coward" and "The Beggar Prince," in which he played prominent roles.

Lucille Rubey has appeared in many Paramount productions and has been the film-mate of Neal Burns in his three late Capitol comedies.

Fowler Starts Out For Virginia Location

Roger W. Fowler, of Fowler Films, and his staff have gone to Fentress, Virginia, heretofore undiscovered as a movie "location", to stage a rural screen comedy entitled "Unscrambling Egbert," in the rustic environment.

Murray Leinster, a short story writer known to readers of "Smart Set", "Snappy Stories", "Live Stories" and other popular magazines, is the author of "Unscrambling Egbert."

Irma Harrison Starred in Moonshine Story

Irma Harrison, who was last seen as leading woman for Gareth Hughes in "The Red Viper" and opposite Johnny Dooley in the first of the series of Dooley comedies, returned this week from Georgia, where she finished the exterior scenes for the starring role of the Buffalo Film Company's third special independent production, "The Daughter of Devil Dan," a story of the Moonshine country. Miss Harrison is supported by Kempton Greene in the leading role.

"Petticoats and Pants" Stars Bobby Vernon

"Petticoats and Pants," the newest of the Christie special comedies in two reels, and the twelfth of a series which were started a year ago, presents Bobby Vernon in the featured role. The scenes present the Christie Film Follies girls in a lavishly equipped cabaret. Helen Darling is the leader of the chorus, playing the principal feminine role in the comedy. The picture was made under the direction of Bill Beaudine.

Whitechapel Types Are Imported for Film

The United States Photoplay Corporation announces that it has contracted to bring several costers to this country to appear in the Whitechapel scenes in "Determination." It was only through the influence of Captain Stroll with the Federal Government that it was possible to bring these types to America.

The corporation is now looking for a site along the Palisades on which a studio could be erected. Four companies will be put to work in the proposed studio. The company will take possession of the E. K. Lincoln studio on June 1.

Dresner Gets House Peters Feature

The Exhibitors Film Exchange, of Washington, D. C., last week closed negotiations for "Silk Husbands and Calico Wives" for the Maryland, Delaware, Virginia and District of Columbia territory. A. Dresner, manager of the exchange, was in town to close the deal and he is also reported to have gathered in several other big pictures for his territory while in the Times Square neighborhood.

Chicago Rialto Books Hank Mann Comedie

The new Rialto, in Chicago, is the latest first-run house to lend a hand in the success of Hank Mann Comedies, distributed by the Arrow Film Corporation. Dr. W. E. Shallenberger, president of Arrow, announced that bookings of this series by the Rialto followed the successful showing of "The Blacksmith" at the Capitol, New York, which was arranged by Henry Huber, of the Seaboard Film Exchange, and five solid weeks in first-run downtown houses in Boston.

Ethel Gillette Added to Scenario Staff

Miss Ethel Gillette, a well known writer of scenarios and continuity for the screen, has been added to the staff of the Louis B. Mayer forces in Los Angeles and is now engaged in writing continuity for Anita Stewart and Mildred Harris Chaplin.

Kremer Has New Vehicle

Acquires "Skinner's Dress Suit" for the United States and Canada

VICTOR KREMER FILM FEATURES, INC., at present distributing five Essanay-Chaplin comedies on the state right market, has secured the rights to "Skinner's Dress Suit," starring Bryant Washburn, for the United States and Canada. The Washburn production was one of the most popular in which the present Famous Players-Lasky star ever appeared.

Victor Kremer Film Features, Inc., will offer "Skinner's Dress Suit" to state right buyers in brand new and up-to-date form. The titles have been completely revised and artistic decorations added in the form of backgrounds.

A comprehensive array of advertising material is now being prepared which includes an assortment of lithographs, 8 x 10, 11 x 14 and 22 x 28 lobby display, three styles of slides, heralds printed in two colors, and elaboate press sheet, and a distinct novelty in the form of a cut-out. This cut-out consists of a dress suit carrying on the shirt-front the title together with a description of the play.

A novel advertising campaign will be carried on in the Moving Picture World, MOTION PICTURE NEWS, Exhibitors Herald and Exhibitors Trade Review for "Skinner's Dress Suit" for the interest of state right buyer and exhibitor.

"Skinner's Dress Suit" is but the first of a series of productions, starring famous players, which will be exploited by Victor Kremer Film Features, Inc. The local Kremer exchange, New York Independent Masterfilm, Inc., has already received many inquiries from exhibitors in New York and New Jersey requesting bookings on "Skinner's Dress Suit" in its new form, it is stated

Joseph LaRose Joins Chester Forces

Joseph LaRose, formerly production manager for the Rialto and Rivoli theatres, has arrived in Los Angeles and taken up his new duties as assistant to C. L. Chester, president of C. L. Chester Productions, Inc. Mr. LaRose, will devote the greater portion of his time to assisting Mr. Chester in the creation of Chester Comedies, but will also assist with Chester-Outing Scenics and Chester Scenics. All this product will hereafter be controlled by Educational Films Corporation, it is stated.

Before leaving New York to take up his new duties arrangements were made with Mr. LaRose by the exploitation department of Educational Films to give unusual cooperation in supplying advance information about these pictures with special reference to the unusual angles that will appeal to the box office. His long experience in presenting such pictures will enable him to make suggestions that occur to him during the production period and the exhibitors will have the benefit of this.

Attention Given Film Pleases Garrson

Murray W. Garrson, who has released on the state right market "A Dream of Fair Women," a picture based on Tennyson's poem of the same title, is very much pleased by the attention that his release has aroused among members of the trade and the general public. He feels that not the least commendable feature of his picture is the fact that it introduces to the screen new faces in the persons of the successful contestants in the recent Fame and Fortune Contest. In this connection, Mr. Garrson says:

"The public will respond to it quite heartily as the exhibitors. Nothing is quite so welcome or even appealing as new faces and new personalities. This picture presents four of the most beautiful, most talented, most charming young women in the United States. Their entrance on the screen will bring fresh vigor to films."

Christie Film Extends Hollywood Property

Having outgrown the city block at Sunset and Gower streets which Al Christie started as the first motion picture studio in Hollywood, the Christie Film Company has branched out and is acquiring property in the neighborhood.

The first acquisition is three acres on Selma avenue, on which a big new stage is being built and also a street scene for a new special production which will introduce Chic Sale as a star under the Robertson-Cole banner.

Christie's frontage on Sunset boulevard is now built up solid with the completion of carpenter shops two hundred feet long, where machinery has been installed and operations are going forward.

New Gaiety Comedies Now in Exchanges

New Gaiety Comedies include releases, featuring two teams of well known comedians. In the comedy "Twin Bedlam," Billy Bletcher and Vera Reynolds are featured; the story is by Jack Jayne.

"Why Cooks Go Cuckoo" is the title of another Gayety Comedy presenting George Ovey with Lillian Biron. The story is by Keene Thompson. "Dry and Thirsty" presents Billy Bletcher and Vera Reynolds again.

"Good Morning Nurse" presents George Ovey under the influence of nurses, with Lillian Biron playing the chief feminine disturber. "Parked in the Park," one of the new Gayety one-reelers, presents Billy Bletcher and Vera Reynolds again. This story was written by Bletcher himself.

All of the comedies which are now in the hands of the exchanges, were directed by Craig Hutchinson and James Clemens

Uphold Independent Field

New State Right Sponsor Asserts Red Tape Is Reduced to Minimum

ANOTHER ardent believer in the future of the independent market arrived in New York last week in the person of D. W. Townsend, general sales manager for the Art-O-Graph Film Company of Denver, whose two latest feature productions, "Wolves of the Street" and "The Desert Scorpion," are being distributed by the Arrow Film Corporation.

While in New York Mr. Townsend paused long enough to relate some of the reasons which prompt his belief in the independent field.

"There is no other way to get to the exhibitor fairly and squarely and with a minimum of intricate detail and expense, than through the independent exchange plan," declared Mr. Townsend. "Art-O-Graph will produce at least six pictures this year, and it will possibly be eight. All of these will be of the same high grade of workmanship and artistry that has characterized our other subjects, and all of them will be released to the independent field."

Dr. Shallenberger of Arrow Film announced that territorial rights for both "Wolves of the Street" and "The Desert Scorpion" were selling rapidly, and that a large share of the country had already been disposed of, although only a few days have elapsed since first announcement of the two features. The former is a story of Wall Street and the open spaces of Colorado.

"The Desert Scorpion" was written by L. V. Jefferson, of San Francisco, and like "Wolves of the Night," was directed by Otis B. Thayer, who in spite of the enormous amount of work involved in these two subjects, has started upon a new production for Art-O-Graph, "Finders, Keepers," from the magazine story by Robert Ames Bennett.

Plans to Exploit "Torchy"

Producer Announces Separate Department to Advertise Comedies

"WE will have our own exploitation department to assist exhibitors in putting these comedies across and advertising them to the public," announces Charlie Burr, producer of the "Torchy comedies.

"As no expense is being spared in making these comedies clean and high class in every respect, likewise we will spare no expense to have them properly exploited after they have been sold to the distributor. We believe that the exploitation angles planned for the 'Torchy' series will overshadow anything which has ever been done before for short subjects."

As soon as distribution details are completed a photoplay edition of the first book will be off the press. This book will be profusely illustrated with scenes from the film. As rapidly as each of the pictures is completed another of the "Torchy" books will be issued with the photoplay illustrations, announces Mr. Burr.

Already there are seven volumes of these stories in print, and the stories themselves have been appearing for eleven years in the best known newspapers throughout the country. At the present time the current stories are appearing alternate weeks in 23 newspapers in the United States and Canada. The News Syndicate handling Sewell Ford's stories will increase the number to 100 or more newspapers to coincide with the release date of the comedies.

Master Films, Inc., will have its own exploitation department and already this branch is being organized. The publicity and cooperation work will be handled in such a way so that these comedies may be real drawing cards, wherever they are shown.

"Democracy," Ten Reel Feature, Complete

"Democracy" or "The Vision Restored," a ten-reel screen drama with a punch and a purpose, has been completed, under the direction of William Nigh, at the Thomas A. Edison studio in New York City, according to the announcement of Lee Francis Lybarger, president of the Democracy Photo-Play Company. This fulfills the original plans of the organization as announced in December, 1918.

"Democracy" was conceived by Mr. Lybarger, who retired as president of the International Lyceum and Chautauqua Association of America to produce this drama.

Burston Has New Method of Naming Serial

A prize competition opened to filmers of all kinds as well as the lay public started by Louis Burston to attract a fitting title for the producer's new Francis Ford serial, was last week abruptly closed by the United States Postal authorities. Burston did not know that prize contests with cash or other awards cannot legally be circulated through the mail.

The producer now offers to buy from contributors at the highest space rates paid to the best paid authors any acceptable suggestions sent in.

Flower Is Art Director For Park-Whiteside

A. Bela Viragh-Flower is the art director who is responsible for the interiors prominently in evidence in "Empty Arms" and "The Scarlet Dragon," both of which features were written by Willard King Bradley and directed by Frank Reicher.

Before joining Lester Park and Edward Whiteside, Flower was employed in a similar capacity by Clara Kimball Young, for whom he conceived many magnificent interiors. His work in "The Marionettes" will be remembered for many a day.

Gordon Circuit Books Hank Mann Comics

Hank Mann Comedies have been booked by the entire Gordon Circuit in New England, according to Dr. W. E. Shallenberger, president of the Arrow Film Corporation, which is distributing this brand. The Gordon Circuit is composed of some of the most prominent houses in the New England territory, and the Hank Mann Comedies will play them in one-week stand only.

W. G. Underwood Books Arrow Releases

W. G. Underwood, of the Specialty Film Company, Dallas, Tex., was a visitor in New York the last week. While here he bought the rights for his territory for the Hank Mann Comedies and for "The Chamber Mystery," a feature production being distributed to the independent market by the Arrow Film Corporation

Educational Series to Be Ready by Summer

Four complete series of Appleton-Universal text-films will be ready for schools and colleges of the United States before summer, according to an announcement made today by Harry Levey, general manager of the Universal's Educational Department. Mr. Levey was able to make this statement, he said, by reason of the rapid advancement of the work of Don Carlos Ellis, director of text-film production, formerly film chief of the U. S. Department of Agriculture, who has been concentrating his efforts on Zoology, Commercial Geography, Hygiene and History.

These text-films will be based on the text books on these subjects published by D. Appleton & Company, and will be edited by the authors whose names will appear on the films.

Kohn Will Do Exploitation

Will Assist State Rights Buyers in Advertising Short Subjects

STATE rights buyers handling short features produced by the Marion H. Kohn Productions will receive unlimited help in selling, distributing and exploiting the one and two-reel shorts subjects produced by that concern. This is the promise that Marion H. Kohn of 90 Golden Gate avenue, San Francisco, Cal., makes to prospective purchasers of available territory. The Kohn productions are being made by the National Film Corporation of America of Hollywood, Cal. Joe Brandt is the authorized eastern representative.

"I propose to go the limit with the state rights buyer with these productions," declares Mr. Kohn "I'm a state rights man myself and I know that the short subject release needs just as much care in production and exploitation as the biggest feature ever produced. My stars, Grace Cunard, Polly Moran and 'Smiling Bill' Jones are already known very well to the public, but I want, first of all, to make the state rights buyer my friend by cooperating with him fully in all his many problems. Then we will go after the exhibitor. He is a hard man to please—that's why he's a successful showman—but I know that the Marion H. Kohn shorts objects will please him and his patrons. With every contract we make we pledge the state right buyer the best press-notices, the finest of paper, exploitation hints that are new and novel and consistent advertising in the various trade papers, aimed directly at the exhibitors."

The Marion H. Kohn Productions have already disposed of considerable territory, states Mr. Kohn

Outlook Called Good for Aywon Film

L. Laurence Barent, manager of the Aywon Film Corporation, reports that within the past two months business has increased threefold and the outlook for the spring is very bright both in New York and New Jersey. He says:

"Our new feature 'The House Without Children' has been booked solid far beyond the expectations of our organization. The next release, Lucy Cotton, in 'Blind Love,' is booked in the Loew and Syd Cohen and David Picker Theatres, and is being daily booked in all the first-run local houses."

Eugene Sue Story to Be Picturized

"The Mysteries Of Paris," Eugene Sue's story of life in the underworld of Paris, will be adapted for the screen by Stanley J. Worris, according to a report issued by the Hub Cinematograph Company of Boston, the concern now starting on the picture at its studio in Winthrop, Mass. It will run to eight reels and will be two months in the making, according to Ed. Cornell, under whose supervision it is being made.

"Tarzan" Pictures in Private Showing

"The Return of Tarzan," latest of the Edgar Rice Burroughs' stories to reach the screen, was given a private showing early this week. Numa Pictures Corporation is its sponsor. The trade-showing is scheduled for within a few days.

The present Tarzan story is now announced as the first of what will most likely be several Edgar Rice Burroughs' production on the screen. With the ending of this latest one, Tarzan and his sweetheart are left, reunited, in the heart of the jungle. The next story promises to bring them, in story-travel, back to civilization.

Commonwealth Acquires "Why Women Sin"

Sam Zierler, president of the Commonwealth Film Corporation, and who has the Equity franchise for the New York territory, concluded a deal the early part of this week with Mr. Thomas de Vassey, secretary of the Wistaria Productions, Inc., and Mr. Jacques Kopfstein, the sales manager, whereby he secures the exclusive exhibitor's rights for New York State and Northern New Jersey of "Why Women Sin."

"Jiggs" Comedies Are Heavily Booked

Backed by a newspaper campaign of national scope and by the long standing popularity of the "Bringing Up Father" comic strip, which appears in more than four hundred newspapers in the United States, the new International comedies based on the famous comics of McManus are destined for immediate success, according to early reports to the Pathe Exchange. Many important bookings have been recorded for the first comedy which will be released on April 4th. "Jiggs in Society" is the title.

Inter-Ocean Begins Drive

Will Show Producer Importance of a Specialized Export House

THE first important step in the development of Inter-Ocean Film Corporation's plans for educating the American motion picture producer in general and the independent producer in particular to the value of placing their productions in the hands of a reputable export house specializing in the distribution of American films in foreign territories, got underway this week in the first of a series of advertisements which are to be carried in American trade journals throughout the coming year.

This is the line with its policy recently made public through the trade press, of inaugurating an extensive and far-reaching advertising and publicity campaign in behalf of the American motion picture export company, and to emphasize the advantages to be derived from the producer's association with such an organization. It is wholly apart from Inter-Ocean Film Corporation's regular advertising and publicity campaign which is now being conducted in the various foreign trade mediums.

This is declared to be the first time in the history of the motion picture industry that a large American film exporting concern has attempted such a campaign in the American trade press. That it will be instrumental in producing the desired results both to the American producer and to the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation is a conclusion which Inter-Ocean officials have no hesitancy in affirming.

The campaign will be conducted by A. L. Feinman, who will also continue in charge of advertising and publicity in foreign trade mediums.

Smith Likes Film Making

New Metro Author Explains How He Evolved Into a Playwright

WINCHELL SMITH, who recently joined Metro's staff of authors at its studios in Hollywood, and who is now personally supervising the picturization of "The New Henrietta," the comedy which he and Victor Mapes adapted from a play by Bronson Howard, is well pleased with life at the studio.

Mr. Smith was first an actor and then a producer. He never had any newspaper experience and states that he sometimes "feels that the less a man knows about the mehanics of literary work, the better he is equipped for dramatic writing. A man who writes phrases as people speak them, and not as the copy books construct them, he is the man who gets the best dialogue."

Mr. Smith states that it was merely by accident that he obtained a chance to write a play. "The man who was to dramatize a story which I was to produce backed out at the last minute," he said.

Lesser Company Seeks Deep Water Locale

In order to obtain the necessary deep water scenes for her forthcoming production, Annette Kellerman and her entire company have gone to San Francisco on a two weeks' location trip. Two special cars were necessary to transport the aggregation of picture players from Los Angeles to San Francisco. H. P. Caulfield, production manager for Sol Lesser, headed the expedition.

More than $250,000 is being spent on this new Kellerman production. For the interiors many of the most elaborate sets ever conceived at the Brunton studio were built, while hundreds of players were used for the water scenes.

Kohn Enthusiastic Over Short Subject Films

One of the most enthusiastic producers on the West Coast is Marion H. Kohn, head of the short-subject concern bearing his name. The three Kohn releases, which are made at the studios of the National Film Corporation of America in Hollywood, Cal., are the first three links, declares Mr. Kohn, of a "mighty chain" of short-subject releases which, if market conditions remain normal, will be lengthened from time to time.

Commonwealth Film to Handle Jans Picture

Announcement is made by President Sam Zierler of the Commonwealth Film Corporation, that they have secured the rights for the state of New York from Jans Pictures, Inc., for the initial release of the Olive Tell series, "Love Without Question," adapted from the book, "The Abandoned Room," by C. Wadsworth Camp and produced by B. A. Rolfe.

"The Mystery of 13" Is Still Selling

Producer Burston, of Burston Films, Inc., announces that the serial thriller "The Mystery of '13'" is still going strong. "Overland Red," Harry Carey's latest Universal release opened at the Standard theatre on Sunday, March 7, to bigger business than did "Blind Husbands," thus creating a new record mark in the history of the house. The same condition has existed all week. The picture has played to more business than any other picture since it came under the personal management of Tom Carroll.

E. A. McAuliffe, one of Ohio's well known film men, has recently allied himself with R. C. Buttolph as assistant manager for the New York Masterpiece Distributors, Inc., with local offices at 412 Belmont Building. Mr. McAuliffe at one time managed the Cleveland Fox exchange.

Next week will be moving week for the Select exchange. By request of the owner, who holds all motion picture tenents in contempt, Select is moving over to the Belmont building and will share office space with the Republic Distributing Corporation.

Billy Exton, who has been at the head of Supreme Photoplays Productions, handling "Mickey" in Ohio, closes his Cleveland office March 15, to become press agent for the John Robinson Circus.

"On With the Dance" is the first photoplay to enjoy the distinction of a four weeks' run in a Cleveland motion picture theatre. "On With the Dance" opened at Loew's Euclid theatre February 15 for two weeks. Public demand for seats was so great that "The Copperhead," the following attraction, was pushed off for another week to retain "On With the Dance." And now comes the announcement that the Mae Murray picture will be kept for the fourth consecutive week, thus making a new record for Cleveland and for the Euclid.

"The Lost City" is upsetting all of the oldest motion picture policies, according to Maurice Lebensburger, manager of the Standard Film Service, through which the serial is released in Ohio, Michigan and Kentucky. It is being booked at all of the high class first-run houses all through the territory. And first-run houses have always shied at serials previously. Among those who have been won over to the serial and have booked "The Lost City" are the Park, Youngstown; Opera House, Warren; Majestic, Ashtabula; Grand, Bucyrus; New Boulevard, Cincinnati; New Rialto, Akron; Orpheum, Cleveland—all first-run houses. And all of them report tremendous success.

"Harold Lloyd is the biggest drawing card we have ever had," said George Rider, manager of the Strand and Orpheum theatres, Cleveland. "He goes so strong with the patrons of both of our houses that we have taken to featuring him equally with our feature photoplay."

R. W. White, contract manager for the Fox Film Corporation, paid local Manager William Shapiro a visit of several days this week, getting local viewpoints preparatory to the annual Fox drive.

M. J. Mintz, in charge of the serials to be released through the Republic Distributing Corporation, was in the city this week arranging with local Manager C. E. Thompson about the initial exploitation of "Whirlwind," the first serial to be released under the Republic banner.

With the closing of contracts this week with the Diamond theatre, Toledo; Lodi theatre, Lodi, and the See-It theatre, Ashtabula Harbor, the United Picture Theatres of America has passed the 100 per cent representation in the Northern Ohio district, according to local Manager Dave Klein. "Every town in our territory has at least one franchise holder in our company," Mr. Klein said, "running all the way from two to seven days."

The New York Masterpiece Distributors, Inc., with R. C. Buttolph as local manager, have opened up a Cleveland office for the distribution of fifty-two "Brady-Made" feature productions, culled from a list of 350 pictures released by William A. Brady during the past four years. With all new prints of these pictures, a full supply of paper and accessories, Mr. Buttolph has already bearded the Ohio exhibitors, and reports a lot of signed contracts.

The first six features to be released through the New York Masterpiece Distributors, Inc., are "The Trap," featuring Alice Brady and Frank Mayo; "The Man of the Hour," with Robert Warwick; "Souls Adrift," co-starring Ethel Clayton and Milton Sills; "Maternity," another Alice Brady picture; "Friday the Thirteenth," with Robert Warwick, and "The Hidden Scar," with an all-star cast, including Ethel Clayton, Holbrook Blinn, Irving Cummings, Montagu Love and Maude Evans.

With the announcement this week that the Citizens Saving and Trust Company and the Union National Bank would not enter their joint building project at the corner of Euclid and East Ninth streets, Cleveland, while building material remains so costly, comes the further announcement that Loew's Euclid theatre, which is located on a part of the property that is to be utilized by the new bank structure, will not be torn down next July, as was expected.

Loew's Euclid theatre lease expires next July. If the bank had proceeded along the lines originally scheduled the Euclid theatre would have ceased to exist by the middle of next summer. Now that the banks are postponing their building project, the Euclid will continue to stand and do business at its present location until they do start building, which is a matter of at least another year.

Sam Morris, who came out of Cleveland several months since to become one of the leading factors in the Selznick Pictures Corporation, was in town for a day last week, and oh! what a reception he got. Everybody in the film business made it his special duty to shake Morris by the hand and tell what's happened in the old place since he went to the Big City to live. It wasn't a business trip. Just a stop over from Detroit.

OKLAHOMA CITY

Peter and John Sinopoule, owners of the Overholser theatre, announce that their house is to be torn down and replaced by a new structure, the estimated cost of which is to be $250,000. Work will start on the new building about April 15, and it is anticipated that the structure will be completed in time to open at the beginning of the fall season. The proposed theatre will be of modern construction and equipment and will have a seating capacity of 2,100.

In the sweeping investigations now being conducted by the Welfare Board of Oklahoma City a thorough probe of the picture theatres in their relation to the boys and girls of the city is to be undertaken. A prohibition of juvenile attendance at the "movies" during school hours is to be recommended. The theatre owners and managers stand ready to enlist their aid in promoting the investigation.

Erie Middleton, former motion picture operator at the Empress theatre in Oklahoma City, has become associated with the local Pathe Exchange. Manager Pickerel of the Pathe exchange is now in New York for business conferences.

The Emergency Film Service of Dallas, Texas, has been incorporated with a capital stock of $25,000. The incorporators are H. A. Rogers, J. G. Tomlin and V. O. Travers, all of Dallas.

Managers, operators and ticket sellers of two moving picture shows at Ponca City, Okla., were arrested Monday on a charge of violating the Sunday closing law. It is charged that these shows remained open, both on Sunday, February 15, and on Sunday, February 22. The theatre people will fight the charges against them in the higher courts. Defendants in the case are B. C. Wieck and J. C. Murray, and Floy Stevens and Arthur Erwin, operators.

All of the theatres and moving picture houses at Fort Worth, Texas, remained closed February 29, although all other places of business were opened as usual. The theatres are preparing to open again next Sunday, and will continue to open on Sunday until absolutely prohibited by the higher courts after test cases have been tried on their merits.

DETROIT

Harry A. Ross, Detroit manager for Famous Players-Lasky, has left for New York to take the position of assistant sales manager for the same corporation. He is succeeded locally by Charles W. Perry, who has been assistant manager of the local office. Mr. Ross has been associated with the motion picture industry for eleven years, all of which have been with Mutual and Paramount. He left the managership of the Mutual exchange in Cleveland to come to Detroit.

One of the newest of publicity stunts is the giving of free motion picture performances in the store of the J. L. Hudson company, one of the city's big department stores, every Saturday morning. Harry Guest, of the local exchange, promoted the plan and is presenting advance showings of releases.

Three gunmen visited the Miles theatre last Monday noon, knocked down the bookkeeper in the office on the second floor and made their escape with $5,100, comprising the Saturday and Sunday receipts.

Louis K. Sidney of St. Louis has succeeded Sol Lawrence as manager of the Washington theatre. Mr. Lawrence is going to the New Terminal theatre in Newark for the Fox organization.

Henry S. Koppin says he will start actual building in June on the Catherine, a 2,000-seat house at Antoine and Catherine streets.

It is announced that Arthur S. Hyman has no further interest in Arthur S. Hyman Attractions, Inc., a Michigan states right exchange. C. O. Brokaw is in charge of the business.

It has developed that under the lease of the Miles theatre to Charles H. Miles, who originally built this house, Mr. Miles will pay the theatre company a total of $6,120,000 in rentals during the sixty and odd years the lease runs.

William Kent, assistant manager of the Select office, has been promoted to manager of the Toronto office for the same organization. General Manager Sam Morris made the appointment.

Eli M. Orowitz of Chester, Pa., has arrived to take charge of exploitation at the Paramount exchange, succeeding T. E. Planck. Mr. Orowitz's most exploitation stunts will concern "Huckleberry Finn," which opens at the Broadway Strand on March 21.

George De Rue has becomes sales manager for Hyman Attractions. He handled the Mutual exchange for many years.

So great was the attendance at the Broadway Strand for "On with the Dance," the picture has been held over for a third week, the decision not being made until Thursday.

Safe robbers, who have been flooding Detroit, tried their skill at the Merrick theatre, but found nothing of value.

M. A. Slepski, who recently announced a new theatre on Grand River avenue, says the house will seat 2,500 and the building, with stores and offices, will cost $300,000. Al. Mareski has been made manager of Mr. Slepski's Free Poland theatre.

PROVIDENCE

A big tract of land has been bought in Olneyville Square for the erection of a modern moving picture house. Olneyville is a section of Providence about 15 minutes car ride from the heart of the city. In the square is located the Royal theatre, the only picture house in that section. It has dominated the field for the past five years and changes its programme three times a week. An attempt to open a theatre on the site bought some years ago met with resistance on the part of a Baptist church across the street.

The Modern theatre repeated Mary Pickford's Pollyanna the week of March 8, after having run it before capacity houses the previous week. It is the second time this season that a Mary Pickford picture has run two weeks here.

Moving picture managers here are facing a little "difficulty" with ushers, scrubwomen and other employes, not classed under the regular unions. A union has been formed and delegates are "waiting" on the managers in the hopes of being recognized. Proprietors anticipate little trouble, however, because they declare they will have no trouble in filling their places if it comes to the stage of making a shift because of the union.

With the session of the State Legislature more than three-quarters over, the moving picture bill to legalize moving pictures on Sunday is still in the hands of the committee with little prospect of its being brought out. Managers will in a few days, however, band together in an attempt to have at least a hearing on the measure.

SAN DIEGO

Mrs. Edith Whitson, wife of W. W. Whitson, owner of the Plaza theatre, San Diego, Cal., died at her home in that city on March 4th after a long illness. She had resided in San Diego for 35 years.

The Garden theatre has been opened at La Jolla, a suburb of San Diego, Cal., by Charles Webstead.

Mrs. M. A. Large has bought the Come Again theatre on Imperial avenue, between 25th and 26th streets, San Diego, Cal., and re-opened it under the name of the Victory.

CANADA

Hon. Peter Smith, Toronto, the new provincial treasurer of Ontario, jumped into the limelight on March 2 by announcing that "not while I retain my senses" would the tax on theatre tickets in the Province of Ontario be removed. He declined to follow the example established by the Province of Quebec in turning over the ticket tax to the various local municipalities.

The revived "Burlesque on Carmen," starring Charlie Chaplin, has been organized into a road show, a feature of which is a musical revue headed by Joe Carr, a well-known Toronto comedian. The management of the show is in the hands of Mike Wilkes of Toronto.

Exhibitors and others flocked to the Dominion theatre, Ottawa, Ontario, on Monday evening, March 1, for a private showing of three episodes of "Daredevil Jack," the Pathe serial starring Jack Dempsey.

The Coleman Theatre Equipment Company, 12 Queen street, East, Toronto, Canadian distributors of a considerable variety of theatre supplies, has appointed Theatre Supplies, Limited, 304 McLean block, Calgary, Alberta, as its Western Canadian agents.

SEATTLE

Harry C. Arthur, Jr., who was recently appointed division manager for the United Pictures Corporation, with headquarters in Seattle, has resigned his position and is going with the National Pictures.

Charles R. Gilmour, division manager for National, was a ten-day visitor in Seattle and is now going back to his headquarters.

R. H. B. Wright has resigned from the Northwest Exhibitors' Circuit and, before taking up his new position he will go to Canada and look after some business interests.

R. C. Montgomery, salesman for Realart pictures, has been sent to Montana again to make a clean-up.

Jack Lannon, president of the Greater Features Company, has left for an extensive trip to Chicago, New York and other buying centers to secure some more state right pictures.

Ashley McRae, chief salesman for the Greater Features, Incorporated, was recently sent to Montana to book the popular picture "U 35." As soon as he reached Butte, his first stop, he was taken down with the "flu" and was compelled to enter a hospital. He is well now after an illness of practically four weeks.

Frank A. Bernardo, since last May in charge of Oregon south of the Columbia river, and Western Washington northward to the Canadian line, for the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, has been promoted to the position of northwest manager for Goldwyn. J. A. Koerpel, former manager, has been sent to San Francisco to assume Mr. Aronson's position as division manager. Mr. Aronson will leave for Australia as soon as possible, where he will represent the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation.

Mr. Bernardo long has been a resident of Seattle, former owner and manager of a Seattle picture house, and one of the best known photoplay salesmen of the northwest.

NEW ORLEANS

J. J. Fabacher is one of the younger men of New Orleans who is making a creditable reputation in the film business. He is assistant manager under Jack Stewart in the New Orleans office of the Goldwyn company.

J. Perlitz of the Fern theatre in New Orleans did some extensive and attracting exploiting of the "Jinx" when showing it in the Fern. Black cats, signifying Jinx, were strung from every incandescent in the front of the show. The lobby was decorated with as many black cats as could be attractively arranged therein. Strings of black cats were stretched from telephone poles to the front of the building.

Rene Broussard, owner of the Pastime theatre at Broussard, La., visited New Orleans last week and bought as many feature films as he could safely book, from various exchanges.

Fred Hedrich of the Lyceum and Mecca theatres of New Orleans has been very busy of late with the construction of the new Mecca, which, he says, will be the largest, most attractive suburban theatre in New Orleans.

Mrs. Bemiss of the Lomo theatre Hammond, La., says the remodelling of her house soon will be completed without the loss of a single day's business, the work having been done by halves.

"Jovial" 'Gene Clark and "Turk" Carter are both laid up with severe colds, leaving the Saenger organization without special representatives.

A thief entered the office of the manager of the Tudor theatre one night last week. He pried open the desk of Fred Clapp and took $109. The theft was discovered by Chester Gondolf, bookkeeper. The thief was not caught.

CINCINNATI

A new first-run theatre will open its doors in Cincinnati this week when the old Standard theatre, formerly a burlesque house, will be turned over to the "movies" under the name of the "Boulevard Theatre." The house has been entirely remodeled and is modern in every respect. The largest pipe organ in the city has been installed, and the theatre will boast the only gold-fibre screen in town. The house will be under the management of H. Fischer. The opening attraction will be "The Beloved Cheater" and the first episode of the serial 'The Lost City." Manager Fischer is planning a big publicity campaign for the opening, including heavy newspaper advertising, teasers, and a unique lobby display.

Felix Feist, vice-president of the Goldwyn Film Company, is in Cincinnati this week. He was welcomed by Oscar F. Bower, resident manager, Arthur Lucas, of Atlanta, division manager, and Felix Mendelssohn, Goldwyn's New York representative.

J. Chesborough has opened up a new colored house in Columbus, Ohio, on the east side.

W. H. Goldstein, general sales manager of Universal Exchanges, and Art Schmidt, district manager, were visitors at the local Universal office this week.

Nate Lefkowitz, manager of the Cincinnati Standard Film Service office, is planning for the near future a public screening of the first episode of "The Lost City," and will issue invitations to exhibitors throughout the territory.

$105,000 was paid by Thomas Noctor and associates in the recent purchase of the People's theatre and property adjoining at Thirteenth and Vine streets. The deal, which was one of the largest in local theatrical circles for years, also included the leasing of Heuck's Opera House. Associated with Mr. Noctor in the transaction were Thomas Reilly, owner of the Colonial theatre, and interested in the Avenue, Ohio, Center and other houses; Joseph Aute, who is interested in the Hippodrome and Victoria theatres, and George Talbot, who has been manager of the People's theatre since its control by the Noctor interests.

Under the new plan, as announced, the People's theatre will continue throughout the current season without change of policy, which was one of vaudeville and features, while Heuck's Opera House, which has also been showing a mixed program, will be operated as a popular-priced dramatic theatre.

BUFFALO

The city council has adopted the film exchange fire prevention ordinance, with the result that every exchange in Buffalo faces the necessity of moving to meet the requirement of 15 feet on all sides of the office. Two new exchange buildings are now under process of construction. One will house Metro, Universal, United, Republic, Vitagraph, and the other Famous Players-Lasky and another office, which according to rumor is Realart. Exchanges, under the ordinance, are given until June 1, 1921, to meet the requirements of the ordinance. By that time it is expected that most exchanges will be in new buildings. Talk of a large film building is being revived in Buffalo.

The Elk theatre, 824 Elk street, in the heart of the "Emerald Isle" district, has been sold for F. L. Pfennig by the Hunt Business Agency.

J. C. Ragland, general sales manager of Realart Pictures Corporation, inspected the local exchange the week of March 1 and complimented Henry E. Wilkinson, local manager, on the showing made by the office. Alice Brady was also in Buffalo the same week in her stage play and in the Realart production of "The Fear Market," which Manager Ira M. Mosher of the Palace presented for a four-day showing.

Billie Burke was the star of a motion picture show given in the North Evans Congregational church Thursday evening, March 5. Billie appeared in "Peggy," which was the headliner of a film show put on by Lawrence Heimburg, principal of the Woodlawn school.

The new Hathaway theatre in Binghamton will be ready for the public in six weeks. The house will cost $250,000.

C. A. Taylor, Pathe exchange manager, was in charge of the special exchangemen's car on the Empire, which left Buffalo Monday night, March 8, for the Utica convention.

George Scherrer, of restaurant fame, who owns the Savoy theatre in Syracuse, will break ground May 1 for a handsome, modern motion picture theatre in Corning, N. Y. He will also erect a theatre in Cuba and has in addition, purchased a site in Warren street, Syracuse, on which he will build a 3,500-seat picture palace, which will be the largest in the salt city.

Frank S. Hopkins, Universal manager, has engaged Otto Schroepel, former Hodkinson representative at the Pathe office, as booker.

Jacob Rosing is building a 2,500-seat house in the vicinity of Broadway and Fillmore avenue which will cost, according to reports, $250,000. Work has commenced on the structure and it will open in September under the general direction of George Rosing.

Manager George A. Hickey came in for some flattering comments on the general excellence of the Goldwyn office upon the occasion of the visit of C. Paulson and J. C. McConville, auditors from the home office. "The Buffalo office is one of the best we have gone over on our trip," said Mr. McConville.

Harry Dixon, former manager of the Modern Feature Film exchange, is now a salesman on the Pioneer staff. Mr. Dixon will soon assume the management of the new Rivoli on Broadway.

The new Strand theatre opened Monday, March 8, in Binghamton with Jack Pickford in "The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come," and "The Blooming Angel," both Goldwyn attractions. Fred Gillen is manager of the new Binghamton house.

Three new salesmen have been added to the local Goldwyn staff. They are H. S. Riehl, George Van Den Vouver and Howard Morgan, the latter formerly connected with Vitagraph. E. E. Thompson, exploitation man, has been transferred to New York.

"Eddie" McBride, formerly a reporter on the staff of the Buffalo Evening News, is now breaking into the film game at the local Fox office.

Henry Stichter has resigned as press agent at the Star theatre on account of the increased amount of work at the office of Gardiner Pictures, Inc., where Mr. Stichter is in charge of publicity.

TAMPA

A new producing company, known as the American Bioscope Films Trust, has leased seventeen acres of land on the edge of Tampa and is now at work erecting stages, developing plant and other buildings. Bert Tracy, it is said, will be the director. He is now at work completing fourteen comedies for the "Sunbeam Comedies" at Jacksonville, after which he will come to Tampa and take charge of the Bioscope productions.

Tamar Lane, the production manager of the Character Pictures Corp. of New York, is in Tampa looking over locations for a photoplay they will produce, to be called "The Isle of Destiny." Mr. Lane finds conditions so favorable that he has announced he will bring his company here the first of April.

INDIANAPOLIS

J. S. Knight of Morgantown sustained a loss of $3,000, when a fire destroyed his motion picture theatre. The loss was partially covered by insurance.

The Circle had a theatre party for the Indianapolis Rotary Club last week. Films of the Rotary convention taken in Ft. Wayne several weeks ago were the special attraction.

A rumor is abroad that one of the numerous New York combines seeking theatrical locations throughout the country is bidding for a $500,000 location in Evansville.

Incidentally, the Standard Realty Company of Evansville announces its intention of erecting a million dollar house at the corner of Main and Sixth streets. The same men are behind this company who have money in the Bankers-Merchants Theater Company in Indianapolis. The company intends to build in Indianapolis.

Kenneth Hackley, John L. Bond and James E. Childress of Earle Parke, Ind., have incorporated the Hackley Film Corporation with capital of $50,000.

Film Illustrates Talk of State Official

Secretary of State Francis M. Hugo is a firm believer in the adaptability of a motion picture to state work. In fact Mr. Hugo is already using a two-reel feature, supplementing and illustrating the talks which he is giving before chambers of commerce and other bodies, in an effort to lessen the number of automobile accidents in which pedestrians figure.

In every case, proprietors of motion picture theatres have joined Mr. Hugo in this work, donating their places for the Saturday morning meetings intended solely for children. Mr. Hugo gives a twenty-minute talk, calling attention to the need of greater caution in crossing streets and highways.

Many other of New York State's departments are also utilizing motion pictures in talks describing the activities of the respective departments.

Ottawa Teachers Urge a School Theatre

The official report of the recent convention of the School Teachers' Institute of Ottawa, Ontario, contains a strong recommendation for the use of moving pictures for the teaching of geography to the children.

The recommendation calls for the establishment of a large theatre in which classes could be held daily. It was also urged that the municipal or school-theatre should be used for school extension courses and for the education of the parents and adults of the community at the expense of the city.

West Is New Manager in La Crosse, Wis.

C. R. (Hi) West, former city editor of The Minneapolis Tribune, and more recently in the publicity department of the Southern Enterprises, at Dallas, Tex., now is advertising manager for the LaCrosse Theatres Company, which operates six theatres in La Crosse, Wis., playing vaudeville, legitimate road shows and motion pictures.

CHRISTIE

Further expansion of the Christie Film Company became known yesterday when Al E. Christie, President and Supervising Director, completed a deal purchasing three acres of ground adjoining the Hollywood Studios where additional stages will be built. The new plot is on Selma avenue and now gives the Christie Company more than a block of land for its present site. In addition, negotiations are under way by the Christie brothers for the purchase of twelve acres near the present site.

Harry Edwards, who since returning from the navy has served as assistant to Al E. Christie, has been promoted to the office of Production Manager of the Christie Film Company. Edwards formerly played in Christie Comedies prior to his entrance in the navy, he being leading man at that time for Betty Compson.

Activities at the Christie plant are now centered about the filming of the first Chic Sales subject for Robertson-Cole which is being directed by Al Christie and Scott Sidney. Exterior scenes for this story, "The Smart Aleck," which is laid in a small town, are being filmed in Sunland, California. The cast includes Colleen Moore, Walt Whitman, Colin Kenny, Bert Woodruff, Lydia Yeamans Titus, J. P. Lockney and others.

METRO

The big Metro plant is the quietest it has been for many months, but next week will see renewed activity for by that time everything will be in readiness for six producing units to begin active production.

The first of the new series to be started will be that of the Bert Lytell company in the filming of "The Temple of Dawn," with Dallas FitzGerald as director. Probably the next will be the company making "Parlor, Bedroom and Bath," with Viola Dana as star and Eugene Pallette as her leading man. Edward Dillon has come to the coast especially to direct this picture.

Other scripts now in readiness for the producing company are those for "The Outsider," which will star Alice Lake and "Fine Feathers," starring May Allison, but for these units no director has been selected.

"Hearts Are Trumps," is the next Drury Lane picture which will be produced by Rex Ingram with an All Star cast and another All Star cast will make the first of the Winchell Smith productions, "The New Henrietta," script for which is now being completed by June Mathis.

The report that John E. Ince is to leave Metro is denied by officials at the studio and plans are being made for this director to begin work shortly after the completion of editing "Old Lady 31."

The C. E. Shurtleff company producing "Burning Daylight," with Mitchell Lewis as star, is still at Truckee, California, making a number of the exteriors for this first Shurtleff release. Practically all of the interior scenes were completed at the studio before the company went to the snow country and so an early completion of the film is expected.

This picture will have an unusual array of talent including several spectacular characters. One of particular interest is Scott Turner, the original "Cherokee Kid," of the Alaskan gold field country and probably the most famous gambler of the gold rush days.

Another character of interest is that taken by William V. Mong who appears in the role of a down and out attorney whose greatest enemy is booze.

E. Carl Wallen, staff photographer for International News Reel, released through Universal, who is said to be the only man to photograph the Sultan of Turkey

FOX

This week finds all of the Fox units at work with the exception of one. The William Russel unit has gone to Fort Bragg in the redwood country of northern California where exteriors for an original story by Julius Furthman, "Big Jim O'Kane," will be filmed by director Emmett J. Flynn. The cast accompanying Russell includes Eileen Percy, Frank Brownlee, Fred Warren and Lon Poff.

The Buck Jones company which has been delayed in production because of illness of Jones this week resumed the production of "Forbidden Trails," under the direction of Scott Dunlap, who is author of the scenario which is adapted from the Charles Alden Seltzer story of the same name. Stanton Heck, William Elmer, George Kunkel and Fred Herzog are the players selected to support Jones.

Director Howard M. Mitchell continues work on "His Harvest," starring Shirley Mason. Edward J. LeSaint is making series of "Rose of Nome," and Denison Clift is at work on the big scenes for the Madlaine Traverse production now temporarily known as "The Spirit of Good." The Tom Mix company has returned from central California where exteriors were made for "No Limit Parson," by Director Jacques Jaccard.

The William Farnum company has completed all scenes for "Orphans" and the star is taking a vacation at Cataline Islands while director J. Gordon Edwards completes the editing of this film.

Work on the multiple reel comedy being made by Hampton DelRuth and other comedy directors of the Fox organization is progressing, but no date has been fixed for the completion of this subject which will be in six reels. All of the comediennes of the Fox organization as well as the beauty chorus with amplifications are taking part in this film.

NEILAN

Marshall Neilan and organization are now at the Jasper Hollywood studios where they will remain for a period of at least six months while Neilan's studio is being completed.

Neilan has been preparing for the making of his third First National release and has selected cast for this production which will include Walter Long, Agnes Ayers, Charles West, Barney Sherry, Noah Beery, Little Leslie Barry and Bull Montana. The filming of this subject is being started this week.

Producer Neilan is also making arrangements for the filming of a series of short subjects adapted from the Booth Tarkington "Penrod" stories and has engaged Reed Heustis, sporting writer of the Los Angeles Herald, to prepare the continuity, and Jack McDermott will direct the making of these pictures which will feature Leslie Barry.

Henry Cronjager, cameraman of the Marshall Neilan productions, is perfecting an attachment for a still camera to a motion picture camera to make possible the taking of still photographs during the making of scenes. By this device it is claimed action photographs can be secured to be highly advantageous to all publicity and promotion work.

GOLDWYN

Two new subjects were put into production at Goldwyn studios this week when Director Paul Scardon began the filming of "Milestones" and Pauline Frederick did her first work for "Madame X" under the direction of Frank Lloyd. "Milestone" will be the first picture made by Scardon in the West and the cast selected includes Lewis S. Stone, who recently appeared in Marshall Neilan's "The River's End;" and Alice Hollister, who returns to the screen after an absence of over eighteen months. Others who will play in this picture are Harvey Clark, Gertrude Norman and Gerald Pring.

The only members of the supporting cast for Pauline Frederick engaged are William Courtleigh, who will play the part of the judge, and Casson Ferguson, who will appear in the role of Raymond.

Victor Schertzinger has completed the filming of "The Slim Princess," with Mabel Normand and Sidney Alcott has made the last scenes for the first Rupert Hughes eminent authors production, "Scratch My Back," which has T. Roy Barnes and Helene Chadwick in the feature roles.

Roy Barnes and the company playing in "The Branding Iron" have gone to Truckee for snow scenes and director Al Green and the Jack Pickford company are leaving for San Diego to make exteriors for "The Double Dyed Deceiver."

E. Mason Hopper, who has directed the first three of the "Edgar" series for Goldwyn has been transferred to feature production and will direct the filming of "Empire Builders," by Mary Roberts Rinehart. Cullen Landis is the only player so far engaged for this subject.

Nathan Litson, who has been manager of production at Goldwyn, is to direct the making of the remaining nine numbers of the "Edgar" series and this week is beginning his first work as director.

C. E. Shurtleff, president of C. E. Shurtleff, Inc., owners of the exclusive rights to Jack London stories

SELZNICK

All four Selznick producing units are at work at the Brunton studios after a brief absence for exterior scenes. Owen Moore is working in a last scene under the direction of Wesley Ruggles for Selznick picture in "His Word of Honor," and Eugene O'Brien, with his director, Robert Ellis, recently arrived from the East, has started work in "The Figurehead," by John Lynch, also a Selznick picture. The cast selected to support O'Brien includes Anna Q. Nillson, Edwin Stevens, Ora Carewe, Joseph Gerard and Kate Parks. The Lawrence Weber company, headed by Edith Hallor, is working on "Just Behind the Door," a Republic release. George Irving is directing and the cast includes J. Barney Sherry, Arnold Gregg, Betty Blythe, and Ida Lewis. The rumors and stories recently published that Edith Hallor is to return to the speaking stage are incorrect, at least for the present. Lawrence Weber, theatrical and motion picture producer, recently announced that it had been impossible for him to induce Miss Hallor to leave Selznick organization and go to New York to play in "The Beautiful Virgin," a production now under way for the speaking stage in New York.

The third subject being made for National Motion Picture theaters, titled "The Invisible Divorce," will have Grace Darmond and Walter Miller as principals in addition to Walter McGrail and Leatrice Joy. This unit under the direction of Tom Mills has been filming exterior scenes in the California oil well section and have now returned to the studio to make interiors.

F. P. LASKY

One of the mammoth stages at Lasky Studio has been transferred into a large interior of an athletic club gymnasium for scenes in the Robert Warwick picture now being made from Walter Wood's scenario adaptation from "The Man From Blankleys." The big event of the gym will be a series of sparring bouts between Warwick and Kid McCoy (Norman Selby). Joseph Henaberry is in charge of direction and Bebe Daniels is feminine lead.

Ethel Clayton has completed work in "The Ladder of Lies" under the direction of Tom Forman and the first of the week will begin a new picture titled "All In A Night," which will be directed by Thomas C. Heffron. The cast has not been fully selected.

Bryant Washburn and director James Cruze are temporarily moving their producing activities to the Morosco studio where scenes are being made from an adaptation from the Broadhurst story "What Happened to Jones," scenario of which was prepared by Elmer Harris. Margaret Loomis is playing opposite Washburn.

"What's Your Hurry" is the title selected for the Wallace Reid production now in the making from the Byron Morgan story "The Hippopotamus Parade." Lois Wilson is Reid's leading woman in this picture, this being the first time she has played opposite Reid.

Will Rogers, in "The Strange Boarder," a Goldwyn picture

Three principals have been selected for the William C. DeMille production which will be started the latter part of this month. Tom Meighn will play the title role of Conrad in "The Quest of His Youth," and Kathlyn Williams has been especially engaged for one of the leading roles. Margaret Loomis has been cast for a role in this subject.

C. B. DeMille continues on his next production but no additional information has been given concerning story, cast or title. William D. Taylor will not be ready to begin the filming of "Young America" until about April 1.

NATIONAL

The National Film Corporation of America this week began the production of a series of two reel comedies which will feature "Buddy Post" a young giant measuring 6 feet 6 inches in heighth and weighing 325 lbs. A special series of stories are to be written to fit the comedian by L. E. Jefferson and the supporting cast will be selected to fit the needs of each story. The series will be known as "Buddy Post" comedies.

Helen Howard, who has played in a number of American productions with Margarita Fisher, William Russell and others, has been engaged by the National to play leads in a series of comedies.

Jack Hoxie, who was starred in "The Lightning Bride" serial will by the first of April be in readiness to begin the filming of a new serial for National. Hoxie is to be supported in the serial by Lucille Rubey, who at present is playing in Capital comedies opposite Neal Burns. Bert Glennon, who photographed "The Lightning Bride" serial will be cameraman on the new serial.

INCE

With the first subject "Wheelbarrow Webster" starring Lloyd Hughes completed, work is to be started on the filming of "Homespun Folks" shortly at Ince Studio and according to announcement made this week "Homespun Folks" will be released as a Thos. Ince super-special attraction. The story is by Julien Josephson, author of a number of Charles Ray stories, and the recent MacLean May comedy "Shakespeare Clancy." The scenes for "Homespun Folks" are laid in a little country town, where one man controls all affairs. The changing of this condition gives the foundation for the story, which introduces romance and adventure.

Director Fred Niblo is progressing in the filming of "The Incubus" adapted from the Marjorie Benton Cooke story by Agnes Christine Johnston and starring Enid Bennett. The plot of the story is the eternal triangle and the new phase of this story being that a friend of the husband, who has kept up the alimony to his divorced wife falls in love with her. The subject is a drama, but lightened with touches of comedy.

The MacLean-May Company with a number of Ince hydro-aeroplanes have gone to the San Diego Aviation field for the making of a number of scenes for "Lucid Intervals." This subject is being directed by Jack Nelson, who has Bert Cann as his photographer. The story is by Arthur Mackin and gives MacLean the role of a book agent, with Miss May aiding him in order to hasten their wedding

George H. Minnick has been engaged as Fire Chief of the Ince Studio and is organizing a company of twenty men and supervising the installation of fire fighting apparatus. Minnick was for twenty-three years Captain of the Philadelphia Fire Bureau and is nationally known in Ince Fire Prevention circles.

Charles H. Kyson has been appointed director of Sets for the Ince Studio. Following graduation from Columbia University, he studied abroad and more recently has been associated with a number of the West Coast Film companies. He was in charge of Art decoration for "The Luck of the Irish," "The Splendid Hazard," "The Heart of a Fool," "Don't Change Your Husband" and other subjects.

A. Lincoln Hart, a pioneer director of the speaking stage, is to direct the forthcoming Louise Glaum production, work on which will be started on Miss Glaum's productions on the speaking stage and has a nation wide reputation for his ability

The Hobart Bosworth subject "Mr. McNiel" made by J. Parker Read, Jr., under the direction of Roy H. Marshall, is being finished this week. This is an adaptation from the Frank Brownlow story of the same name. The cast for this picture includes Jeane Calhoun, in the role of Sylvia Harris, and the supporting cast has Roland Lee, William West and little Mary Jane Irving

UNIVERSAL

The sudden departure of Tarkington Baker, who for the past several months has served as general manager at Universal City, caused considerable surprise. Mr. Baker left for New York on the 10th, following the issuance of a statement that he had tendered his resignation to President Carl Laemmle about a month ago and that it was imperative that he get back to New York without further delay. W. O. Howard, who has been assistant to Mr. Baker is temporarily in charge of the Universal studios, and it is expected there that an appointment of a general manager will be announced within a short time.

The change in management has not altered producing activities and all production plans are going ahead on schedule.

At the present time, there are seven companies working at Universal City; two of these on serial, two on short western subjects, two on feature productions and one on a five reel comedy drama, in addition to the films that are now in charge of the editing department.

Robert Anderson, who was recently engaged to direct a series of comedies has begun work on the filming of the first, which is "Monsieur Couperin" from scenario by Bernard McConlell. Anderson has a cast which includes Benla Booker, Frances Brissell, William DeVaull, Olga Grey, Syd Talbrook and Helena Holtz

Other feature productions are "Virginia" adapted for the screen by Doris Schroeder and being directed by Phil Rosen and "A Tokio Siren" starring Tsuru Aoki. The latter is being directed by Norman Dawn with Jack Livingston as leading man and other principals including Peggy Pearce, Florence Hart, Arthur Jasmine and Frederick Vroom.

Lyons and Moran are now editing their first five reel comedy drama "Everything but the Truth" and Lynn Reynolds is at work on "Bullet Proof" and Harry Carey on

A new portrait of Gloria Swanson, in Cecil DeMille's "Why Change Your Wife?" a Paramount-Artcraft feature

"The Daring Duchess". All of these films will be ready for shipment to New York in a short time.

Reeves Eason is to direct the next Harry Carey story, which will be "Crossed Claims". The cast will be selected this week and work of filming the story will be started in a few days.

"Hoot" Gibson is now working under the direction of Mack V. Wright in a short western subject entitled "Pardners."

The serials in the making are "The Moon Riders" with Art Acord and "The Vanishing Dagger" starring Eddie Polo.

BRUNTON

Producing activities at the Brunton Studios are almost up to the capacity of the big plant, there being more than a dozen companies now at work there including the four Selznick units. Director Ernest C. Warde and the J. Warren Kerrigan company are at work on "The House of Whispers," which is an adaptation from the William Johnston novel of the same name and the Bessie Barriscale Company being directed by William C. Cabanne, is back from San Francisco where they made scenes from on board an oriental liner for a forthcoming production.

The B. B. Hampton production organization has the "U. P. Trail," in production under the direction of Jack Conway and will put another subject in production within the next few days.

Allan Dwan is home from his trip to New York and will shortly start the filming of his last subject for Mayflower corporation. At the present time he is editing the three pictures recently filmed for this company.

The Betty Compson company recently organized in New York has started work on the first production which is titled, "The Test," and will be made under the direction of Arthur Rosson. The cast engaged to support Miss Compson includes Clara Horton, Ralph Lewis, Roy Stewart, Emory Johnson, Roscoe Karns, Betty Schade and several others. Hal Rosson who has worked with his brother director, Arthur Rosson, on a number of productions, is leaving for the east where he will be with International.

The Mary Pickford organization has begun rehearsal on the second release for United Artists, "'Op o' my Thumb." The cast has not all been definitely selected.

The Annette Kellerman Company has finished interior scenes and are now working on location in the well known Pacific ocean. Miss Sylvia Breamer, recently placed under year contract by Mayflower, has arrived in Los Angeles and preparations are being made for the filming of her first subject, "Athalie," which will be directed by Sidney A. Franklin. This Robert W. Chambers story will have a cast composed of Anna Q. Nillson, Conrad Napel, Robert Cain, Sam DeGrasse and others.

Work of preparing the continuity for the first Dustin Farnum Robertson and Cole subject, an adaptation from the book, "Big Happiness," is in charge of Jack Cunningham and director Colin Campbell expects to begin the filming of this within the next two weeks.

HERE AND THERE

The third of the Clara Kimball Young productions for Equity was finished this week by Director Harry Garson, when the last scenes for "The Soul of Rafael" were filmed at the Allesandro Street studio. This story is an adaptation from the one of the same name by Marah Ellis Ryan, author of "Told in the Hills" and other successful novels. The story is laid in the California days in the late regime of the Spanish and for the production a number of very elaborate sets reproducing the missions of California were filmed. Supporting Miss Young in this subject are Bert Grassby, Frank Glendon, one Della Ouize and Miss Ruth King.

The subject will be ready for shipment to New York within a few days.

General Manager Sam E. Rork of Katherine MacDonald Photoplay Corporation has engaged James Young to perfect the next picture starring Miss MacDonald. This will be "The Notorious Miss Lisle," adapted from the story of the same name by Mrs. Barbee Reynolds The picture will be cast within the next few days.

President Hal Roach of the Rolin Film Company this week moved the entire organization to the new studios of the company at Culver City. The new plant covers several acres of ground and has a large administration building of mission design, two big stages and other necessary buildings for the various departments.

The new plant will enable Producer Roach to realize many of his ambitions with respect to comedy production and considerable improvement in production and general atmospheric condition of all scenes will be noted in the forthcoming subjects made at the new plant. For some time it has been impossible for the company to make a number of their scenes at Culver City Studios, and these scenes will be in early issues of the Harold Lloyd comedies as well as those featuring Harry Pollard and Beatrice LaPlante.

The Douglas Fairbanks Company is home from spending three weeks in the wilds of Arizona, north of Winslow, where they made the western scenes for the coming Fairbank's production, which has been given the permanent title of "The Mollycoddle." Those who accompanied Producer Actor Fairbanks to this wild location, 175 miles from a railroad were Ruth Renick, Wallace Beery and Betty Bouton, George Steward, Paul Burns, Adele Farrington, together with scenario writer Tom Geraghty and Cameraman William Empey and Harry Thrope. In addition Mr. Fairbanks required a large number of technical men and the party included more than sixty.

Jesse D. Hampton has engaged William J. Bowman to direct the next William Duncan picture, which will be "The Man From Make Believe." The continuity for this story is being written by Eugene B. Lewis.

The recently organized Pandora Productions, Inc., has completed its first subject. "The Crucifix of Destiny," and have taken up the making of "The Miner's Dream of Home," which will feature Wheeler Dryden, an Englishman. R. D. Armstrong, who has been connected with several Los Angeles studios and produced several pictures in Japan, is in charge of direction. T. J. Shirley is General Manager, H. E. Wagner and C. J. Barber, cameramen and Agnes Parsons, continuity and title writer.

Captain W. A. Williams, half owner of the La Tosca Theatre, who was one of the first twenty American aviators to go to France and one of the three to return, recently left Los Angeles to go back to France to claim a bride, who is a former French countess. While enroute Capt. Williams was taken ill with influenza in New York, and after recovering sailed for London. Cablegrams this week brought the information he was suffering from a relapse, and is now in a London hospital. When Capt. Williams left New York he expected to be back here with his bride by April 1st.

E. H. Emmick, owner of the Peerless Exchanges at San Francisco and Los Angeles, is spending two weeks in Los Angeles supervising the work of this exchange handled by Harry MacIntyre. Mr. Emmick was accompanied to Los Angeles by Mrs. Emmick, they visiting all theatres enroute by an auto trip.

Elinor Faire, now adding her winsome beauty to Universal pictures

B. F. Rosenberg, who has been Metro branch manager at Salt Lake for two years, and the past two months has been serving in a like capacity at Denver, has been selected as manager of the Los Angeles Metro exchange to succeed Arthur B. Lamb, who has taken a position on the executive staff at the Metro studios. Western Representative Harry Lustig has been in charge of the Los Angeles branch for the past few weeks.

C. L. Theuerkauf, Los Angeles Universal Exchange manager, and Director Eric Von Stroheim have returned from an auto trip to Bakersfield, California. While at that city Director Von Stroheim made personal appearances at several of the theatres conducted by the Grogg Amusement Company.

Harry H. Hicks, for ten years identified with the film trade as manager of exchanges or special representative, has tendered his resignation as manager of the Vitagraph Los Angeles branch to accept the management of the photoplay and organ department of Sherman Clay and Company for the Northern California and Nevada territory. In this position he will have the exclusive sale of American Fotoplayers in this territory.

Mr. Hicks has served as manager of the General in all of their branches west of Omaha; opened the Select offices in San Francisco, and later served as manager of this exchange in San Francisco, and later served as manager of this exchange in San Francisco, Seattle, and Cincinnati. From the latter city he returned to Los Angeles and has since been manager of the Vitagraph.

SIMPLE SOULS

Herbert Raymond, one of the owners of the Raymond Amusement Company, owners of the Rosemary Theatre at Ocean Park, died during the past week of influenza.

F. L. Brown is the new manager of the Laughlin Theatre at Long Beach which is owned by the Broadway Amusement Company which conducts the Superba Theatre in Los Angeles.

W. L. Merrill, who served as branche manager for the Hallmark Pictures in Los Angeles, has tendered his resignation, and accepted the management of the Sun Exchange, an independent one, at San Francisco.

Theodore Bendix of the Bendix Music Bureau, 701 Seventh Avenue, New York, is in Los Angeles making arrangements with theatres to use musical talent furnished through this bureau.

Clune's Auditorium which has been one of the historical theatres of the film industry of the west coast since its opening as a motion picture house more than five years ago, is to become the home of the Philo Harmonic Orchestra of Los Angeles, and will be used exclusively for concerts, as Wm. H. Clune has sold his lease on the building, owned by the Baptist Association of Los Angeles, to W. A. Clark, Jr.

This sale does not mean that Mr. Clune is leaving the film industry, for he still retains two other theatres, Clune's Broadway, Los Angeles and Clune's Theatre at Santa Anna in addition to owning the Clune studio now occupied by the Douglas Fairbanks Company and conducting the Clune Artificial Lighting Company which furnishes light and power for the making of motion pictures at studios or on location.

A scene from Maurice Tourneur's presentation of Jacques Futrelle's novel, "My Lady's Garter," a Paramount-Artcraft release

However, the sale of the lease points to a change in the industry so far as Los Angeles is concerned, as Clune's auditorium has heretofore served as the theatre of premiers where the public first saw a number of the biggest productions made in the west including "The Spoilers", "The Birth of a Nation", "Intolerance", "The Eyes of the World", "Hearts of the World", "The Greatest Thing in Life", and others; the last picture being shown there being Mary Pickford's "Polyanna." But the Auditorium will not long be missed by the picture loving people of Los Angeles and the people of the film industry, as three other magnificent theatres will be completed within the next eighteen months.

The Auditorium was built by the Baptist Association more than ten years ago.

Samuelson Units Near Close of Program

G. B. Samuelson and members of his organization, who came to California in December are planning to return to their English studio near London, leaving Los Angeles in April. Before their departure, the Samuelson organization will have completed six productions. It is the intention to work at the London studios for six or eight months and to return to Los Angeles late in the fall of this year.

Other plans for the Samuelson organization have provides for the Peggy Hyland Company to go to Egypt for the purpose of filming exteriors for "Desert Dreamers." This expedition will be equipped after the company arrives at London, and those who will accompany the organization are Fred Granville, Ralph C. Wells and Malcolm S. Boylan in charge of publicity. Granville has recently completed the direction of "At the Mercy of Tiberius," which stars Miss Hyland.

The Samuelson units are now finishing three pictures. Florence Turner is being featured with Miss Maudie Dunham in "The Ugly Duckling," an original comedy drama written by G. B. Samuelson and being directed by Alexander B. Butler. "David and Jonathan" is the title of a film which will star Madge Titheridge, and this unit is at Catalina Islands this week taking exteriors.

Rumors Big Activities at Christie Plant

Charles Christie, Treasurer and General Manager of the Christie Film Company is expected home from his trip to New York by March 13, and at the studio it is stated he will then make definite announcements concerning the future policy of this pioneer independent comedy producing company. In advance of Mr. Christie's announcement it is stated at the studio that plans now made provide for the making of a company of big pictures during the coming year, these to be adaptations from books and plays with all-star casts. Rumors have it that the Christie company is to discontinue the making of some of the short comedies they have been releasing in the past, and it is generally understood that these reports refer only to the one reel subjects that Christie has been making for the past three years.

Selznick Picture Being Cut and Titled

George Archainbaud, Selznick director, is supervising the cutting and titling of the latest Elaine Hammerstein's production, made by Myron Selznick. This production was finished a few days ago and is titled "The Shadow of Rosalie Byrnes." Miss Hammerstein has a dual role in this drama.

All the heavy women of filmdom were rounded up to support "The Slim Princess." Jack Sayre assistant casting director at Goldwyn placed the minimum weight at 200 pounds and they were paid according to their weight.

Personal and Otherwise

MAY KITSON, who did such good work in Selznick's production, "The Woman God Sent," has also completed her part in "The Scarlet Dragon," a Photoplay Libraries picture. Mrs. Kitson is now waiting for another star who wants a sympathetic "motherly mother."

Henry Mortimer, whose latest release is Realart's "The Fear Market," starring Alice Brady, is now turning his attention to the legitimate stage. He is appearing at the Punch and Judy in the play that opened Saturday night, entitled "Musk."

Glenn Anders, who showed us in "Civilian Clothes" just what a juvenile lead should be, is to trip the light fantastic in the same capacity in Victor Herbert's new musical comedy "Oui, Madame." Because of this, Mr. Anders is said to have been obliged to refuse a flattering offer from Selznick, and will be unable to give any time to the screen until stage rehearsals are completed.

Thurston Hall seems entirely human as well as histrionic. He is said to be in open revolt against the H. C. of clothing, and he declares that fans who expect to see him in a brand new suit in every scene will be sadly disappointed. He intends to let the new styles come in and go out without seeking even a speaking acquaintance with them during their brief existence, and he is going to stand by the expensive and well-fitting garments that his wardrobe includes at present so long as they are presentable.

Estelle Taylor, who is completing work on the Fox super-feature "When New York Sleeps," has been engaged to play the leading role in "Milady's Dress," Edward Knoblauch's sensational drama that was produced in the speaking stage two years ago.

Gladden James has completed his work in the leading role of "A Good Woman"—the Park Whiteside production that was produced at the Talmadge studios.

"Charles Ray is lost," writes his P. A., who proceeds to explain that he simply disappeared from his happy home and devoted family, and chiefly from the Los Angeles studio. And the deserted ones admitted bitterly that it was all their fault. After Mr. Ray's contract with Thomas Ince expired, and he signed up with First National and Arthur S. Kane, he demanded a long vacation, his first in eight years. So everybody took a hand in planning his vacation for him. Some one thought it was a fine time for him to look over a ton or so of manuscripts. Another thought he might go up to San Francisco and be interviewed a lot. Someone else thought he should visit N. Y. and wired friends there to expect him on a certain date. While they were planning, the star disappeared. Overnight. Just like that. Without a word to anybody. But he'll be back, the P. A. feels assured. Work on "Forty-Five Minutes From Broadway" can't begin without him, he says, and if he really wants to know, we'll add that perhaps Mr. Ray is waiting for his leading lady, who after completing her part opposite Mr. Ray in "Paris Green," came to New York, and was here when he wired her to return for his first First National production. Who is she? A little, black haired ingenue. Her name? Ann May.

Emmett Dalton's six-reel special production "Beyond the Law" opened at the Symphony Theatre, Los Angeles, on February 15th, and, according to report, has been smashing house records to smithereens at every performance. Dr. Dalton is said to be the sole survivor of the most famous gang of bandits that ever spread terror through the West in those early days when the railroads were piercing the wilderness in their slow progress to the Pacific.

The first serial to be handled by the Selznick Enterprises will be "The Whirlwind," which will be released by Republic Pictures, of which Lewis J. Selznick is advisory director. The serial is in fifteen episodes and features Charles Hutchinson and Edith Thornton. Selznick News Weekly will make its first appearance on Easter Sunday, and will continue thereafter in two releases weekly.

Several exteriors for "The Flapper" the new Olive Thomas production by Frances Marion, are being made at Lake Placid, N. Y., according to a statement from the Selznick offices this week. "The Flapper" company includes Alan Crosland, director, William P. Carleton, Theodore Westmen, Jr., Marcia Harris and Wm. Jos. Scully cameraman.

Ralph Ince and Zeena Keefe have returned from what they claim was nearly the North Pole, where they have been shooting exteriors, and are working now at the Fort Lee Studios. Gladys Coburn is announced as the latest addition to the cast for this picture, the working title of which is "The Law Bringers." The story deals with the life of the Royal Northwest Mounted Police, as well as native Indians and French-Canadians.

Robert Ellis, director, and Jack Abbott, assistant director, accompanied Eugene O'Brien to California a few days ago, when the Selznick star went West to make a picture on the Coast. "The Figurehead" is announced as the working title of the film. Rubye DeRemer was leading woman for Mr. O'Brien in "A Fool and His Money", completed at the Fort Lee Studios, just before the star caught the train for Calif.

Gloria Hope has the feminine lead in Owen Moore's third Selznick picture, "His Word of Honor", which is being made in Calif. under the direction of Wesley Ruggles. Seena Owen, who appeared with Owen Moore in "Sooner or Later" has the feminine lead in "The Gift Supreme". Tully Marshall, Lon Chaney and Melbourne MacDowell are also in the cast.

Elaine Hammerstein has finished "The Shadow of Rosalie Byrnes" and expects to take a short rest before starting her next feature.

AN UNCONSCIOUS CRUSADER

By Sidney Williams

Character of Story: Business novel.
Theme: Newspaper life.
Characters: James Radbourne, a young newspaper man; G. W. Lewis, editor of the Fordport Globe; Norman, city editor of the Globe; Littlefield of the Times; James Nowell, a journalistic adventurer; "The Colonel," owner of the Globe; Haskell, attorney for the Record; Goodwin, city editor of the Record; Yardsley, "wet" leader; Annie Ogden, daughter of the Governor; politicians, financiers, etc.
The Plot: James Radbourne, a young newspaper correspondent in a country town, is made a reporter on the Globe in Fordport, a neighboring city. After going through the usual experiences of a young newspaper reporter, he becomes a permanent fixture on the staff until a half interest in the paper is sold to a New York journalist who instal's a new manager, which starts a contest between the two owners for the control of the paper. When the Colonel, the original owner of the Globe again gains complete control, Lewis, the former managing editor is put back in his job and makes things very uncomfortable for Norman, the city editor and for Radbourne, both of whom have been working in harmony with the new management and carrying out the ideas of Nowell, a New York man who believes that New York journalism can be introduced into Fordport. With the break Nowell persuades Norman and Radbourne to go in with him and found a new paper called the Record. On a vacation Radbourne meets and falls in love with Annie Ogden, daughter of the Governor, and proposes to her but gets little encouragement, she being determined to wait until he has proved his mettle before she commits her future to his keeping. With the launching of the Record great pressure is brought to bear to put it out of business in a hurry. The interests behind the Globe are powerful in politics and business and the young newspaper men find it hard to get enough support from advertisers to keep the paper running. Certain schemes of Nowell's for financing the venture fall through and they find themselves running from day to day with a constant prospect of being forced to shut down. Some money, but only a little, is finally raised from the liquor interests and this further antagonizes that portion of the population who regard the liquor men as a menace to the community. The Record now finds itself with no friends in the regular political parties and allied with a liquor party which is not only weak but unwilling to give strong financial support to the paper. Yardsley, one of the liquor leaders, gets enough money into the paper to become interested and continues to carry it from week to week in the hope that they will be able to sell out the property. Various prospects show up but one by one they prove to have been won over by the enemies of the paper before a deal can be closed. At the last Norman and Nowell desert the paper, leaving Radbourne to fight the battle alone. He plunges into the election fight and by printing facts regarding the Republican administration which the other papers fear to print, forces a Democratic victory. Radbourne faces immediate bankruptcy when Yardsley tells him that he has succeeded in putting over a big deal in the East and now has plenty of money to float the paper until such time as it is on a paying basis. Satisfied that he has proven his mettle, Annie now consents to marry Radbourne.
Locale: Middle Western City.
Picture High Lights: Many good situations and good story of newspaper business, but love interest needs strengthening.

THE PASSIONATE PILGRIM

By Samuel Merwin

Character of Story: Comedy drama.
Theme: The psychology of genius.
Characters: Henry Calverley; Margie Daw, feature writer; "Hittie" Hitt, librarian of the News; Mrs. Watt, widow of Senator Watt; Humphrey Weaver; Mary Ma'oney; Mr. Guard, book publisher; Listerley, publisher of the News; Parker, Mrs. Watt's attorney; Timothy J. McIntyre, Mayor; Harvey O'Rell, politician; Senator Painter; Mr. Amme, attorney for the Cantey estate; Miriam Cantey; Miss Russell, a trained nurse; Qualters, attorney for Senator Painter; Will Appleby, Miriam's brother-in-law; Holmes Hitt, advertising expert; Esther Appleby.
The Plot: Henry Calverley, having served a term in prison for kidnapping his wife, who was a witness against his mother-in-Paw in a trial for the murder of Senator Watt, comes to a Middle Western city under the assumed name of "Hugh Stafford," and secures a position on a newspaper. Calverley, in his own name, is a famous writer although a very young man, not yet thirty. This story deals with his experiences in trying to get a foothold as Stafford. As in Merwin's other stories, Calverley is an erratic genius who gets himself into trouble faster than other people can get him out of it. With a great gift for writing he has a fatal enchant for telling the truth and a facility for showing people in their true colors which invariably results in trouble of one kind or another. In this story he loses his position on the News through too frank a criticism of the Mayor, and is appointed to write the life of Jim Cantey, a deceased politician who was formerly the head of the great political machine of the state. The Mayor, Harvey O'Cell, and others know that there are documents in the Cantey estate which incriminate all of them, and they fear that Henry, if he lays hands on them, will make them public. Miriam Cantey, for many years an invalid, who wins her way back to strength and health through the inspiration of Henry's love, is in sympathy with Henry's desire to write the truth in the biography and proves to him that this was the desire of her father. Much of the excitement of the story turns on the attempts of the politicians to prevent Henry's doing this. Pressure is also brought to bear upon Miriam by her sister, who tries to have Miriam shut up as an incompetent, fearing that their family name will be disgraced by the publication of the book and also fearing that Miriam will marry Henry and the family fortune, largely in Miriam's hands, will pass to a stranger. There is so much detail in the working out of this part of the story that it is impossible to include all of it in a brief synopsis. Henry is finally forced out of the position of biographer, is left two million dollars by his mother-in-law, which he refuses to accept for himself and on the suggestion of Margie Daw uses to create a fund for the assistance of ex convicts. The enemies Henry has made in the political field have not scrupled to attack his reputation, and with the death of his mother-in-law the whole story of the murder trial and of his imprisonment comes out again, much to his distress. Margie's scheme of having him give the fortune for the use of unfortunates provides Margie and Horace Hitt with material for a great publicity campaign which sets Henry right with the public. Henry succeeds in getting much damaging information against the political ring and catches the Mayor trying to rob his room searching for documents incriminating the chief executive of the city. As a result Henry forces the Mayor to resign and leave town. Miriam suddenly asserts herself, breaks away from her sister, places her estate in the hands of Henry and thus puts him into a position of great power, since the Cantey estate owns and controls the largest business enterprises in the city, including the News. The story ends with Miriam and Henry engaged to marry and with everything satisfactorily arranged.
Locale: Middle Western city.
Picture High Lights: Good picture material. Young man lead.

THE PRICE OF HONOR

By Pierce Kingsley

Character of Story: Drama.
Theme: Sanctity of the home.
Characters: Tom Blake; Colonel Roderick Fanning; Captain Bane; Young Fanning; Ned Preston; Polly, Blake's wife; Marie La Roue.
The Plot: Blake is orderly to Colonel Fanning, whose son is a scapegrace. To save young Fanning from the vengeance of Captain Bane, whose wife is fascinated by the young rascal, Blake goes to Baine's house to warn them that Bane is returning unexpectedly, Bane mistakes Blake for Fanning and shoots him. Blake recovers and makes a rather unsatisfactory explanation of his visit to the house. As a consequence of this he is advised by his colonel to return to England. He does so. Young Fanning, returning from India, becomes interested in Blake's wife and makes love to her. Blake forbids her to have anything to do with Fanning, who then tells her that Blake was forced to leave India because of an affair with a woman. Fanning persuades Polly to elope to America with him, taking with her Blake's little son. Blake discovers this and for the first time tells the Colonel the truth about what happened in India. He then sets out for America to find the man who has despoiled his home. Meeting with no sort of success in this, he drifts up into Canada and finally becomes one of the most trusted officers of the Canadian Northwest Mounted Police—a man with a reputation for never failing to get the person he is sent to arrest. Fanning, meanwhile, has changed his name to Preston and keeps a store near the Canadian border. Blake's son has grown up under the name of Ned Preston. Fanning makes love to Marie La Roue, Ned's sweetheart, and the two men quarrel. Fanning orders Ned out of the house, and the latter leaves vowing that he will get even with Fanning. Fanning is shot and killed through a window by an Indian whom he has abused. Ned is accused of the murder and flees to Canada, as the evidence is very strong against him. Blake is assigned to catch the supposed murderer. After a long hunt he finds Ned and arrests him, only to discover by a birthmark on the boy's shoulder that this is his own son. He resigns from the service but finally decides that it is best for the boy to return to the States and stand trial. Ned goes back, his father with him, and gives himself up. The evidence is strong against him; even his mother is forced to testify that she heard him utter threats against Fanning. As the case looks hopeless and Ned is about to be convicted of the crime, the Indian who did the shooting comes forward and makes a confession. Blake and his wife Polly are reunited and Ned and Marie are married.
Locale: India, England, Canada.
Picture High Lights: Good dramatic picture material though not especially original. It is rather a new combination of familiar situations. The most original touch in the story is a birth mark on the son reproducing the scar of Blake's wound. The idea of a child being marked by prenatal influence of the father is certainly unique. The story is told in such manner that the scenes are naturally suppplied, and the director will have little difficulty in the matter of the locale, for no great amount of local color is called for except in the Canadian scenes.

AT THE SIGN OF THE RED SWAN

By Ambrose Elwell

Character of Story: Romance.
Theme: Adventure.
Characters: Ambrose Elwell, a sailor; Hazel Weatherbys, an innkeeper's daughter; her father and mother; Zatick, a Turk masquerading as a Greek; Captain Williams; Captain Robbins; Calvert, a lawyer; Molly Horn; Larry Horn; an old Jew; sailors, prisoners, etc.; the Chaplain.
The Plot: Ambrose Elwell is the son of a fisherman who lives on an island off the coast of Maine. Until he is eighteen years of age he never leaves home except to go fishing for lobsters with his father. When the story opens his father has been drowned in a storm and he sets out to seek his fortune by becoming a sailor on a small ship which runs to the mainland and does a coasting trade. His mother tries to persuade him to remain at home, but in vain. Instead of coming home on the boat on which he sailed, he signs with a ship going to the Banks and while fishing in a small boat with another sailor is swept out to sea, where the two nearly perish from exposure and hunger. They are picked up by a steamer and carried to Liverpool, where a purse is taken up for them. Elwell there makes the acquaintance of the Weatherbys, who conduct a respectable inn, and becomes interested in Hazel Weatherby, the daughter. He learns that they are upon the point of sailing for Canada, whither they are going on the advice of a young attorney who desires to marry Hazel. Elwell ships on a steamer for the Orient but scurvy breaks out aboard ship and the course of the ship is changed. Elwell escapes at a British colony and puts up at the Red Swan Inn, where he meets an old Jew who takes a fancy to him and tells him that he is carrying much money in his belt. Elwell sees the Jew to his room and afterward goes for a walk in the moonlight. In the morning he is arrested, charged with the murder of the Jew, who has been killed and robbed during the night. Elwell has changed his name to avoid arrest as a deserter from his ship, and cannot make the authorities believe anything he tells them. Zatick, the proprietor of the tavern, and as it afterward develops, the real murderer, goes out of his way to fasten suspicion on Elwell. The Weatherbys happen to arrive in the Colony while he is in jail, and learning of his arrest convince the chaplain and the doctor that he is innocent of crime. With the assistance of these two men he escapes, while under sentence of death, and after lying low for a few days ships on a boat commanded by a friend of the Weatherbys. On board he discovers that Zatick is also a member of the crew under another name. Zatick is on the way to England, where he hopes to collect more on the estate of the Jew. He is surprised counting the money and papers of the Jew and forced to confess to the crime, which he committed with the aid of Molly Horn, his confederate in many crimes. In view of this evidence, a pardon is granted to Elwell and to the men who helped him escape, and he comes back to the colony and is married to Hazel, who goes home with him to his island.
Locale: Island off Maine; England, Canada, the high sea.

The Guardian

By Frederick Orrin Bartlett

Character of Story: Maine woods romance.
Theme: Character.
The Plot: Nat Page is a big woodsman of character as broad and strong as his physical frame. His brother, Gene, is as big physically as Nat, but has what is popularly described as "a yellow streak." He is exceedingly handsome and a favorite with the women, especially Julie Moulton, with whom both brothers are in love. Nat, who is the chief of a lumber camp, offers Gene a job with him but Gene thinks that he prefers to go to sea. He secures a berth as seaman on a boat bound for South America and, before he leaves, secures Julie's promise to marry him on his return. Gene goes to Boston where he meets with a man in a restaurant who begs a meal. Bella, the waitress, warns Gene against this man but Gene pays no attention. He gets drunk with the stranger and is robbed. He misses his boat. Bella takes pity on him, takes him home with her and secures him a position as dishwasher in the restaurant. The cook, a powerful woman, bullies Gene until one day he tires of it and empties a can of beer down her neck. Gene and Bella are both discharged. Gene gets a job as a longshoreman and marries Bella before a justice of the peace. Nat, meanwhile, falls deeply in love with Julie but she is true to Gene though keeping secret the engagement. In the city Gene begins to drink and to tire of Bella. He longs for his old home and for Julie. Reading in the newspaper that the justice who married him to Bella was a fake without proper authority, he makes up his mind to desert her. He does not know that she is about to become a mother. He goes back to his home pretending that he has been to South America. He marries Julie immediately. Nat is horrified but determines to make a man of Gene, who has already disgraced himself by getting drunk on his wedding day which so disgusts Julie that she refuses to live with him except in name until such time as he has proven himself a man. Nat takes Gene to camp where he has to fight his way. Sober, he beats Bartmeau, who attacks him for abusing a horse. Later a bootlegger comes to camp and Gene gets drunk and is disgracefully beaten by Bartmeau, acting the coward and earning the contempt of all of the men. Nat locks Gene and the bootlegger in the barn with the whisky. Gene, crazed with liquor, almost kills the bootlegger. Bella, with her child, comes looking for Gene and is lost in a storm, found by Nat and taken to his home. She tells him that she knew Gene in the city but does not betray the fact that they were married. Bella dies of exposure and Nat adopts the child. Gene's paternal instinct is awakened at sight of the child and he determines to have him. He knows that he cannot do this without defeating Nat in a fair fight. He dares not acknowledge the child until able to fight Nat, so trains for many months to get into condition. He then picks a fight with Nat and they have a terrific battle, Gene's fear being subordinated to his desire to have the child. The fight is a draw and this takes the courage out of Gene once more. Drunk, he is trapped in a "badger game" and in trying to defend his money for the sake of the boy, is stabbed and fatally injured. He dies in the hospital leaving word that the money is for the baby. Thus Nat learns for the first time that the baby is his own nephew. Nat and Julie are married.

Locale: Boston and little town in Maine.

Picture High Lights: Good character study, good emotional situations, slight comedy relief and plenty of fighting.

THE HARBOR ROAD

By Sara Ware Bassett

Character of Story: Comedy drama.

Theme: New England life.

Characters: Nate Harlow, a fisherman; Deborah, his sister; Tressie, their adopted daughter; Dora Mayhew, a girl from the city; Mrs. Mayhew, her mother; Mrs. Minot, a city woman; Norman Minot, her son; Bob Kittridge, an artist.

The Plot: In the little Cape Cod village of Wilton lives Nate Harlow and his sister Deborah and their love niece Tressie, who is like a daughter to them. For some years their funds have been running lower and lower, and Nate has seemed unable to catch up financially through his fishing. Nate and Tressie are of congenial temperaments and both love to spend their time on the water, but neither of them have much practical sense. Deborah, on the other hand, has enough practical sense for all of them, and manages to keep the home running in spite of the fact that she gets little assistance in the matter of paying the bills. She finally makes up her mind that something must be done to alleviate the condition of their exchequer, and in casting about for a plan hits upon the idea of taking in summer boarders, though Wilton has never been a resort for city folk. Nate and Tressie are distressed at the idea of having strangers in the house and having to help look after the comfort of the "paying guests," but as they have no better solution to offer, agree that Deborah's plans must be carried out. The boarders turn out to be a mother and daughter and a mother and son. Deborah, who has been under the impression that Mrs. Minot's son is a little boy, is much shocked to find him a grown man and one who is likely to prove interesting to a girl of Tressie's age. She soon concludes, however, that there is little danger of Norman becoming interested in Tressie since he is constantly in the company of Dora Mayhew. She does not know that this is engineered by Mrs. Mayhew, a social climber, who realizes that the Minots have a better social position than herself and who thinks that a marriage between her daughter and young Minot would be of great assistance to her in her plans for social advancement. This party is soon augmented by the arrival of Bob Kittridge, a Bohemian artist, who is fascinating in his manner and so jolly that he wins over all of the occupants of the Harlow house—even Deborah. With the arrival of Kittridge a new element enters, for Kittridge is immediately struck with the beauty of Tressie and does not hesitate to pay her marked attention. He finally succeeds in convincing her that Minot will marry Dora and persuades her to run off to Boston with him, she being under the impression that he wants to marry her. She is undeceived in this regard promptly and in time to prevent being compromised. At Wilton, however, much anxiety and distress is caused by her unexplained absence. Kittridge is struck with remorse and helps her to get home, where she finds that her absence has made Norman understand how much he cares for her, so that the story ends with the departure of the Mayhews and the marriage of Tressie and Minot. This is a simple story with some strong emotional scenes in it but no very complicated plot. It is apparently drawn from life, so far as the conditions in the fishing village are concerned, and it is not improbable that the author has modeled her characters upon living persons. It has sufficient body to furnish a light vehicle for an ingenue.

Locale: New England village.

THE FORGING OF THE PIKES

By Anison North

Character of Story: Canadian romance.

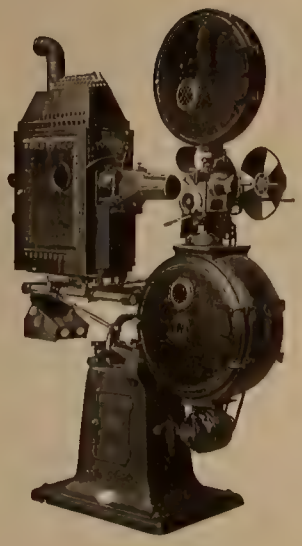
Theme: Rebellion.

Characters: Alan Machree; Mackenzie, agitator; Hank; Nick Deverill, innkeeper; Barbara, his daughter; Howard Selwyn; Sir Francis Bond Head; Co'. Vin Egmond; the Schoolmaster.

The Plot: Alan is the son of a Scotch farmer who has settled in Canada, where Alan was born. At the time of this story there was much dissatisfaction with the Canadian Government and Mackenzie was agitating the question of armed resistance to the authority of the clique in power. Alan and Barbara, or "Barry" as she is called throughout the story, grow to be great friends and A'an falls in love with her. Shortly after the death of her supposed mother, Barry disappears and Alan learns that she was not the daughter of the innkeeper and his wife, who posed as her parents. Alan does not, at this time, know that she has eloped with Howard Selwyn, an elegant young Englishman who plays upon her romantic nature and marries her with an Indian ceremony, not binding in the eyes of the English law. Alan leaves for Toronto, where he goes to work for his uncle, a well-known loyalist and Tory in politics. When the rebellion finally breaks out, Alan throws in his lot with that of the rebels and takes part in the one and only battle of the rebellion, in which the ill-trained and ill-armed troops of the revolutionists are badly beaten by the regu'ars from the capital. The rebellion lasts only a few days and ends in a rout. Many of the rebels escape over the border into the United States, but Alan returns to the home of his uncle. Much to his surprise, his uncle agrees to keep his secret, and nobody else knows of his participation in the revolt. All goes well in this respect until he learns that his father, who took no part in the uprising, has been arrested. Alan goes to the Chief Justice and pleads for the release of his father. In the course of his conversation with the justice, A'an states that he is the only member of his family who took any part in the rebellion, and frankly states that he was one of the rebels under arms. He is put in prison but is later pardoned upon the petition of his uncle, who has influence with the administration. His father is also released. Several of the leaders of the rebellion are publicly hanged. Alan now returns to the woods, where he learns that Barry reached Eng'and, following Selwyn, only to find him married to a woman of the English aristocracy. Selwyn advised her to return to America, but this she did not do until Selwyn was killed in hunting. She then comes gack to her old home, and, after a little time, is married to A'an, who settles down on the farm.

Locale: Canadian country and Toronto.

Picture High Lights: For picture purposes there would need to be some modification of the p'ot, which is too loosely knit for screen use as it stands. There is, however, a theme in it and the story deals with concrete historical happenings. As a change from the highly improbable and ever-present "society" melodrama, a picture based on something more substantial than the now obsolete cabaret might find a welcome.



The stories that best meet the demand of the public for big screen vehicles are reviewed in the Fiction Mart Department weekly.

WHAT most impress Motiograph users and why they continue to use Motiographs year after year are the perfect projection and lasting qualities of the machine.

Every user will tell you how wonderful the parts wear—they do not hesitate to say the gears never wear out, and other parts give the same corresponding wear.

With this kind of material and the superior workmanship insures satisfaction in service whenever used.

THE Rothacker Film Mfg. Co. of Chicago uses NINE (9) MOTIOGRAPHS in testing their films. These machines are run from morning until night, continually, day after day, year after year. They must give perfect definition of picture to insure them of the high grade prints they are noted for turning out.

This is surely proof of the quality in the Motiograph Machine, which you should take into consideration when buying your next Projector.

Rugged, Restful Simplicity Found in Pantheon

Toledo Theatre Boasts of Genuine Comfort in its Arrangements

IT was not so many years ago that motion picture theatres were considered as having something lacking if their interiors were not frescoed and furbelowed with hanging vines and flowing draperies on every wall. Perhaps it was as well that such elaborateness was considered proper since it was often necessary to use scenic effects to make up for what the picture lacked.

But since then, there have been many changes. As usual, the mode has gradually been simplified with greater attention given to the effect of each part on the whole. It has been found possible to design theatres with a minimum of ornateness without in any way sacrificing their attractiveness. In more cases than not, this metamorphosis has had the effect of working a decided improvement and of turning out a theatre with an atmosphere of genuine comfort.

Photographs of the Pantheon theatre of Toledo indicate that this house should be placed under the last named class.

The Pantheon is located on St. Clair Street on the site of the old Kaiserhof. It is 60 feet by 120 feet by inside measurement, and has a seating capacity of 1000.

The front of the theatre is without excess ornament, which gives it a becoming dignity. An ample marquee extends well over the sidewalk and covers both entrances. Lights on the under side of the marquee illuminate the sidewalk directly in front of the ticket office. Stanley frames have been placed on both sides of the theatre front and a plain but attractive electric sign over the door flashes the word Pantheon.

One of the accompanying illustrations shows the lobby as it appears when it is not being used to exploit special features. It resembles more a lounging room in a club-house than the lobby of a theatre. Ths effect is created by the massive plaster-covered pillars and the heavy ribbed ceiling arches. At the extreme right will be noticed the brick fireplace with its mantel lights and other decorations. Another illustration shows the same lobby after decorators and artists have transformed it into an oriental lounging room and the effect secured with the few added articles demonstrates how the design of the lobby adapts itself to a wide variety of uses.

Before passing on and into the auditorium a few words should be said about the interior illumination of the Pantheon which is here evident for the first time. The artists worked at all times in conjunction with experts of the National X-Ray Lighting Company with a view to securing the exact degree of general illumination and percentage of reflection from ceilings and side walls. With architecture of this type a soft toned lighting scheme is absolutely necessary in order that the sharp lines be not accentuated. It is probable that anyone viewing these photographs will agree that the architects and engineers were unusually successful in attaining their objective. It will be noticed that in the lobby the lights are hidden above the side moldings and the light is therefore reflected from the curved ceiling. The lighting arrangements together with the delicate tints of the wall colorings, the lamp shades and hangings produce the restful and inviting atmosphere strived for.

Entrance to the auditorium proper is gained through doors on either side of the lounging room. The run-a-ways do not lead into the back of the auditorium but to a point about half way down the length of the house. At the point of ingress lies the dividing line between the orchestra seats and the "balcony," although, strictly speaking, there is no balcony. As the photograph shows, there is but a slight slope to the first twelve rows of seats but after them comes the "cross-over" and from then on the slope grows steeper. This seating arrangement is ideal for a theatre of this size and layout since every seat in the house is a good seat with an unobstructed view of the screen. Besides improving the angle of view from the seats in the back of the auditorium this considerable slope makes it possible to have the lounging room and lobby occupy the space beneath it, thus economizing on all available space.

The proscenium arch continues the general scheme of simplicity but nevertheless fits in well with the flat ceiling and rounded corners where ceiling and wall meet. The walls are broken up by a number of similar panels formed on the sides by double sets of columns and on top by an ornamental frieze. All the ornamental plaster in this part of the Pantheon has been carried out in the style of the Italian Renaissance period.

An ample sized stage, 46 x 18 feet, makes it possible to arrange special settings. Border lights and foot-lights have been installed to take care of special lighting effects.

All lighting of the auditorium is produced by rows of lights with special reflectors arranged around in a trough on top of the side walls. This makes it necessary for the light to be reflected from the ceiling and is therefore entirely indirect, producing a soft light not at all tiresome to the eyes.

As is to be expected, the mechanical equipment is on a par with the remainder of the theatre. In the projection room there are two Simplex machines and spot lights, a switchboard controlling all lights and lighting effects in the house as well as the proscenium curtains.

During the winter months the house is heated by a hot-water heating system which has proved satisfactory.

A $25,000 organ, played in shifts by three musicians, furnishes the music. An orchestra will not ordinarily be used.

Messrs. M. M. and M. B. Stophlet who drew up the designs for the Pantheon, the contractors, and H. C. Horator, the manager, have been lauded for the theatre which, to a certain extent, is a product of their combined creative and administrative geniuses.

Plans Prepared for Theatre in Canton

George Henry Dieringer, architect of Wheeling, West Va., is preparing plans and specifications for a new theatre building 50 x 100, to be constructed by the Architectural Building Co., in Canton, Ohio. The theatre will have all the necessary equipment for pictures and road shows. Offices and store rooms are to be placed over the theatre front.

Work on Jake Well's Colonial Already Under Way

Plans for Jake Wells' new Colonial theatre, to be erected upon the old site at Eighth and Broad Streets, Richmond, Va., have been filed with the Building Inspector of that city and work has already been begun on the excavations in the adjoining lot between the present Colonial and the Broadway theatre. The contractors do not think it necessary to close the present Colonial preparatory to tearing down the old building for about four or five weeks.

J. W. Atkinson & Co. have been awarded the construction contract on a cost plus basis and it is estimated that the new building will cost about $150,000. The building permit was asked for the Virginia Theatre Corporation, of which Jake Wells is president.

architects, said that the plans had been gone over in the fullest detail with study of the most modern moving picture houses in this country. Intended purely as a movie house, there will be no stage provided for in the new Colonial, which will seat 1,860 and be the largest theatre south of Philadelphia.

The interior is to be highly ornamented and the main lobby will be of marble. No steps will be used in the interior, all passages from one level to another being inclined planes. The theatre will be of stone, marble and terra cotta and will be the only theatre in Richmond of an entirely fireproof construction. It will have emergency exits on three sides and cover the entire lot from the corner to the present line of the Broadway theatre. Off of the main foyer are extensive provision for ladies' parlors, lounging and smoking rooms and other modern theatre conveniences.

A Description of the Electrical Lay-Out in Allen's Winnipeg Theatre

By R. S. Chamberlain, of Mundy, Rowland & Co., Contractors

FROM an electrical standpoint this theatre compares very favorably with the most up-to-date theatres of any of the Eastern cities. The current, which enters the building underground, is supplied from two different sources and is so arranged that the operator can, by merely pressing a push-button, switch the load for the whole lighting or power on to the mains of either supply company.

There is a special switchboard room for the main switches, meters and main distributing panels. Both sets of mains are tapped, previous to entering the main switch, with a set of feeders feeding a double-throw switch for the emergency lighting.

The main light for the theatre proper, is supplied by a group of seven-light fixtures, under and over the balcony, a large center fixture hanging from the dome with concealed lights of white, amber, red, and blue colors lighting the dome itself, while on either side wall is a series of three-light candle fixtures with very elaborate shades.

These brackets are so wired that one light of each is on the emergency panel and so is kept burning all through the performance while the other two are under the control of the operator. The same principle applies to the seven-light fixtures under and over the balcony. Six of these lights are frosted spherical lamps controlled from the operating booth while the seventh light, which is concealed in the fixture, emitting its light through an amber diffuser, is controlled from the emergency panel.

One rather unusual feature of the lighting is a border light about 58 feet, containing approximately 160 lamps, concealed behind the proscenium arch. The lights are of four different colors, similar to the cove lighting of the main dome. All these lights are fed from a 56-circuit, dead front Sprague panel located in the picture booth, each circuit being individually switched. The bus bars for this panel are fed with fifteen sets of feeders from the main operating switchboard. This switchboard is mounted in a special compartment of the booth, partitioned off from the main operating portion, with extension arms on each switch.

A portion of the back wall facing the screen was omitted and a slate panel 68 inches by 30 inches was installed, slotted to allow the switch extension arms to pass through. On the face of this slate panel is mounted a shaft with fifteen lever switch handles to which are connected the extension arms. These levers are so arranged that they can be operated singly, or by interlocking can be operated in groups or all together with two master levers.

Immediately above this panel is set a similar panel in every respect, with fifteen dimmer plates mounted on the back similarly operated, either singly or together. These dimmers are of the Cutler-Hammer make, with their standard interlocking device.

The booth itself, a most important factor in all moving picture houses, is both large and airy, which enables the operators to work under more favorable conditions than is often the case.

There are three picture machines (Powers), one double stereopticon and one spot light. The D. C. current for these machines is supplied by a Hertner Electric 75-75 Transverter with 550 volts on the A. C. motor driving it. The three picture machines are connected in series, each being fed from a slate panel switchboard supplied with short-circuiting switches to cut out the lamps not in operation. While this seems to be a bad feature at first glance, on looking into the matter one finds it very good practice. The transverter is designed to run on a short circuit without any ill effects, but it is impossible to conceive of any operator leaving it short circuited for any length of time, because while doing so he could not possibly get any light.

The orchestra lights are controlled from the booth and are so arranged that they can be dimmed down and switched out, leaving the organ or piano light still burning. This does away with the inconvenience of switching twenty lights individually or the alternative, flashing them on all at once.

A feature not seen in many theatres is a series of colored lamps mounted on each musician's stand and controlled by push buttons on the leader's desk. These lights are run on a six-volt circuit, reduced from 110 volts through a small transformer and are merely flashed momentarily, each color indicating some prearranged movement.

On either side of the orchestra is a small illuminated fountain which is in operation during the performance with a very pleasing effect.

The front of the house is about as brightly illuminated as any one could wish, the foyer being exceedingly well lit while the marquise, with its frosted lamps, creates a very pretty impression.

The front exterior lends itself very ad-

George Feinberg Has Good Record as Accessory Dealer

Is Expert on Projectors—and Haberdashery

LADIES and Gentlemen we have with us this week J. George Feinberg and the fact that he parts his name in the middle does not disguise the fact that the J. stands for Justin. J. George breezed into this vale of tears thirty-three years ago. After passing through the first long pants and also that very dangerous puppy-love-period, our good friend J. George found himself in the wholesale millinery business, and while not looked upon as one of the very best "trimmers," he nevertheless made a very successful millinery salesman.

Seeing all around him evidences of great wealth being accumulated in the theatrical field and having several influential relatives engaged in said field, George decided that the millinery business would henceforth lose one of its greatest leaders and announced to a breathless world that the motion picture business had better polish up a brand-new halo, inasmuch as J. George was ready to bounce into the arena of motion picture industry. So, five years ago, together with Llelwyn H. Francis, a graduate of the University of Minnesota and formerly on the advertising staff of the Orpheum and Gayety theatres, Minneapolis, he laid the cornerstone for a most successful theatre equipment house in the midwest.

It seems that an old-time actor by the name of Dick Ferris staged a great spectacular production entitled "Fighting the Flames" at the Minnesota State Fair Grounds at Minneapolis and the two budding young equipment magnates spoken of in this biography were stationed at several entrance gates at said fair grounds, engaged in taking in the tickets that had been purchased by the populace of Minnesota.

It might be well to say that J. George is short, round and chubby and like all men of his robust frame is perpetually smiling. Moreover to the ladies who might read this announcement we will say that J. George is not married, has no bad habits and has contributed almost a fortune to the building up of the Wrigley Spearmint Gum business, all of his waking hours being devoted on the side to the masticating of the "Product of Wrigley."

On December, 1911, in the Bijou Theatre Building, Feinberg & Francis located their first motion picture equipment quarters and today they are located on the second and third floors of the Loeb Arcade Building and have what is undoubtedly the finest furnished offices of any theatre supply house in the country. Besides being Simplex Distributors, the Teco Products Mfg. Company also handle the

J. George Feinberg

Simplex Ticket Seller, Idealite Screen, Steel Opera Chairs and Stanley Frames and carry a general line of theatre equipment.

Mr. Francis spends most of his time on the road among the hundreds of personal friends that are distributed across the territory in which he is located, while J. George attends to considerable of the office routine.

As an indication of the speed at which these young and enterprising theatre equipment specialists are traveling, it is only necessary to say that since August last they have taken two hundred and twenty-seven orders for Simplex Projectors and have formed the irritating habit of using freight cars to transport machines from New York to their territory.

J. George has made several pilgrimages during the year to the Metropolitan City and has always made the Simplex factory his headquarters upon the occasion of these visits. Motion Picture News is oftentimes carried into the homes of the exhibitor and for that reason we are not at liberty to detail in our account all of George's activities while in our city this last time. But we have the word of one of the world's greatest press agents whose initials are W. C. F. and who is neither bald-headed nor six-foot tall, that George has considerable speed, as indicated in a little seance that took place on Saturday last.

While we would not exactly say that a trail of broken hearts is following George's advent into Greenwich Village, we can safely state, however, that several of them were left bruised and mangled and if upon George's arrival to Minneapolis he does not open a Pirates' Den similar to that located on Christopher Street, we are missing our usual ability to make good such prophecies. It is secretly whispered about town that George has a penchant for silk shirts and that he usually carries a goodly number for emergencies. We know of several such silk shirts that should always be kept by George as carrying with them fond memories of a night's revel in the city of New York.

The picture which accompanies this article shows a bright-faced and apparently unsophisticated youth, gazing out with innocent expression upon a wicked world, but what we could say about that same little chubby-faced George if the United States Postal Regulations permitted us to do so.

It is now in order to bid "Au Revoir" to chubby George and wish him "God Speed" to the farmlands of Minnesota. We trust that his ambition to make sales enough so that he may retire at the end of five years and ride into New York on a Stutz Speedster, may be realized. Come again to our city, George, and bring your bank-roll, silk shirts and everything, and mayhap by that time, the Pirates' Den will have added to its already attractive interior a few more female pirates and a greater number of intricate terpsichorean steps.

vantageously to flood lighting and this has been carried out by mounting six Davis flood lights on the roof of the marquise where they are concealed from the street and the general effect is very pleasing and satisfactory.

The lounge, located over the vestibule and foyer, is a most comfortable and beautifully decorated room and is well lighted with artistic brackets on the columns and six large piano stand lamps arranged at the back of the chesterfields. These stand lamps are supplied with rose-tinted silk shades of very elaborate design, matching the shades on the candelabora brackets, the whole producing a soft, subdued and voluptuous effect.

In fact, the whole installation of lighting is a credit to the owners, who were willing to go to such an expense to obtain a desired effect, as well as the engineer that designed it, and the contractor that carried out that design with such satisfactory results.

Paper on Safe Design of Theatres

At the coming Montreal Meeting of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, Mr. Will F. Braun of Chicago, architect of many of the finest theatres in the country, will deliver a paper on "The Design of Theatres from the Standpoint of Safety to the Audience." A résumé of the paper is given below:

There is a lack of proper building ordinances outside of the large cities regulating the safety of the audiences. In the design of theatres there are many things that should be standardized to insure safety. As most of the theatres at the present time are being built with complete or at least semi stage facilities, we will take it for granted that the theatres under consideration are equipped with a stage. Those without a stage or scenery should follow the same safeguard for the rest of the building as provided for later. Equipment will be considered in detail.

In the preparation of this paper, the ordinances of ten of the largest cities in the country governing the construction of theatres, have been reviewed. Also the recommendations of the National Board of Fire Underwriters as well as many other authorities on this work.

In discussing the various points safeguarding the audience from fire and panics, we will consider the following points in the design and construction: type of construction, entrance lobby, foyers, stairways, seats, aisles, exits of main floor and balconies, emergency exits and passages, projection room, stage design, curtain, ventilation, automatic sprinklers, equipment outside of the theatre and buildings in connection with the theatre.

Laurier Theatre Opens After Remodelling

After two months under the management and control of H. W. Vance, the Laurier Theatre, Hull, Quebec, has become a very successful enterprise. For a number of years this house had been a white elephant and eventually the theatre was only operated on Sundays. The theatre had been controlled by a rather large syndicate of Hull citizens and even their united efforts did not result in the obtaining of a comfortable share of support. The theatre changed hands just before Christmas and it was remodelled throughout.

The house had been known as the Odeon Theatre but this name was changed to "Laurier Theatre" in memory of the late Sir Wilfred Laurier, one of Canada's greatest statesmen. A handsome lobby replaced a store in the building and about $2,500 was spent for new projection equipment, including two Power's 6B power-driven projectors, a Hertner transverter and a gold fibre screen. One of the brand new features is an eight-piece orchestra and, last but not least, Mr. Vance booked a number of really worthwhile pictures. These bookings came on top of an expenditure of $15,000 for changes and improvements in the house itself.

Lynch Enterprises Buy Typhoon Equipments

The S. A. Lynch Enterprises, the well known theatre owners, operating one of the largest chains of theatres in the South, have placed with the Typhoon Fan Company during the last few days another large order for Typhoons.

These people have found that the Typhoon Cooling and Ventilating System meets their requirements and also increases to a considerable extent the box office receipts.

When Theatre Seats are Censored

YOUR upholstery will have a clean bill-of-health, if it is Fabrikoid. For more than the beauty of this upholstery material, is the safeguard of its sanitary surface.

Fabrikoid absolutely excludes germs and germ-laden dust. It absorbs no perspiration. It is inherently clean and cleanable. Soap and water keep it healthful and beautiful.

And Fabrikoid, in rich colors to harmonize with any interior, is an artistic covering of comfortable softness. It is non-fading, non-staining and always pliable.

Fabrikoid greatly outwears other theatre seat coverings. It is not only extremely rugged and of immense tensile strength, but it escapes the rotting effect of perspiration that destroys so much theatre upholstery.

Insist on Fabrikoid for your theatre seats. Write to us for samples and complete information.

Equipment Operating Projection Questions Answered

Practical Electricity—IV
Study Lessons for the Projectionist

It is our intention to make these lessons of practical value to the projectionists, with no more theory than is necessary to explain the subjects. As the series progresses an attempt will be made to lay particular emphasis on subjects having to do directly with projection.

One of the unusual and most profitable features of the course will be the examination questions at the end of each lesson. The reader should go over the subject matter carefully and then attempt to answer the questions having to do with the text.

In addition to this there will appear from time to time a number of practical problems, having to do with the subjects studied up to that time. Any reader who so wishes is invited to write out questions and answers and send them to the Technical Department of MOTION PICTURE NEWS for correction. These answers will then be corrected and returned, providing return postage is enclosed.

As has been stated the resistance of a circuit varies with the temperature of the conductor and the apparatus connected to it. In most cases the resistance of a material increases with an increase of temperature, so that when a current is passed through a circuit heat is generated and the resistance of the circuit increases.

The change in resistance for a given change in temperature is quite different for different metals. Some alloys, however, have a very small change in resistance for a change in temperature and it is very important in making standard resistances that such alloys be used in order that the resistance will remain constant over a wide range of the temperature.

When a rheostat is used in a circuit such as in an arc circuit it is necessary that the rheostat be placed in such position that the heat generated can be easily carried away in order that the grids may not heat excessively and cause a change in the value of the rheostat. Also in the case of conductors it is necessary that a wire of sufficient size be used to carry the desired amount of current, for in case of too small a conductor excessive heating takes place and causes danger of fire.

Table I shows the safe current carrying capacity of different sizes of wire for both rubber and slow burning insulation.

Carbon is different from most materials as regards the effect due to heating, in that the resistance decreases when the temperature is increased, so that the resistance of a carbon lamp is about twice as great when cold as after it has become heated by the passage of current for some time. Also in the case of a carbon arc the resistance is greater when starting the arc than after it has become heated, therefore an arc should be adjusted for hot resistance and allowed to "warm up" each time before making the necessary adjustments.

Table II gives the temperature coefficients for some of the most common materials. The temperature coefficient may be defined as the per cent change in resistance per degree (Centigrade) change in temperature. Most metals such as aluminum, copper, tin and silver have a practically constant change of about 4/10 of one per cent (.004) of their resistance at zero degrees Centigrade for an increase of one degree in temperature above zero.

If we know the resistance of any material at zero degrees Centigrade we can find the resistance at any desired temperature from the equation:

$R_t = R_o (1 + at)$ in which R_t is the resistance at the desired temperature, R_o is the resistance of the material at some specified temperature as taken from tables, a is the temperature coefficient from Table II, and t the number of degrees change in temperature.

Sample problem:

The resistance of a certain copper conductor is 12 ohms at zero degrees centrigrade. Find the resistance at 60 degrees C.

Solution:

$R_o = 12$ ohms, a from Table II for copper is .0043, t is 60 degrees. The equation will be $R_t = 12 \times (1 + .0043 \times 60)$.

$R_t = 12 + 3.09 = 15.09$ ohms, the required resistance or an increase of 3.09 ohms due to a rise in temperature.

TABLE II.—TEMPERATURE COEFFICIENT

Substance	Temp. Coef. Referred to 0° Centigrade
Aluminum	.0043
Carbon	—.0006
Copper	.0043
German Silver	.00031
Iron	.0063
Silver	.0040

Resistances of different sizes of wire in tables are given for a certain temperature so that the value of resistance at any desired temperature may be found by applying the above equation to the value found in the table. From Table I the resistance of 1,000 feet of number 10 copper wire is .9989 at 20 degrees C.

Sample problem:

Find the resistance of 1,000 feet of number 10 copper wire at 50 degrees C.

Solution:

Using the equation $R_t = R_o \times (1 + at)$, R_o the resistance at 20° C equals .9989, a from Table II equals .0043, t the change in temperature is $50° - 20° = 30°$. Then $R_t = .9989 \times (1 + .0043 \times 30) = 1.129$ the resistance of 1,000 feet at 50° Centigrade.

In an electric circuit the resistance is dependent upon the sort of material making up the circuit. In comparing different materials as to their ability to conduct electricity we speak of their specific or relative conductivity, and since silver has the property of being the best conductor of electricity we will compare the relative conductivities with regard to this metal. Silver will be taken with a conductivity of 100 the other metals being rated by a fractional part corresponding to their ability to conduct electricity.

Table III gives the specific or relative conductivity of some of the most common metals. Also included in this table are the specific resistances of the metals named. The specific resistance, which is expressed in microhms or in millionths of an ohm is the resistance of a centimeter cube of the metal taken between opposite faces.

TABLE III—CONDUCTANCE AND SPECIFIC RESISTANCE

Another way of expressing the resistance of a substance is in terms of ohms per mil-foot, which is the resistance of a volume of the material one foot in length and having a uniform cross section of one circular mil. The values for mil-foot resistance are included for the substances of Table III.

Sample problem:

A silver wire of a certain size and length will conduct 25 amperes; how much current will an iron wire of the same size and length conduct providing the same voltage is applied?

Solution:

The conductivity of iron is 16 in comparison to silver as 100. Then if I is the current to be conducted by the iron wire $I : 25 = 16 : 100$ $I \times 100 = 25 \times 16$ $I = 4$ Amperes.

There are two systems in common use by which temperature may be measured, these are the Fahrenheit and Centigrade systems. The Fahrenheit thermometer is one in which there are 180 equal divisions between the freezing and boiling points of water at sea level, the freezing point being taken as 32° and the boiling point 212°. In this system temperatures are denoted as degrees F.

The Centigrade thermometer is one in which there are 100 equal divisions between the freezing and boiling points of water. The freezing point is taken as 0 degrees and the boiling point as 100 degrees. Temperatures are denoted in this system by degrees C.

Temperatures may be changed from one scale to the other in the following manner.

To change from Fahrenheit to Centigrade subtract 32 and multiply by 5/9.

Sample problem:

A temperature is recorded as 77° F. Find the corresponding temperature in the Centigrade scale.

Solution:

$(77 - 32) \times 5/9 = 45 \times 5/9 = 25$ or 25° Centigrade.

To change from Centigrade scale to Fahrenheit multiply the reading by 9/5 and add 32.

Sample problem:

A temperature is taken as 15° C. Find the corresponding F. temperature.

Solution:

$(15 \times 9/5) + 32 = 27 + 32 = 59$ degrees which is the corresponding Fahrenheit temperature.

In speaking of the size of a conductor for carrying electric current that is the cross sectional area we say that it is so many circular mils, abbreviated (C. M.), in cross section. The circular mil is the area of a circle whose diameter is one thousandth (.001) inch. If the diameter of the wire is known in thousandths of an inch, namely mils, we can determine the circular mil cross section by squaring the diameter.

Example:

A number 16 wire has a diameter of 50 mils, then the circular mil cross section is 50×50 or 2500 circular mils.

In speaking of different sizes of wires they are distinguished by gage numbers. The gage most commonly used and the one called the American Gage is the one adopted by Brown & Sharpe Mfg. Co. and is known as the B & S Gage.

A gage for determining the size of an unknown wire is made up in the form of a disk in which notches are cut corresponding to the different sizes of wires. A wire of unknown size is fitted into these slots until one is found in which it fits snugly, these slots are marked giving the size. From standard wiring tables similar to Table I the circular mil cross section, the current carrying capacity, and resistance can then be found.

A simple way of remembering the sizes of wires is as follows:

A number 10 wire has approximately a cross section of 10,000 circular mils, a resistance of 1 ohm per thousand feet and a current carrying capacity of 24 amperes. A change of three numbers will either half or double the characteristics of the wire, i.e. a number 7 wire has a cross section of 20,000 circular mils, a resistance of .5 ohms per thousand feet and a current carrying capacity of 48 amperes.

Wants to Know Just How the Ratio of Intermittents Is Figured

Cites Several Cases Where the Explanations Have Been Misleading

A FREQUENT and well informed contributor to the Projection Department, W. B. Allen, president of Local 360, Edmonton, Canada, wants us to settle once and for all the hazy clouded atmosphere that seems to have settled about the intermittent movement. He also has something pithy to say about their examinations up in Edmonton. The letter is well worth reading and should bring out some worth while replies from other readers.

Of late there has been a lot of discussion regarding the revolving shutter and the intermittent movement. And it seems to me that the articles published in some cases are a little bit misleading to say the least. It must be admitted by the fraternity that we are in a way guided by what we find in the various books and trade papers and for this reason it seems to me that the various editors and authors of papers, books, articles, etc., should be careful what they let get by. Of course the editors are not supposed to be infallible but then it seems to me that they should have a fairly good idea as to the mode of operation of a revolving shutter and the ordinary intermittent movement.

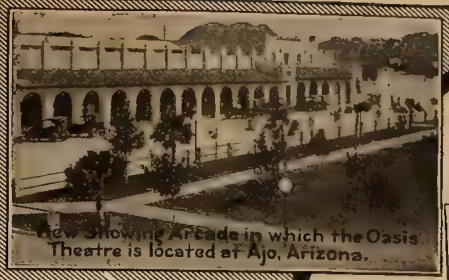
Now, Mr. Editor, let's see what you have to say on the following. The quotations are taken from two articles published in different papers by authorities on projection. One was published a few months ago and the other about eighteen months ago: "since the movement has a six-to-one ratio, which means that an angular rotation of the cam-pin through 60 degrees is required to accomplish one complete shift or quarter revolution of the star-wheel."

Here is another one by an authority on matters pertaining to projection: "a five-to-one intermittent movement would mean that the necessary blade width would be one sixth of 360 degrees or sixty degrees." This latter quotation may not be quite clear but it is meant that the intermittent angle is 60 degrees same as in the 6-to-1. I could go on to repeat a number of such instances of late and of old. Now, as I have already said these statements are made repeatedly by these authorities and it seems to me that we, the projectionists, should demand that these parties get the right information on the subject or else don't publish these articles because, as I said before, they are very misleading.

Now, Mr. Bragdon, the reason I come to you with this matter is because you are not one of the authorities in question. It has been my experience in the past that it is pretty hard to make an editor take any back-water so I gave up trying. When you spring something like this on them they come across with: "it was a typographical error," or if you go after 'em too strong, well, they throw your letter in the waste-paper basket, so what's the use? Believe me they are a sly bunch and you have to be very diplomatic or you will not get very much satisfaction!

There are a few other things that I have to bring to the attention of the NEWS but I think I will wait and see what success I have with this affair first.

I certainly would like to hear from Bro. Thoreau Victoria on this matter. I think he should have some well defined ideas on this matter seeing that he is the author of that proposed examination that was in the NEWS a few weeks ago. I had to laugh when I was reading it. My mind was brought to a meeting that was held in this city a few months ago and yours truly was present representing the projectionists and the chairman of the meeting was THE CITY ELECTRICIAN, a man who never saw the inside of a projection room, and it was by his ruling that a lot of the questions should be eliminated from the examination as an operator, he said, had no use for this sort of dope (of course he never heard of the word projectionist). And to put real humor into the situation Mr. John Hazza, manager of one of our leading theaters sent a letter which was read out; after expressing his real regret at not being able to be present he went on to say that an operator (get the operator) did not have to know the first thing about optics and that is just about his statement, word for word, but he went on to say that HIS operators didn't need to know anything about anything, so we all enjoyed a good laugh, except the chairman and, he could not see the joke, and went on with our business. So if my good friend Hazza would read Thoreau's article I am quite sure that he would insist that Bro. Thoreau be sent to Ponoka (our nearby asylum) for attention. However, Thoreau's article and similar articles will do real service in the interest of the projectionists and they should receive wide publicity. Perhaps, in the near future, I will find time to give you a few notes on the Provincial Examination of this Province and being that I am in close touch with the seat of parliament I know a little bit of what is going on. I wonder if the Editor has anything to say or objection providing that I allow him to censor the articles which I send in?



Well, I will admit that this is some mixed up letter but I just did not have time to write two letters, as should have been done, but I'll send the editor a cigar if he patches it up to be readable.

Reply:

At times, we fear, all of us have been in error when making casual references to "the speed of intermittent movements." Not in error mathematically but only as regards the correct nomenclature. When one man mentions that a movement has a ratio of 4-1 and another man states that his movement has a ratio of 5-1, to all appearances the latter gentleman has a faster mechanism. But not necessarily so. On further examination it may be found that the two movements are of the same speed. The difference in statements was caused by the different bases on which the speeds were based. And that point right there is the cause of all the trouble. For it is a simple task to measure the speed of any given intermittent movement, and any projectionist with a little ingenuity can satisfy himself as to the relative efficiencies of the different types. But after the measurements are made comes the vital part of the matter. The question is "What shall he base his comparisons on?"

To be elementary for a few paragraphs suppose that we have an apple. We divide it into 4 parts. One part is eaten. What then is the ratio of the part that is eaten to those that remain. The answer of course is 1-3. But what part of the apple has been eaten? One-fourth (¼) naturally. From these figures you can easily see how the wide variation in nomenclature has come about. Right in the case of the apple you have two ratios, 1 to 3 and 1 to 4, referring to the same thing but in a different way.

Now coming back to the less edible intermittent movement, most projectionists know, or should know, that there are 360 degrees in a complete circle. He also knows that it is

Gentlemen:

We wish to advise that the Type CS, three phase Westinghouse motor generator set purchased from you in May 1917, has been in daily use. Since its installation it has not cost us one cent for repairs, and is in as good condition as the day we put it in.

We have been told that our projection compares favorably with that of any house in the Southwest, and we do know that we have been free from the light troubles of the average small town showman.

We expect to open a house in new territory within the next year, and will be very glad to install one of your generators when the time comes.

Very truly, necessary for the movement—be it Geneva Star or pin-cross and cam—to complete one cycle of 360 degrees for each frame that is shown. This cycle includes the pulling down of the entire frame plus the actual time that the film is at rest while it is being projected to the screen. The instant that the movement again commences to move the film marks the end of that first cycle. Therefore the cycle has been divided into two parts, the time of movement and the time of rest.

Suppose now that we make a test of a movement and find that the pin or the cam moves exactly 90 degrees in order to bring down the film one frame. This would mean that the same pin or cam must be moving through 270 degrees while the frame was being projected. We have then, 90 degrees of movement and 270 degrees of rest. What is the speed of the intermittent?

The correct answer to this question is another question. It is, What do you mean by speed?

So far as we know this particular nomenclature has not as yet been taken up by the Committee on Standardization of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers but no doubt it will be soon. To us it would seem that the speed ratio would mean the time of rest compared to the entire cycle. In other words the intermittent just described would be said to have a speed of 4-1. On this same basis an intermittent which showed a period of movement of but 72 degrees would be said to have a ratio of 5-1.

Some other experts have ascribed a ratio as meaning the period of movement compared to the period of rest. On this basis a movement that boasted a 72 degree period of travel would be called a 4 to 1 intermittent.

So as you see, until the nomenclature is standardized either statement is correct but to be understood it is necessary that the speaker explain his method of arriving at the speed ratio.

According to your letter one expert has based his speed on the blade width. This is an arbitrary method and can not be considered a strictly mathematical solution inasmuch as of two projectionists with the same intermittent one may be able to trim off several degrees from the blade. Surely this does not make the movement faster. Then there is the intermittent movement with period of acceleration and deceleration so proportioned that it is possible to trim as much as 10 degrees from the blade width without encountering travel ghost. This is made possible by the fact that the first part of the travel of the sprocket is slight and that on account of it there is no necessity for the covering blade to complete its covering action until the intermittent has moved 10 degrees.

The blade width theory is not correct and should not be followed since it permits of too wide a variation in results.

This department rarely goes in for the "explosive stuff" so our exclamations on your statements about "trade paper editors" will be purely imaginary. There is no reason why a conductor of a department such as this should fear "back treading." It's a small man that can't or won't admit his mistakes.

We thought down here that you men up there were pretty well satisfied with the examinations given out but your present letter tends to disprove it. With individuals such as you have pictured there is considerable to be wished for. As for the statement by the theatre manager—it needs no comment. The same thing but with truth could be said of a good many managers.

Out of Focus Effect

Walter L. Greene, Morganton, N. C., writes:

I am running a Powers 6-B. Motor Driven Machine with Madza Light Equipment, it is nearly new and runs fine, but for the past month I have been bothered with an out of focus effect in the center of the picture. Thinking that it was the aperature plate tracks worn I put on a new one but this did not remedy the trouble. The sprockets are all in alignment, also the aperature plate and the tension springs set square on the tracks of the aperature and are adjusted right. This trouble seems to occur more frequent when running Pathe Films, and when running such films as Paramount-Artcraft and First National the out of focus effect does not occur.

Please advise me if some film perforations cause this or it is due to some machine trouble.

I have been a member of the N. A. M. L. for a year and I think it is a great thing. I have been operating for seven years and have always inspected the films before each show, so I have really been a member for seven years.

Reply: It seems quite probable that the surfaces between the lens case and the jacket of your objective have become worn, and a slight change in your adjustment is caused by the vibration of the machine. This trouble may be remedied by placing a thin piece of felt between the lens case and the jacket and thus preventing any movement due to vibration.

I. P. A. Holds Interesting Meeting

The International Projection Association held its usual meeting at the club-rooms of the society on March 15th. The speaker for the evening was one of the engineers of the General Electric Company who gave an interesting talk on "Motor Generators as Applied to Projection." Beginning with the next meeting, which will be held on March 27, the lectures will be given on Saturday nights, the change being due to the desire of the society's officers who wished to make it possible for as large an attendance as possible.

A Portable Switchboard for Studios

THE Motion Picture Industry is greatly indebted to electricity for its success, in that for studio work one of the essentials for artistic filming is a proper lighting effect. It would be impractical and costly to depend upon uncertain sunlight for filming, and consequently powerful arc lights, skillfully manipulated have been called into play. In the modern studio any scene may be photographed irrespective of dull cloudy weather or darkness outside, and a picture flooded with artificial sunlight, perfect in realism, can be produced by means of the arc light.

Portable switchboard installed at International Film Studio

The operation of the arc light, however, demands the attention of experts, and it is further necessary that these experts have efficient equipment at their disposal in order to obtain good results.

The International Film Company of New York have installed in their thoroughly modern studio, an elaborate lighting system capable of producing some wonderful effects. An interesting part of this installation is a portable switchboard that can be quickly and easily transported from one part of the studio to another, and gives excellent serviceability.

This board which is shown by the accompanying photographs is a Westinghouse-Krantz product, and specially designed for portable work since it can be connected by means of a heavy three-conductor stage cable directly to the incoming switchboard. The board may then be placed in any section of the studio where spider boxes are required for cutting in lights.

This piece of apparatus consists of a slate board and switches together with Kliegle receptacles contained in a No. 12 gauge steel box for protection, and mounted on caster wheels for portability. On the board are six three pole, single throw, 125 ampere knife switches, each feeding to three point Kliegle receptacles, which in turn may be connected to six-way spider boxes for distribution to the individual lamps.

This switchboard, which is about thirty-six inches wide by thirty-two inches high by eighteen inches deep, weighs approximately 350 pounds, and since it is entirely enclosed is amply protected for safety.

This apparatus may be connected in a very short interval of time and due to compactness and portability proves very useful in distributing power for arc lights.

Cue Sheets Latest Hits — Music — Musical Equipment

A Progressive Orchestra Leader

FOR the past ten years I have been watching musical directors throughout the country, and have tried to study their work from every conceivable angle. One of the surest signs that a musical director is appropriately accompanying pictures is the fact that he is always in the market for plenty of music. I am in a position to know who is buying music and who is not.

Among the many musical directors who are striving to acquire a large and up-to-date library is Mr. R. E. Moulton, of the Sexton Theatre, Great Falls, Montana. Mr. Moulton has had a great amount of experience in this particular line. As early as 1911 he played in Pantages Theatre, Omaha, Nebraska, the Imperial Theatre, Great Falls, Montana, Ansonia and Rialto Theatres, Butte, Montana, etc. He can be considered a pioneer when a snaredrum indicated a fainting spell of a vamp.

Readers may wonder why I say all this and of what interest it may be to them. I am sure that there are many orchestra leaders who are still adhering to the old clap trap style of accompanying pictures. They are still trying to get away with libraries consisting of music received through orchestra clubs, and professional favors.

Mr. Moulton recently sent me several programs which he played in connection with certain pictures and after reviewing same, I came to the conclusion that although his orchestra consists of a combination of only eight men, he is nevertheless, playing such numbers as "Erotik" by Grieg, "Romance" from the Wieniawsky Concerto No. 2, and many other of such standard compositions.

From a newspaper clipping which I received from the Great Falls Daily Tribune, I learned that Mr. Moulton is setting his own musical suggestions, and he spends a great deal of time preparing his musical programs.

"Told In The Hills," a picture recently shown at the Sexton Theatre, was one picture I happened to see myself, and am therefore in a position to judge the musical setting selected by Mr. Moulton, which herewith follows:

The above musical suggestions absolutely reveal the fact that the work of Mr. Moulton and his associates, deserves to be commented upon. Of course, as in every instance, a lot of credit for the splendid work the above gentleman is doing, is due to Mr. Wm. Steege, manager of the Sexton Theatre. Money spent on music is considered a surplus expenditure. By this I mean that the majority of exhibitors and theatre managers consider music a surplus item, because, figuratively speaking, it cannot show any net returns. I believe, that is therefore very important that the manager of a theatre be progressive and modern enough to realize that money spent for music cannot be figured in the same way as money paid for a film. Music is nothing but an asset which indirectly brings returns and it takes a master mind in exhibition of pictures to be able to realize this. Motion Picture exhibitors and producers should consider such man as Mr. Moulton and Mr. Steege as promoters of trade, which will result to the advantage of all parties. THE EDITOR.

"NEWMAN" BRASS FRAMES AND RAILS

DO YOU KNOW?

that 90% of all the brass frames used in the moving picture houses throughout the country are "NEWMAN'S"?

WHY?

Because we steadily have refused to cheapen or lower the quality of our goods, even though others have sought to undermine our prestige by underselling with cheapened products. That is one of the reasons why nine out of every ten frames sold bear the name "NEWMAN."

Insist on that name and save money.

You ought to have our latest 1920 catalogue. Write us today.

Everything the Showman Needs on Every Picture Released

Two Christie Comedies
(One Reel Each)

FOR light comedies these latest releases from the Christie workshop will generally please, although there are no spontaneous laughs concealed anywhere in the two reels. The ideas behind the offerings, "No Babies Allowed," and "Marry Me," are genuine and are brought out without any resort to slapstick. And since the treatment of them is not exaggerated but considerably human they should find response with picturegoers who do not ask too much for their money.

As its title indicates, "No Babies Allowed" presents the youthful couple who are unable to find an apartment because of the objection to babies. The parents almost give up in despair when they resort to camouflage and gain admittance by employing a tradesman to carry baby up in his basket. At which point the complications begin. The busy, snooping landlord causes the parents to deposit the infant on the dumbwaiter and before they get it back the child is lugged off to an orphan asylum. The conclusion reveals the happy couple building their own home. Jimmy Harrison and Dorothy DeVore are the principals but the honors go to the infant. It is a good natured child that can smile when it is being tossed around like a ham. Babies have brought bright spots to more than one picture.

"Marry Me" is a satire on the leap year proposal and offers Bobby Vernon in the role of the chap who scoffs at the idea of girls proposing. Just to prove that he is wrong his chums conceive the scheme of having Vera Steadman pop the question. Of course she is not in earnest at first but when she sees another woman taking advantage of leap year by proposing to Bobby, she quickly decides that he is worth having after all. This comedy is more compact with incident and humor than the other and scores with better results. —LAURENCE REID.

"The Evil Eye"
(Hallmark)

"THE EVIL EYE," the new Ascher serial starring Benny Leonard, the lightweight pugilist champion, does not promise, from the first three episodes, to be a step forward in serial making. Leonard ought to have been satisfied with being a good fighter and let it go at that. Not that the plot gives him much acting to do. It is a story of a relentless, powerful gang of crooks, who are pursuing a million dollars in bonds, the heroine, and the family jewels. The star is shown in few, if any close-ups. One thing, however, he does do—he supplies good action in every episode. His fist fights are truly realistic and display the cleverness and speed that brought him fame in the prize ring.

Of course there is a "master mind" of the underworld, who plans the daring Wall Street bond robberies. This time he is a combination of Shylock, the witches of Macbeth and the notorious Mr Hyde. He is wheeled about in an invalid chair, burning his "evil eye" into everyone he meets, and blinding those who fall under his disfavor. He is hideous enough to make a good comedian.

The best way to describe the serial is to say that it is no better and no worse than the old time "mystery" serials. It lacks remarkable thrills, the producer probably thinking that Benny's beating several gunmen per episode would be enough. The story in the early episodes at least, coincides almost exactly with the recent Wall Street bond robberies, which ought to help make it draw. The star's name will also pull tremendously—MATHEW TAYLOR.

"Ghosts of Romance"
(Adventure Scenic Robertson-Cole Two Reels)

UNDER the above title, Robertson-Cole is presenting views of a number of California Spanish missions as they appear today, with a thread of a story injected, that of a young Mexican who makes a pilgrimage to pay homage to a dead padre buried at the Northern end of the once thriving string of religious enterprises.

With the exception of a few scenes there is nothing much of interest in the offering. Long distance shots of crumbling piles of masonry do not present either a dramatic or scenic feast. There is little attempt to make the views artistic although some few of the subtitles are rather good. On the other hand some others are very involved. We do not think the picture worth considering more seriously.—J. S. DICKERSON.

"The Madonna of the Slums"
(Stage Woman's War Relief Series—Universal—Two Reels)

SOME way the Stage Women's War Relief series impress us as being the product of some one who has but slight belief in the intelligence of "movie" audiences or else he has decided that anything is good enough so long as it is for "charity." Anyway the stories being presented are decidedly commonplace. Any good continuity writer could turn one out in two hours.

The picture under the above title is no exception. It tells the story of a rich artist who has never completed a master painting because he could not find a model for the face. Then Jeanette Eagles as the young wife of a chap in hard luck, same being Holbrook Blinn, goes out on the street to beg so she can buy milk for her baby, and the artist secures just what he desired.

Besides Miss Eagles, just now scoring a considerable personal success in the current stage play "The Wonderful Thing," a number of other real celebrities are in the cast. Helen MacKellar of "The Storm" company and until recently appearing with Richard Bennett in "Beyond the Horizon" has a part which presents no possibilities. Galli Curci appears in a couple of scenes which show her singing at the Metropolitan opera house. Holbrook Blinn who will be remembered for some good roles in past pictures, demonstrates that "one has to have a part to make a hit" appearing to very bad advantage in a bit. Others are Ethel Intropodi, Louis Alberni, Victor Sutherland, John Morris and Jessie Ralph. However, the last named probably will not mean much to people outside of New York.—J. S. DICKERSON

"Haunted Spooks"
(Harold Lloyd Comedy Pathe Two Reels)

IT is customary to speak of every new Harold Lloyd comedy as his best. The rich incidents, the humorous details of his previous effort are swallowed up in the rich assortment of tricks in the succeeding piece. So it is with "Haunted Spooks." No matter how funny his other pictures were his latest offering seemingly eclipses them all. So spontaneous is the flow of ridiculous incidents, so firmly established are its manifold points that the thought is brought home that the Rolin company labors with painstaking care. Not working on schedule, Messrs. Roach and Lloyd have time to THINK up some new and clever business, and it is not transferred to the screen until it is perfect. The impression is gained that as much time and study are put into these comedies as in a special feature production. The result is Harold Lloyd is making just about the best pictures that are coming from any fun factory.

"Haunted Spooks" is a satire on spiritualism. Timely isn't it? Boy, page Sir Oliver Lodge! But before the spirit part dancing around the house which will go to the girl if she marries and remains there a year, the begoggled Harold cuts up some didoes which are excruciatingly funny. And novel too, don't forget that. The piece starts with all its cylinders working and the first laugh is sent up with the introductory caption which informs the spectator to "hold on tight, we're going around a curve." The boy is in pursuit of love, the girl is sixteen and never been . . . . . but once or twice, and to find the locale the onlooker is advised to go down the Mississippi as far as he can and turn to the right.—LAURENCE REID.

Index to Complete Plan Book and EXHIBITORS BOX OFFICE REPORTS

EDITOR'S NOTE—Exhibitors will find here a complete list of all feature pictures for last twenty weeks arranged alphabetically as an index to The Complete Plan Book for this period, naming the picture, the producer, the star, the release date, and designating the issue of Motion Picture News which contained the original review.

The following also contains our reviewer's opinion encompassed in a brief single line and gives the comments of exhibitors who have shown the picture and forwarded their opinions. And we also publish a final line fairly summarizing a consensus of all opinions received on each picture. As many of the exhibitors do not comment on every picture (merely checking it Big, Average or Poor), we arrive at the consensus not only by the actual comments made and published, but are also guided by the reports from exhibitors who have made no actual comments, but have merely checked the box office value of the picture.

All the pictures mentioned are five-reel features, unless marked otherwise. Serials are reviewed also. At the conclusion of this department will be found the "Flash-Backs," being comments on films released prior to November 8, 1919.

"THE VIRGIN OF STAMBOUL"
(Universal)

Star and Director Create Excellent Turkish Picture

IT is not very often that in a picture dealing with a foreign and little known land the director is able to truthfully create the atmosphere of the story. But in "The Virgin of Stamboul." Universal's seven-reel feature of Constantinople and the desert, with Priscilla Dean as star, we spend an hour and a half wandering in the Turkish city and galloping over the sands. Besides the atmosphere of this picturesque locale, the picture has splendid sets and desert exteriors, and an excellent star and supporting cast.

Priscilla Dean is a beggar girl of the streets, untamed, wild and impetuous, and she makes up well as an Oriental. Her acting is one of the best things of the picture. The story isn't startling and we come away with a memory of the star, the sets, and the thrilling battle scene of the final reel, rather than the plot. The spoken sub-titles appeal, despite a constant repetition of some Turkish words, but the descriptive titles are a little too descriptive. An anti-climax rather detracts from the action at the end, when we flash from two realistic individual struggles to the big general melee at the city's walls.

The story of the little Turkish girl, forced by inexorable customs into marriage with an unseen husband, arouses the sympathy. Wheeler Oakman, the globe-trotting American, furnishes good action and makes a fine appearance, although he is not too pretty to be offensive. Wallace Beery makes an admirable heavy.

The one objection to the picture is that it is a trifle too long. The first reel barely introduces the characters and shows a number of street scenes. This, of course, creates the atmosphere, but lengthens the picture too much. But it is a big feature and will be well liked.—Length, 7 reels.—Matthew Taylor.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

On ———— the ———— theatre will offer "The Virgin of Stamboul" to its patrons. This seven-reel feature is a Universal production, starring Priscilla Dean.

The story is laid in the city of Stamboul, near Constantinople. Sari, played by Priscilla Dean, is a beggar girl of the streets, who attracts the attention of Captain Pemberton, an American soldier of fortune, who has recruited the Black Horse cavalry in order to preserve law and order in the desert. Sari overhears Pemberton being told that her soul is as filthy as the streets of Stamboul, and rushes to the mosque to pray, although she knows that no Turkish woman may enter the mosque. There she witnesses a murder of revenge committed by a sheik, who afterwards tries to lure her to his harem. She defies him, but he takes advantage of the Turkish custom which permits a man to purchase a bride and keep his name unknown to her until after the ceremony.

Meanwhile Pemberton, at last admitting to himself his love for the impulsive little beggar girl, returns from the desert. But the sheik carries them both away as prisoners to his fortified camp outside the walls. Then Sari escapes and brings word to the Black Horse cavalry, who respond to the call of their master through the woman he loves. The battle and final rescue that follows is one of the most spectacular offered on the screen in many a day.

PROGRAM READER

You may have seen pictures of the Northwest, and of the South Seas, but you have never seen such a picture of the wild, barren desert as is "The Virgin of Stamboul" coming to this theatre on ————. You are carried to Stamboul, the city of crime and filth, in the heart of Turkey. You will wander among its cosmopolitan throngs of veiled women, motley beggars, and richly dressed sheiks. You will have all the atmosphere of that strange country "somewhere east of Suez, where the best is like the worst." And you will see Priscilla Dean as Sari, the beggar girl, and witness one of the most thrilling and elaborate battle scenes of recent years. The date ————! The place—this theatre! And the result ———— a mighty fine evening's entertainment.

SUGGESTIONS

You have many angles to advertise in this feature. First there is the star, who has a large following. She is also supported by a cast, some of whom are well known. Dwell on the fact that the story is by H. H. Van Loan, and that Tod Browning directed it. Also it is seven reels, and you can book it as something unusually spectacular because of its unusual length. If you can borrow some camels from a menagerie, they would offer the best exploitation you could have. Dress your box office up as a tent of the desert. Put turbans and Turkish costumes on your ushers. Use a sign in front of your theatre or in the lobby reading, "The Virgin of Stamboul" and underneath:

"Ship me somewhere east of Suez, where the best is like the worst;
There there ain't no ten commandments, and a man can raise a thirst."

Kipling's lines are well known and would convey the locale of the story to your patrons better than any advertising of your own.

CATCH LINES

"The Virgin of Stamboul"—the story of a little beggar girl of "the wickedest city in the world" and how she revolted against cruel Turkish customs.

Seven reels of tense, appealing drama laid in picturesque Stamboul and the wild, open desert.

"MY LADY'S GARTER"
(F. P.-Lasky)

Mystery Melodrama Which Should "Get By"

HIGHLY improbable, wildly melodramatic in spots and decidedly episodic in plot development is this adaptation of Jacques Futrelle's mystery detective story of the same name, but in spite of the picture's technical faults we are inclined to think that it will pass with the average audience.

To begin with stories of this sort, the hunting of a notorious criminal with information as to his identity withheld from the audience together with the bringing forward of much circumstantial evidence pointing to the hero as the guilty man, are popular. They carry suspense and interest even when they are arbitrary as this one is.

Next in favor of this production is good action in the various individual sequences even if those sequences are numberless and not well connected. Third, the picture makes a good bid for popularity because the hero turns out to be the secret service chap and everything ends according to Hoyle.

The feature is not Tourneur's best by any means nor is it to be classed as his worst. The lack of a good continuity probably can be blamed on faults of the original story, along with another probability of having shot too many scenes and then having to cut to an arbitrary footage. This latter difficulty, it seems might have been avoided by discarding a sequence having to do with some English history showing the origin of the "My Lady's Garter" part of the picture and which has nothing to do with the real plot, that of capturing "The Hawk" and letting the heroine get married. Length, 5 reels. J. S. Dickerson.

THE CAST

Bruce Calhoun	Wyndham Standing
Helen Hamilton	Sylvia Breamer
Henry Van Derp	Holmes E. Herbert
Meredith	Warner Richmond
Dexter	Paul Clerget
Brokaw Hamilton	Warren Cook
Mrs. Hamilton	Louise Dergney
Keats Gaunt	Charles Craig

From the novel by Jacques Futrelle. Directed by Maurice Tourneur.

PRESS NOTICE STORY

Jacques Futrelle, one of the heroes of the ill fated Titanic left behind a novel of international fame, "My Lady's Garter," which has been adapted under the same title to picture production by Maurice Tourneur, director of such great successes as "The Life Line," "The Blue Bird" and other noted photoplays. "My Lady's Garter" has been booked for the ———— theatre for a ———— days' engagement beginning ————.

That it promises to be as entertaining as its famous director's other productions can be announced as positive since the ideal photoplay plot, that found in the trailing of a notorious criminal by the secret service is the story which is told in pictured events.

In the role of the detective is Wyndham Standing, while Sylvia Breamer has the part of the heroine. A complete cast of Paramount-Artcraft caliber is in support of the leading characters, there being no particular star. The feature is exciting and thrilling to the extreme and will furnish an evening of genuine entertainment to all who like the mystery story at its best.

PROGRAM READER

Another of Maurice Tourneur's famous melodramas, "My Lady's Garter," has been booked for the ———— theatre for a ———— days' engagement beginning ————. To those who remember "The Life Line," "Woman" and other of this director's productions, the coming attraction will need no guarantee as to its excellence. Mr. Tourneur always produces pictures brimful of action and romance and "My Lady's Garter" is no exception. The picture is adapted from the widely read novel by Jacques Futrelle (Mr. Futrelle was one of the heroes of the Titanic disaster) and is a mystery story concerning the efforts of an American secret service man to trap a master criminal whose alias is "The Hawk." "The Hawk" is finally brought to justice, but not before Wyndham Standing as the detective and Sylvia Breamer as the girl, are involved in many exciting adventures which end in a romance. Mr. Tourneur's skill in weaving the scenes of this sort of a story into just the right tempo is too well known to need further comment. The dramatic worth of Mr. Futrelle's novel is unquestioned and the cast selected to enact it is ideal. The result is a special feature which should not be missed by a single person who enjoys a good photoplay.

SUGGESTIONS

We would dwell heavily on the fame of the director for producing melodramatic productions, with reference to his past successes, give the author of the book, with mention of his death on the Titanic, good billing and play up the fact that this is a mystery detective story, without paying much attention to the cast unless you consider Standing and Breamer strong enough to feature.

New York papers are full of stories concerning robberies being committed in which it is hinted that there is a "master criminal" planning the various crimes. Link your exploitation into the news events, stating that "My Lady's Garter" concerns such a man. You also have a chance for some exploitation in the historical sequence of this feature since telling the origin of the "Order of the Garter" in England is good reading. We question somewhat the policy of this last suggestion, however, since you run the danger of impressing your patrons with the idea that it is a historical picture. We would rather pass over the fact that there is a costume sequence in the production at all. If you want the high lights of the picture for selling angles, we think they are to be found in a motor boat chase, a rescue from drowning of the heroine by the hero, the blowing up of a motor boat in the last sequences, and an automobile chase. The picture gives you some views of the Hudson River and of famous Riverside Drive, New York.

CATCH LINES

Jacques Futrelle died a hero on the Titanic, but his great novel of the master criminal who was brought to justice by the Secret Service, lives after him. Thrilling in book form and just as exciting and interest holding in the photoplay. Adapted by a master in producing melodrama and played by a fine cast of principals in a story having no star role.

"KING SPRUCE"

(Dial-Hodkinson)

Lumber Story Pleases Despite Complicated Plot

MITCHELL LEWIS has been given a role that fits him well in this latest story of the "big timber" country, and despite the rather cumbersome series of incidents that comprise the plot, we find ourselves quite genially disposed to the entire production. The star furnishes a welcome relief from the many handsome young movie heroes. His roughness, virility and strength are in perfect harmony with the crashing of timber and the cries of the lumber jack. He would be ruined by a full dress suit. But the production does not come near to equalling "The Barrier," the Rex Beach story in which Lewis played the lead some time ago. The star himself, the director, and especially the story, are to blame for this.

The plot is food for thought. You are obliged to figure it out. Complications are worked up and then a sub-title tells us that several months have elapsed. And then both villains suddenly reform, and that is all there is to it, whereas we were awaiting a grand and glorious climax.

Some excellent forest fire scenes are revealed with equally fine photography, and the star, massive, ferocious, and wild-eyed, furnishes the high spots in his several fights with the villain. Joe Ray makes a good type and Mignon Anderson acts well in her dual role. Melbourne MacDowell is more of a society heavy than a rugged, outdoor type.

This picture ought to please everyone except the matinee girl, but Mitchell Lewis has appeared in better productions.—Length, 5 reels.—Matthew Taylor.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"King Spruce," a story of the tall timber country, with the popular Mitchell Lewis as star, will be the attraction at the ———— theatre on ————. The star's virile personality fits perfectly into this story of strong, rough men who spend the winter in the heart of the deep woods and the spring in driving the felled logs to civilization's farthest outpost.

Dwight Wade is a college graduate and a school teacher in a little town on the outskirts of the woods. He is in love with Elva Barrett, the daughter of a rich lumber king, who is seeking the nomination for governor. In order to separate the two lovers, Barrett brings Wade to the woods with his lumberjacks. Barrett himself leaves his palatial residence to go to camp for the first time in twenty years. There he burns out some paupers who have "squatted" on his land. But one of them, a girl known throughout the woods as "Skeets' girl," has her revenge. With a flaming brand she rushes through the forests, setting fire to the underbrush. Wade, although a quarrel with the boss of Barrett's camp has caused his dismissal, helps to extinguish the flames.

Here we learn something of Barrett's earlier life. Twenty years before he stole the wife of an old lumberman, and "Skeets' girl" is his daughter. Wade learns this and Barrett is forced to promise that he will give the girl a name. When Barrett tries to compromise by marrying her to his foreman, a terrific battle ensues between the two forces of lumberjacks, and "Skeets' girl" is brought to the home of her wounded father in the city.

In the spring, when the giant logs are floated down the river, matters are finally cleared up. Barrett repents his unjust actions and the foreman marries "Skeets' girl," who loves him. Wade is united to Elva, an efficient lumberman, instead of a teacher.

PROGRAM READER

Here is a story laid in the picturesque lumber country. And besides this excellent locale there is a story that is full of dramatic incidents. And above all there is the incomparable Mitchell Lewis as star. Lewis is unique in the motion picture world. No other star on the screen to-day would be able to take this part of a rough and ready lumberjack, hard fighting, yet ever kind and ready to defend the weak. Lewis is supported by an excellent cast, and the feature is crowded with such spectacles as forest fires and battles between the forces of lumberjacks from opposing camps. The love interest is not lacking, and it is a picture that will leave an impression.

SUGGESTIONS

Mitchell Lewis is a star who is well known and has a large following. Exploit him, but never him alone. Tell what kind of a story he is in—a story of the lumber country. He has done excellent work in these kind of pictures before, such as "Jacques of the Silver North" and "Faith of the Strong." Your patrons will even remember "The Barrier," if you ever showed it. The title of this picture also has good value, for you can create a number of catch lines to get the atmosphere, such as "a story of that country where they talk of the spruce tree as if it were a virile, moving personality." Lobby decorations can be effected with skins of animals, old rifles, etc.

You could use a large sign in front of your theatre reading, "Danger! Beware of forest fires! See 'King Spruce' and see what one can do."

CATCH LINES

"King Spruce" is a story of the country where the cry of "t-i-m-b-e-r" echoes through the woods, followed by the crash as giants of the forest fall.

Mitchell Lewis, the strongest, most virile star on the screen, in an attractive story of the tall timber country.

"THE THIRD WOMAN"

(Robertson-Cole)

Might Be Classed as Fair Entertainment

CARLYLE BLACKWELL is responsible in many ways for the success of this feature, which by the way, might be classed as fair entertainment.

If the story is taken into consideration, we might call it rather weak and elemental, for it is divided into three parts, each one of which is a tale in itself, without the proper connecting links to give it the right blending. The locale is laid in New York and the southwest, principally among the Pueblo Indians, the latter scenes being very interesting, for they introduce the life and customs of this pre-historic race and their dwellings, which have always possessed a wonderful fascination for the white man.

The opening scenes show the star as the son of a wealthy man who has made his money in the west and has come east to live. The young man is engaged to a society butterfly, but breaks his promise when he accidently discovers that his mother is an Indian. The call of the latter race now becomes strong within him and we next see him among his mother's people. He is about to marry an Indian maiden but cannot, for the call of the white man has again entered his soul, compelling him to leave the tribe. After wandering about, he finds true happiness in the daughter of his father's old colleague, who does not object to his Indian blood.

Carlyle Blackwell looks and acts the part of the young halfbreed very well. In many instances, however, he is too much in evidence and certainly "loves" close-ups whether necessary or not. Length, 5 reels. Frank Leonard.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"The Third Woman," a Robertson-Cole production, with Carlyle Blackwell in the leading role, will play this theatre on ———— of next ————.

It is the story of a man who conceals from his son the fact that the son's mother was an Indian squaw and who brought up the young man to believe that he was of pure white blood. Carlyle Blackwell plays the role of the young half-breed to perfection, injecting such naturalness into the character that one would be led to believe at times that he was a descendant of the Redman.

Arriving home from college, Luke Halliday becomes engaged to a young society butterfly, whom he believes he loves. But then comes Marcelle Riley, daughter of his father's old colleague of plainsmen days. She is pretty and her frankness makes a great impression upon Luke, who begins to delight in the joys of love. But his happiness is of short duration, for a blackmailer appears upon the scene and discloses the fact that our hero is of Indian blood. The call of his mother's race now seizes Luke and we next see him dwelling among the Indians. As time goes on he becomes engaged to an Indian maiden and is about to marry her, when the call of the white man enters his soul and he finds he cannot. He leaves the tribe and wanders about for many days. By chance he runs into the blackmailer who had informed him of his Indian blood and is about to choke him to death when Marcelle and her father arrive upon the scene and prevent him from committing murder. The wanderer is invited to the young woman's home, where he learns the great truth, that the love of a noble woman transcends all difference of race or conventional idea of "blood taint."

PROGRAM READER

Manager ———— announces that "The Third Woman," a Robertson-Cole production, with Carlyle Blackwell in the leading role, will play this theatre on ———— of next ————. It is the story of a man who conceals from his son the fact that the son's mother was an Indian squaw and who brought up the young man to believe that he was of pure white blood. Carlyle Blackwell has never done a better piece of character work in his long career upon the screen, for he has drawn the likeness of the young half-breed with a trueness that could not be excelled. The opening scenes show the star as the son of a wealthy man who has made his money in the West and has come East to live. His son Luke is engaged to a society butterfly, whom he believes he loves. But Marcelle, the daughter of an old colleague of his father's, appears upon the scene and Luke begins to feel that he has found his true love. Through an accident, however, our hero discovers that his mother was an Indian squaw. The call of the Indian race now seizes Luke and we next see him dwelling among the Pueblo Indians. As time goes on he becomes engaged to one of the maidens and is about to marry her, when the call of the white race becomes so strong in his soul that he finds he cannot.

He leaves the tribe and wanders about for many days until by accident he meets Marcelle, with whom he finds true happiness.

SUGGESTIONS

This production if taken as a whole can play almost any house and give the patrons a pleasing afternoon or evening's entertainment. The story, although not of the strongest, has its interesting moments and it would be a good idea to feature it in your advertising. It is one of those peculiar tales, which if told right, and this one is, that interweaves the race barrier question in such a way that an audience cannot but help show interest in it. So play it up and use catch lines such as "His Father Had Made the Fatal Mistake of Marrying an Indian Woman and Did Not Tell His Son that He Was of Indian Blood. What Did the Young Man Do When Told of the Circumstances?" A line like this would tend to draw the attention of the patrons to this singular story and let them know what to expect.

Carlyle Blackwell is a splendid type for this sort of characterization and he looks and acts the part throughout with a studied knowledge of what he is doing. You might feature his name in your advertising. And also do not forget that there are introduced some beautiful and picturesque scenes of Indian life which are bound to excite attention. Play these up also

"SOONER OR LATER"
(Selznick)

Farcical Idea Is Frail But Fairly Amusing

NO mental concentration is demanded in Owen Moore's latest expression, "Sooner or Later," because it is too absurd to make much of a fuss over. The story establishes the theory that every fellow falls sooner or later for some one girl even though he may call himself a woman-hater, and in bringing out this point the idea is stretched to the breaking point. While it starts off on a fairly reasonable premise it soon becomes outrageously farcical and in carrying it to feature length oxygen is supplied by the padding expert in the shape of Keystone fireworks.

If one wants to fool himself by taking it seriously, one will realize that the piece has not the idea or finesse needed for high-class comedy, nor the speed demanded for slapstick farce. There appears to be no happy medium between these two extremes. On element of patrons demands the one—another, the other. "Sooner or Later" is neither the one or the other. There is really no substance to the thing, but it is so palpably ridiculous and treated as such that the spectator is disarmed from an analytical standpoint. Much amusement is gained in the antics of the slapstick burglars who dodge in and out of trick doors in their efforts to elude the hero.

This bit of outrageous action takes up the better part of two reels and is so concentrated that the tiny thread of romance is buried in the background where it remains until resurrected for the final clinch. The picture in the earlier reels could be called "Motoring with Owen Moore" since it presents him racing over the roads in a high-powered car, and these scenes become rather tedious because the chief characters are always in the limelight. There is no continuity visible, the action presenting a series of episodes. But it amuses after a fashion—what with the drollery of Owen Moore, the burglars and the pointed subtitles.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"Sooner or Later," Owen Moore's second Selznick picture, will be presented at the ———— theatre on ———— of ———— week. This is an adaptation by R. Cecil Smith of Lewis Allen Browne's story, "The Woman Hater," and it offers the star manifold opportunities to display his talents as a light comedian. The sum and substance of the title is the fact that they all fall sooner or later in matters of love. Patrick Murphy, the character played by Mr. Moore, is no exception, although he is known as a woman-hater. He tries to help out his friend, Robert Ellis, whose new bride has left him, and much to his surprise he is convinced that the person he has fallen in love with is the wife in question.

He kidnaps the girl and takes her to his friend's home and to save her reputation when visitors arrive and convince him that she is not Ellis' wife, he declares that they are just married. Complications ensue when the house is burglarized and the incidents are crammed full of humor. Finally Ellis arrives and discovers the case of mistaken identity. And Mrs. Ellis arrives too, accompanied by a man and woman. In the end congratulations are offered Patrick for picking such a winner. He is a woman-hater no longer. This is a delightful picture which maintains a farcical tone throughout. Mr. Moore in the role of the woman-hater has a role to which he is particularly adapted. Seena Owen appears in leading support of the star and gives a charming performance. Wesley Ruggles is the director.

PROGRAM READER

Patrons of the ———— theatre will find much to interest them in the Owen Moore picture, "Sooner or Later," which will be shown on ———— of ———— week. This is a pure farce which contains sixty minutes of laughter, the only serious thing in it being the tempestuous love of a confirmed woman-hater for a charming girl. He flirts in the morning with her over a telephone call and in the evening he is engaged. You may call him a fast worker. But circumstances played a part in overcoming his hatred of the feminine sex. His friend Bob Ellis is a newly-wed whose wife has left him and Pat is commissioned to locate her and bring her home. The girl of the flirtation seems to fit Bob's description of his spouse. The result of his adventure is ludicrous in the extreme. Mr. Moore is right at home in this type of picture and gives an effective performance.

SUGGESTIONS

The idea of the woman-hater who is ensnared by an engaging female into matrimony forms the basis of this comedy picture. So use it in your copy. Tell that the boys all fall "sooner or later," even though they may be confirmed woman-haters. Bill this as an uproarious farce which crackles with zippy action and sparkles with humor throughout five reels. Use stills and endeavor to secure those which show the star and Seena Owen in the high-powered racing car. Play up the name of Owen Moore. He has a large following. Use teasers on the billboards with the announcement—Sooner or Later. This will arouse curiosity among the readers and they will wonder what is coming. Play up the teasers in advance and then a few days before the showing go into details. You can link up with stores and have dealers use cards that "Sooner or later you will take advantage of our fine display of ————." The picture can be advertised along with the article.

CATCH LINES

He was a confirmed woman-hater, but they all fall sooner or later. Did Patrick Murphy? See Owen Moore in "Sooner or Later."

"THE FLAMING CLUE"
(Vitagraph)

Harry Morey Has a Vigorous Melodrama Here

AS an exponent of rough and tumble melodramas Harry Morey stands in a class by himself. In giving him subjects of such melodramatic vitality as "The Flaming Clue" to interpret, his sponsors have gauged his personality to a nicety. It carries as much dynamic force as the star possesses himself and anyone in search of two-fisted entertainment will find it here. The plot takes up the familiar subject of the underworld in which a Secret Service man is intent on capturing a band of counterfeiters a subject incidentally which is always interesting provided it is worked out, as it is here, with dramatic intensity.

It may be familiar, but in this instance it is treated with enough incident and thrills as to make it appear quite original. The outstanding points in the offering are found in Mr. Morey's adaptability for the role of the sleuth and the careful direction of Edwin L. Hollywood. The latter has not only brought out a wealth of dramatic and physical action, but has also seen to it that the plot travels to its climax without any digressions. Fortified with a compact continuity, the picture cannot help but score. It carries a healthy punch in nearly every scene, some of which may be defined as genuine redblooded thrills.

In fulfilling the demands of the role, Mr. Morey has overwhelming odds, but he doesn't falter. So earnestly does he go about his work that the action is made reasonably lifelike. One sympathizes with the sleuth because he is painted as a regular fellow instead of the usual relentless type. The romance is not a negligible factor as in most rugged melodramas, and, furthermore, it is not established in an arbitrary manner. The director has paid particular attention to his atmosphere which is brought out in appropriate backgrounds and types. Some of these are tough looking customers, but they surely belong here. Length, 5 reels. —Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE STORY

The virile and versatile star of Vitagraph pictures, Harry T. Morey, will appear at the ———— theatre for ———— days beginning ———— in his latest photoplay entitled "The Flaming Clue." This subject is of the detective brand and it provides the star with another colorful characterization. The feature deals with the capture of a band of counterfeiters and every detail has been worked out in accordance with modern methods of detecting crime. The story is filled with the necessary ingredients-suspense action, mystery and romance.

Mr. Morey plays the part of Ralph Cornell, a secret service man engaged in tracking down a band of counterfeiters who are making twenty dollar bills in an underground cellar. The only clue is the fact that one of the old Coddington notes appeared in circulation after a period of years and after the original counterfeiter had died. It was supposed at that time that the plates had been destroyed. Cornell is assigned to the case, and in the disguise of a naturalist seeking for fossils he visits Coddington's former home where he obtains board and falls in love with the daughter of the house. The chief counterfeiter is also in love with the girl and lays several traps for Cornell. But the detective turns the tables eventually. Mr. Morey is assisted by a competent cast of players.

PROGRAM READER

Harry T. Morey, one of the most popular figures on the screen, and who is noted for his rugged portrayals, will appear at this theatre in the near future in a picture calculated to keep the interest of the patron at fever heat. The star assumes the role of a detective who is assigned to the task of rounding up a band of counterfeiters and in the action presents him in situations of deep mystery and suspense. There is a fascinating romance which balances the melodramatic scenes and which gives it a strength necessary to make it enjoyable. The story is written by Frederic Van Rensselaer Dey, author of many thrilling detective tales, and the character played by Mr. Morey is an ideal one for his personality. How he fulfils his task is told in five reels of absorbing action. Watch for further announcements.

SUGGESTIONS

The best angle to play up in this feature is the name of the star. Inasmuch as the picture offers a detective story it would be advisable to keep the patrons in suspense. So don't go into details concerning the plot. Tell that the author is one of the most famous in this country at writing detective stories. Use teasers far in advance with catch lines that mystify the reader. Then follow up with newspaper spreads. About three days before the opening tell that "The Flaming Clue" will appear at the ———— theatre. Treat it as a story of love, adventure, mystery and thrills. Catch lines and many of them is an excellent angle. Bill the picture as a typical Harry Morey offering.

CATCH LINES

He balked at nothing to round up a gang of counterfeiters. They had baffled the secret service for years. Did he capture them? See "The Flaming Clue."

See "The Flaming Clue" with Harry Morey. A picture of thrills, adventure and romance.

The twenty dollar bill had baffled the secret service for years. The plates were thought to be destroyed, but— See Harry Morey in a fascinating detective play, "The Flaming Clue."

Do you like detective stories? Do you like mystery and thrills? Then see "The Flaming Clue," Harry Morey is the star.

"THE DEADLIER SEX"
(Hampton-Pathe)

Illogical Story Lacking in Many Points

JUST an average program feature which should get by in most any house and attract. The scenes are laid in the big city and the north woods with preference given to the latter.

Bayard Vieller, who is the author, has given us a fair though illogical story. He has not much to tell and becoming short in ideas has resorted to the old fault, padding, thus lengthening a three-reel story in six. And his characters are not of the strong, virile type but are rather of the weaker kind in that they resort to cunning and treachery to obtain their ends. Of course there is always a fascination in scenes which picture the great outdoors and many authors knowing this seem to have built their stories around them, thus neglecting or being unable to develop the characters suitable to the situations. This appears to be the defect in this narrative. Then again there is no strong love interest and with the exception of two fist fights between hero and villain, there are no thrills.

Blanche Sweet is a pretty star, but she is far from convincing in the roll she plays, as it offers no adequate opportunities to her.

She wanted to teach him a lesson and at the same time protect her stockholders' interest. So she had him kidnapped and brought to the north woods where she taught him that the female of the species is more deadly than the male. After she had tamed him she promised to become his wife in order that they might fight life's battles together.—Length, 5 reels.—Frank Leonard.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"The Deadlier Sex," a Pathe production starring Blanche Sweet, will appear at this theatre on ——— of next ———. In this feature Miss Sweet plays the role of a young society girl who at her father's death takes charge of his huge interests and succeeds in bringing to bay a dangerous rival whose only thought is the almighty dollar. And she puts the finishing touches to her hard-earned victory by marrying him. This picture should interest any audience for it is up-to-date in story, acting and direction. Bayard Vieller, who is well known for his successful plays and scenarios, is the author.

Mary Willard has become so exasperated at Harvey Judson for his unscrupulous ways in doing business that she decides to have him kidnapped so that she can teach him a lesson and at the same time protect her stockholders from him. When the young man wakes up in the North Woods he believes at first that the motive is robbery but discovers his mistake when he finds his money has not been taken. He tries in many ways to bribe the guide to take him to the nearest settlement but without avail. He thinks up a scheme, however, which leads to his discovery by his friends but not until after he has had two fistic encounters with a Frenchman who is in love with the heroine. When Judson is told that Mary is the cause of his being detained in an unknown region he accuses her of trying to ruin him, the result of which brings on a quarrel which ends rather disastrously in an automobile wreck, while both were trying to reach the nearest railroad station. At the station they are both informed by a new arrival that their property is in possession of the government. This brings them to their senses and they decide that in future they will do their battling together.

PROGRAM READER

Manager ——— announces that the Pathe production, "The Deadlier Sex," starring Blanche Sweet, will appear at this theatre on——— of next———.

The story was written by Bayard Vieller, author of "Within the Law" and "The Thirteenth Chair," and shows the way a young woman with brains succeeded in obtaining her end from a stock juggler who with a time table and a gallon of water could produce an attractive stock certificate.

Blanche Sweet makes a very attractive heroine and is at home in a role of this kind which calls for subdued emotion as well as strong dramatic intensity. The locale of the story is laid in the big city and the North Woods, where some wonderful scenes of the great outdoors are shown in conjunction with the narrative.

She wanted to teach him a lesson and at the same time protect her stockholders' interests. So she had him kidnapped and brought into the north woods where she taught him that the female of the species is more deadly than the male. After she had tamed him she promised to become his wife in order that they might fight life's battles together.

The cast, which is a strong one, is composed of such well known players as Winter Hall, Roy Laidlaw, Russell Simpson, Mahlon Hamilton and Boris Karloff.

SUGGESTIONS

This feature has many good exploitation angles which should be played up to good advantage. First, the story was written by Bayard Vieller, who has become one of our foremost writers for the screen and who is a very successful playwright, being the author of "Within the Law," "The Thirteenth Chair" and many other popular plays. It would not be a bad idea to feature him in your advertising in conjunction with the story which, although not very strong, has enough interest to carry it through.

Then again there are many opportunities to feature the important points in the story, such as the fights between hero and villain in the north woods. And again the fact that a young woman is able to run her father's gigantic business and at the same time acomplish her aim in defeating a man who is an expert in juggling stocks and does not scruple at anything in order to accomplish his aims.

Blanche Sweet is a very pretty star and does all she can with the part handed to her. But she has not been given an opportunity to display her talents in the present role. You might say, however, that her beauty has never been shown to better advantage and that she plays her part in an up-to-date manner.

It would also be a good idea to mention the members of the cast, among whom are such well known players as Winter Hall, Roy Laidlaw, Mahlon Hamilton, Russell Simpson and Boris Karloff.

"THE DREAM CHEATER"
(Brunton-Hodkinson)

Balzac Story, Starring Kerrigan, Makes Clean, Entertaining Picture

GOOD sets and a good cast support J. Warren Kerrigan in this interesting picture adapted from "The Wild Ass' Skin," a story by the French master, Honore de Balzac. The story, written many years ago, is cleverly modernized and Americanized. Apparently labor conditions in France during the past century were somewhat parallel to those that exist in the United States to-day.

The star, as usual, is shown in many close-ups to display his heart-breaking self to better advantage. However, although the story makes a light drama, there is room in spots for more emotional acting than Kerrigan displays. The theme is a variation of the old "wishing lamp" plot, only this time it is a piece of ass' skin that is to shrink with every wish until finally it will disappear, and the life of the wisher will end.

The star comes into possession of the skin, and like Midas with his touch of gold, finds it torturing him to death. Everything must be supplied, for if he wishes for even a match to light his cigarette, the parchment will shrink and death come closer. Finally he conceives a bright idea. He wishes the thing out of his life, and out it goes together with all his troubles. A pretty romance runs through it all, and various "types" are presented which are very well done.

Fritzi Brunette pleases the eye as Pauline Mahon, and in fact little fault can be found with any of the cast. This camouflaged fairy tale proves to be unusually entertaining, especially as we see the hero's wishes being fulfilled in a perfectly logical and natural manner.—Length, 5 reels.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"The Dream Cheater," an entertaining photoplay featuring the popular star, J. Warren Kerrigan, will play at the ——— theatre on ———. The picture is adapted from a story by the famous French master, Balzac. The star is cast as Brandon McShane, a young writer left almost destitute by the death of his father. He bids his friends adieu and takes a room in the home of Pauline Mahon and her mother in the tenement district. Here he falls under the influence of certain radical friends and joins their set, bewitched by a charming young widow.

But eventually she casts him aside and another of her former admirers, an Oriental, presents the jilted lover with a magic skin, by means of which the possessor's wishes may be obtained. But there is a penalty. With each wish the skin shrinks, shortening the life of its owner. The skin brings him millions, but he is unhappy, for he dare not wish for anything. Finally he wishes the parchment out of his life, and it disappears, and with it his troubles and fears. He is free to go back to his sweetheart, Pauline, into whose life he has wished riches and brought happiness.

J. Warren Kerrigan has a delightful role in this interesting story which will bring him many more admirers.

PROGRAM READER

Would you like a picture that combines a whimsical fairy-story idea with the masterly character painting and plot development of Balzac? Add to this the popular star, J. Warren Kerrigan, and you will have some idea of what "The Dream Cheater," coming to this theatre on ——— will be like.

The Balzac plot has been Americanized and modernized, and makes one of the most interesting comedy-dramas of the year. The supernatural element in the picture does not destroy its interest. The star possesses an Oriental rug that grants its owner every wish, but the wishes come true in a perfectly natural manner in the logical sequence of events. You will never regret seeing this handsome star in a picture that shows him the possessor of millions and a poverty stricken young writer.

SUGGESTIONS

If you have a number of Kerrigan admirers in your district, play him up big, for he really does well in this picture and he has a role that will suit his followers to perfection. Show his photo in announcing the feature, and display it in a prominent part of the lobby during the run.

The story is taken from "The Wild Ass' Skin," by Balzac. Remember that Balzac enjoys a remarkable reputation as a writer. But also remember that he wrote some books that are not in Sunday school libraries. So when using the author's name you might mention the fact that the picture is perfectly clean. This you can safely do, for there is not one scene in the whole film that could possibly be objected to. Use the "wishing skin" idea in your catch lines and appeal to that childish element in all that delights in fairy tales. A contest in the local paper, such as "What Would You Wish for With the Magic Skin," might be arranged.

CATCH LINES

Like Midas, he had a magic gift, and like Midas, it meant his death. How he saved himself and returned to the girl he loved is shown in "The Dream Cheater," with J. Warren Kerrigan.

The handsome idol of the screen in a whimsical little drama by the French master, Honore de Balzac.

Balzac made the story live a hundred years ago. Kerrigan re-creates it on the screen to-day.

"A MANHATTAN KNIGHT"
(Fox)

Crook Melodrama Makes Lively Picture

PLACE a band of crooks in an underground den, gather together certain members of select society, add the valuable jewels, introduce a courageous hero, provide the long arm of the law with a number of policemen, mix well and you have a favorite recipe of crook melodramas. "A Manhattan Knight" may carry all these ingredients, but it is so highly colored with strenuous action and travels at such a rapid tempo that one hasn't time to reflect about its obvious design. Director George Beranger has made this picture a success through keeping in mind that the incidents must carry punch and suspense. George Walsh, the star, doesn't dominate the story here so well distributed are the several roles. In fact he fails to appear until the second reel.

"A Manhattan Knight" is as "in-trikit" as most crook melodramas, but the spectator can always see light. So much for a well arranged continuity. The jewels provide the tangle of the plot and to gain possession of them a suicide is indicated, a murder is more than indicated, and several "knock 'em down and drag 'em out" scenes are introduced. Although the plot is penetrable there is considerable mystery attached to the separate groups of characters and in the end hokum is applied to make the hero eligible for romantic expression.

Mr. Walsh has his work cut out for him here and he executes it with all his familiar fireworks. He sails into the gangsters single-handed and comes up smiling. The romance doesn't have much of a chance to establish itself. But that is of no consequence. What is important is the fact that the picture presents a lively melodrama—one that is compact with action. Assisting the star in giving color to his best work to date are Virginia Hammond and Louis Wolheim.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"A Manhattan Knight," founded upon the successful novel by Gelett Burgess, will be offered at the ———— theatre on ———— of ———— week with the athletic star, George Walsh, in the title role. There is in the picture every incident essential to the making of a good photoplay, and a capable cast, excellent direction, wonderful photography are features which will be noticeable to the spectator. It has the singular distinction of being practically without lapse of time, the entire action transpiring in the space of a few hours in the evening. The offering is with one exception the most serious one in which the star has ever appeared. While it presents him at the peak of his athletic prowess, still it provides him with opportunities to express histrionic talent.

Mr. Walsh as the hero is at all times convincing in the part of John Fenton, who is advised by a crystal gazer to "find the woman." He is told that she is in his life attracting him to her. When the police arrive to search the apartment for a thief, Fenton escapes by entering the window of the girl's home. He is instrumental in saving her from persecution and the action revolves around his attempt to protect her and certain valuable jewels which her brother has stolen. A notorious gang of crooks are constantly on their trail and Fenton has his work cut out for him in capturing them. It is a night of rich adventure for him, but he is successful in the end and the clues straightened out reveal his identity to him. The picture develops with fast-moving action and is punctuated with considerable thrills. Mr. Walsh is supported by a capable cast.

One of the most exciting mystery pictures seen here this year will be presented at the ———— next ———— and ———— under the title of "A Manhattan Knight." This is by Gelett Burgess, the popular author, and is an adaptation of his successful story, "Find the Woman." When you see this picture you will look upon George Walsh in the role of a resourceful New Yorker who stops at nothing to protect the woman of his life. It is rich in adventure and thrills and the action is crowded with exciting situations. How the star carries his audience breathlessly through the swiftly moving scenes, how the varying phases of New York life are depicted is told in five reels of gripping melodrama. Mr. Walsh gives a good account of himself in the title role and his support includes Virginia Hammond, Louis Wolheim, Pauline Garon and others. George Beranger is the director.

PROGRAM READER

Exploit this picture as an adaptation of Gelett Burgess' popular novel, "Find the Woman." Bring out that it is a mystifying melodrama which has to do with crime in New York. Tell that it is chock full of adventure and thrills and romance. Treat it as the best picture in which George Walsh ever appeared. This star has quite a following, so it would be advisable to emphasize his name in big type. What of the title? Surely it has its advertising value. So play it up in a teaser campaign and through catch lines. Tell that it surpasses all the pictures of the season in its power to grip and intrigue the imagination. Use stills of the feature and tell that it offers a revelation of crime in the metropolis. You can create atmosphere for your lobby by dressing it in harmony with the action. Have your artist paint a figure of a man in armor. Decorate your lobby in shields and armor. Mention the other members of the cast, also the director.

Charles Ray Scores Again as Bashful Youth

IF there is one actor capable of appearing indefinitely in a part which has made him famous that actor is Charles Ray. Some picturegoers may bemoan the fact that the star is never identified with any other character but the bashful youth, but if they stop to consider what a skilful artist he is they will realize that he always varies his interpretation. Although the role may continue the same in its general outline, Mr. Ray always adds a few new strokes and touches so that it appears different. He is so human and sincere that he could lift the most commonplace material and make it a joy to behold.

But "Alarm Clock Andy" doesn't happen to be an ordinary story. Agnes Johnston has injected enough human elements to make it consistent, convincing and appealing and her characters are so deftly interwoven with the plot that prominence is not given to any one factor. The star has attended to the rest. Jerome Storm, the director, has realized upon the possibilities, bringing out its incidents, giving emphasis here and there to some particular episode, and above all keeping in mind that the human note must predominate.

The spectator will sympathize with the shy, bashful youth who depreciates himself. He will appreciate that there are sensitive souls who hide their virtues under a bushel, while those less competent get ahead by selling their personality. Mr. Ray's hero arises to the top because he uses one of these "live wires" as a model, but it takes considerable fighting with himself to accomplish the transformation. He has moments when he reverts to his hesitant, bashful manner. These are the incidents which establish the humorous points. In giving emphasis to the transformation there must be a good contrast in the opposite type, which introduces George Webb in the role of the peppery fellow—a role capitally played. Length, 5 reels. Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE STORY

Charles Ray, without doubt one of the greatest favorites of the motion picture public, will be seen at the ———— theatre during the week of ———— in his latest picture, "Alarm Clock Andy." The scenario was written by Agnes Johnston, one of the most talented authors in the screen world, and the offering was produced under the direction of Jerome Storm, the same director who presided over some of his best Ince-Paramount pictures. The star has another of his ideal subjects here and he is presented as a bashful town youth who branches out as a salesman of motor trucks. His determined efforts to get ahead in business despite his shyness and other shortcomings are sure to win sympathy for him.

The romance is revealed when he journeys to his employer's home and discovers a charming girl. The love affair between Andy and Dorothy is carried on in that inimitable Ray method of love making. The final scenes in which the star vanquishes his rival and puts over the big business deal will enthuse the spectators and send them home smiling. "Alarm Clock Andy" is the type of story which has made Charles Ray famous. It is intensely human and appealing and uncommonly realistic. Mr. Ray proves again his technique and artistry in the part of the country youth. He is supreme in the delineation of such a character. In his support are such competent players as Tom Guise, George Webb, Millicent Fisher and Tom Robson. Jerome Storm's direction is praiseworthy in every respect.

PROGRAM READER

Charles Ray, without a doubt one of the most popular stars of the screen, will come to the ———— theatre next ———— in what in considered his greatest picture, "Alarm Clock Andy." This offers him a variation of his country boy role in that his bashfulness finds expression in a city office. He plays the part of Andrew Gray, a clerk, who is so overwhelmed with sensitiveness and fear that these traits keep him a drudge when less talented people forge ahead through sheer bluff. How he uses the biggest bluffer of all as his model in becoming aggressive takes up the better part of the action—action which is punctuated with humor and pathos and considerable realism. Through the picture runs a fascinating romance. Mr. Ray is supreme in the delineation of the bashful, awkward youth and those who are not his followers will make him their favorite when they see him in "Alarm Clock Andy."

SUGGESTIONS

A Charles Ray picture is its own best advertising. The bare announcement that this favorite star is booked for your theatre means invariably a big line at the box-office. So you don't have to spread yourself in exploitation. Word of mouth advertising will suffice. You can state, however, that he has a variation of his country boy story and that he again comes forward as an extremely bashful and timid youth. Here is an opportunity, though, to link up with your jewelry stores and have them place a sale of alarm clocks. Signs reading that "Charles Ray wakes up in the morning to the ring of a clock like this" will attract attention. You can run stories about Charles Ray and the type of role he has made famous. If you want to go in for extensive advertising you can use a teaser campaign. Feature the picture as a comedy-drama of youth and romance. Tell that it is a quaint character study.

CATCH LINES

He was so timid that if anyone stepped on his foot he would apologize for having it in the way. Did he become aggressive? See Charles Ray in "Alarm Clock Andy."

He was an office drudge and men less competent than he rose to the top because they sold their personality. Did Andy learn to bluff? See the popular Charles Ray in his latest comedy-drama, "Alarm Clock Andy."

"SINNERS"
(Realart)

Director Missed Chance to Make Big Picture

HERE is a picture which had enough sound elements to make a small edition of "The Miracle Man," but the director failed to grasp his opportunity. While he has turned out a fairly interesting subject, still the chance was his to give the screen something worth while had he realized the value of the theme and moral. "Sinners" is a "redemption" picture with the old, old story of the country girl who migrates to the city and encounters some of its vice before she returns to her native heath, with the knowledge that sin doesn't pay. She is saved from the primrose path through an urgent appeal from her dying mother.

Having not seen the original play we cannot say how faithfully it is adapted, but if it failed to bring about the redemption of the sinners with whom she came in contact, that is no reason why the director couldn't have improved upon it and conceived it upon a "Miracle Man" foundation. He has missed a fine opportunity and the construction he has placed upon it is full of loopholes. The gay crowd from the city are lugged to the country and forced to go through ludicrous details. The hero is drawn as a colorless individual who is not redeemed because he is good at heart. Why he should submit to the insults offered the girl by the village hypocrite, who professes to love her, is inexplicable. This cad is outrageously overdrawn and his counterpart never existed in real life.

Why not have painted the hero as the worst sinner of all and brought about his transformation? Why not have made the girl a genuine sinner? It is logical that she became one. Must we gloss over truth? If picturegoers were given it occasionally they might grow to like it. And so the really fine moral that is woven in this story is lost. Half-hearted sinners cannot win sympathy. The picture is charming in its atmosphere and backgrounds and the acting of Miss Brady and her players is entirley capable.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

One of the most entertaining photoplays in which Alice Brady, the Realart star, has yet been seen, will be shown at the ———— theatre beginning ————. It is titled "Sinners" and is based upon the stage play of the same name, written by Owen Davis, in which Miss Brady achieved one of her greatest dramatic successes. The picture presents a strongly emotional story—one that is rich in interesting contrasts. The gay life of the city is set off against the dignity and wholesomeness of country life and there are some decidedly tense situations developed. Miss Brady plays the part of a young woman who goes to the city to seek work. Failing to find it she is befriended by a woman of questionable reputation.

The friends of this woman are the sinners of the play and the girl's association with them, when news of it reaches home, leads to false accusations and some powerfully dramatic situations. One of the most interesting incidents of the action develops through a trip the sinners make to the home of the girl, after she has returned there. The story carries a good moral and such elements as heart appeal and pathos. Miss Brady contributes a convincing performance in the leading role and plays with considerable charm and naturalness. Her cast includes James L. Crane, Agnes Everett, Lorraine Frost, William P. Carleton, Frank Losee, Craufurd Kent, and Robert Schable. Kenneth Webb directed the feature from a scenario by Eve Unsell.

PROGRAM READER

Patrons of the ———— theatre have long since accepted Alice Brady as one of their prime favorites. The management takes great pleasure in announcing, therefore, that included in the coming attractions scheduled for exhibition at the ———— theatre, is "Sinners," Miss Brady's latest picture. Adapted from Owen Davis' play of the same name in which the star appeared successfully for several months, the subject offers an hour of interesting entertainment. Miss Brady appears as a country girl who goes to the city and is befriended by a woman of questionable reputation. The circumstance of living with this woman and associating with her friends leads to situations which are highly dramatic and gripping. In the star's company are such capable players as James L. Crane, Frank Losee, Craufurd Kent and Robert Schable. Watch for further announcements.

SUGGESTIONS

In announcing "Sinners" all that you should really need is a line to the effect that Alice Brady is the star. Her pleasing personality, the dramatic character of the stories, the support, the settings, all these meritorious qualities have long since become known to the public if you have played the previous Alice Brady offerings. In other words the star's name has come to mean a certain type of entertainment. In "Sinners," Realart has provided you with a title that will make them sit up and take notice. Be sure to bring out that it is a screen version of the play of the same name by Owen Davis, one of the cleverest playwrights, and that the star of the picture was also the star of the play. Your descriptive matter should take up the theme to some extent without going into great detail. Mention the supporting cast. Feature the picture as a gripping drama of saints and sinners and that it carries rich qualities of sentiment and heart appeal.

Mystery Tale Has Interesting Elements Which Should Excite

A GOOD program feature with enough thrills, love interest and suspense to carry it through and excite the attention. The star is his usual self and gives a splendid performance of the young officer who, returning home from the front, finds that the pursuits of a peaceful life have no charm for him, his inclinations laying in the direction of excitement and the joys obtained from it. Opportunity comes to him in the form of a job to his liking, a detective who is employed to unravel a deep mystery. He solves the problem, which is that of finding out the smugglers who are bringing diamonds into the country. But this is accomplished only after he has had many narrow escapes and thrilling encounters. And his reward is the hand of the girl whose father he had served.

The story is not new to the screen, as the theme has been used many times heretofore and appears to be overdrawn in many places. Still it is one of those mystery tales which if told well and the parts given into the hands of capable actors will always make a good impression.

And we must say that the cast, which includes such well-known players as Naomi Childers, Christine Mayo, Edwin Stevens and Lionel Belmore, is an excellent one.

Proper direction also lends its charm to the picture, which for detail in the arrangement of interiors, whether elaborate or mediocre, could not be excelled. Care has also been given to the exteriors, which give the proper atmosphere to the story at all times. The lightings are up to standard.

All told this picture should play most any house and interest. Length, 5 reels.—Frank Leonard.

Story by Henry C. Rowland. Directed by Thomas R. Mills. Photographed by Otto Brautigam.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Tom Moore will appear at the ———— theatre in ———— of next ———— in his latest Goldwyn feature, "Duds." This is a mystery story containing all the elements to make it one of the best produced pictures to date. It has thrills, love interest and enough suspense to carry it through and excite the attention of any audience.

Tom Moore in the title role is his usual self and gives a splendid performance of the young officer who, returning home from the front, finds that the pursuits of a peaceful life have no charms for him. As Captain Plunkett he accepts a dangerous job to find the whereabouts of the great "Sultana" diamond, which has been robbed from a French woman in the war swept area. After many difficult and dangerous adventures he succeeds in locating the precious gem which is hung from a chain on his sweetheart's neck, encased in a locket which he had given to her, never dreaming that the diamond was inside. The villains have entrapped the heroine, drugged her and are about to rob her of the gem when our hero enters and in a thrilling manner saves his precious gift.

Tom Moore never had a better vehicle in which to exploit his abilities and he has taken advantage of every point, never missing fire once, in this thriller of thrilling stories.

PROGRAM READER

Tom Moore, Goldwyn's popular star, will play this theatre on ———— of next ———— in his latest feature, "Duds." It is a mystery story containing enough thrills, love interest and suspense to carry it through and excite the attention of any audience.

It is also admitted that this is the best Tom Moore production to date, for the role he plays fits him better than any he has had in some time and gives him leeway to display his various talents, which become cramped if not given liberty to broaden out.

As Captain Plunkett, a young officer who has returned from the war and who is dissatisfied with the conventionalities of modern life, he is at his best. He does not care for the peaceful pursuits but turns more to the adventurous.

Opportunity comes to him in the form of a job to his liking, a detective, who is employed to unravel a deep mystery. He solves the problem, which is that of finding out the smugglers who are bringing diamonds into the country. But this is accomplished only after he has had many narrow escapes and thrilling encounters, in which he rescues the heroine from the clutches of the villains and also saves the "Sultana" diamond which the thieves are trying to obtain possession of. His reward is the hand of the girl whose father he had served.

SUGGESTIONS

If you book this feature lay stress on the fact that it is a mystery story with plenty of thrills, love interest and suspense. Although this story is nothing new in screen production and contains only the ordinary ingredients which go to make up a story of this kind, still the interest is there and you can go as far as you like in exploiting it without being afraid of disappointing your patrons.

Also play up Tom Moore, for he gives a good performance of the young officer who is desirous of escaping the pursuits of a peaceful life. Tell your patrons that this is a new story written from a different angle and shows the star to good advantage, as it gives him room to broaden out and use all his talents.

"UNEASY FEET"

is the 1400-foot comedy part of our first "COMEDYART" production released March 28th. For 1300 feet of rollicking, situation and classy slapstick comedy, there is not a sub-title nor a face on the screen. NOTHING BUT FEET. It is as "different" from the usual comedy as day is from night, and it's a knockout that will make your house the talk of the town.

GOD'S COUNTRY

is the 400-foot Artcolor with this release. It is stunning. It makes men think deep; it raises them out of themselves, it leaves them happy. When God fashioned the earth, His most awe-inspiring work became the "Rockies"—the backbone of the Americas. That's where this comes from. And because our Color process, latest child of Science, is fully protected by patents, you can bet that this is "different."

MEMORIES

THE OPEN DOOR TO LARGER PROFITS

A thousand possibilities will not make one truth, but one truth can make a thousand sales possible.

Five years ago, when Inter-Ocean Film Corporation first came into being, it occupied an insignificant suite of offices; today, the expansion of its export business has necessitated the exclusive use of a five-story building. Success has crowned its efforts all along the way.

The reason for Inter-Ocean Film Corporation's unparalleled success as an export house can be traced in its honest and conscientious dealings in behalf of the American Producer and the Foreign Film Buyer. Punctual and reliable in its transactions, upright to its clients on the suitableness of American Productions in specified territories, it has merited the confidence and esteem as the export house of satisfaction and service of the motion picture industry.

Besides its thorough and practical knowledge of the American market as related to foreign territories, Inter-Ocean Film Corporation possesses unusual facilities for export distribution, which are at the disposal of all producers who seek intelligent and profitable foreign representation.

Inter-Ocean Film Building is truly the open door to larger profits.

Clutch the knob, and walk in.

A Statement of Purpose & Policy by Associated Exhibitors Inc.

THE GENERAL PURPOSE

OVER a year ago a group of exhibitors, forward-looking men, realizing the well-nigh universal dissatisfaction with conditions in The Motion Picture industry, organized "Associated Exhibitors Inc.," an association for protection and profit, based on mutual confidence and simple justice for all.

A Partnership for Production and Profit

"CO-OPERATION" may be defined as the working together of two or more people for their mutual benefit. The ideal of Associated Exhibitors then is simply a closer co-operation between those concerned in both the production and exhibition of motion pictures.

Primarily its object is to accomplish a more equitable distribution of profits—by eliminating the superfluous middlemen whose actual contribution to production and exhibition is nothing.

BY dealing directly with producers, stars, directors and authors, making everyone a partner in production and marketing, the Association hopes to knit the industry into a more harmonious whole.

By offering to those concerned in production a just share of the actual income from a picture it hopes to stimulate the creation of better pictures.

An Ideal of Fairness

By establishing a basis of confidence and fair dealing, the Association expects to establish a new relationship between the forces of production and those of exhibition.

Its ideal is to keep faith with producers, stars, authors, exhibitors and audiences—by giving more.

PATHÉ DISTRIBUTORS

WHAT IT MEANS TO EXHIBITORS

THIS organization was conceived and is directed by exhibitors—it knows and is in sympathy with the exhibitor's problems and requirements. To him it offers a unique opportunity to secure the best pictures and the guidance of the most successful exhibitors.

An Association of Leaders

THE membership of the Association includes men who control over 200 of the largest and best theatres in the country—the counsel of these men will guide its policy.

Thus the Association's ideals are tempered with solid, practical knowledge; guided by tried business principles; founded on experience—the only basis for enduring success.

A Tremendous Influence

THAT its ideals will be attained is assured by the prominence of its members, the financial resources and influence wielded by such an association of interests—an influence that will increase with the growth of the Association.

Membership in the Association is open to all exhibitors, who are invited to share a full measure of the benefits and profits of the Association by securing sub-franchises.

The value of these sub-franchises is such that the number immediately available will be taken up in a short time. It is, therefore, advisable that exhibitors who are interested should act without delay.

Detailed information may be obtained by communicating with the home office of the corporation in the Capitol Theatre Building, New York.

PATHÉ DISTRIBUTORS

WHAT IT MEANS TO STARS

IN the final analysis it is the star's popularity with the public that brings money into the box-office—the star's name which actually creates profits. But between the box-office and the star today stretches a long line of middlemen, each taking his toll.

DISSATISFACTION with this condition is evident from attempts which have been made by combinations of stars to deal directly with exhibitors.

The Practical Solution

HERE then is the opportunity which the star has wanted—a practical means of dealing directly with the leading exhibitors—an assurance of showing in the finest theatres, to audiences accustomed to the best entertainment—such showings as will supplement the art and enhance the reputation of the star—exploitation which will hold and increase the star's own standing.

The Most Advantageous Showing

THE object of the Associated Exhibitors is better productions as a whole, therefore, the star will be given every advantage in the way of adequate support and artistic staging throughout.

In addition, the star will participate in the actual profits of every release—will receive a just proportion of the value created by his or her ability and popularity.

The resources, standing and influence of this organization are so great that association with it will be attractive to stars of the first magnitude.

Artists are invited to communicate with the home office in the Capitol Theatre Building, New York, for more detailed information.

PATHÉ DISTRIBUTORS

PRODUCERS

IT is obvious that conditions obtaining at present in the motion picture industry afford only a limited incentive for producers to improve the quality of pictures, for the producer's reward is rarely based upon the true worth of his accomplishment.

The Evils of Guessing

SINCE it is impossible to predict in advance the degree of success or box-office value a picture will achieve, producers too often receive less than their just due—it is easy to see who gets the advantage in this guessing contest.

The foundation for better pictures rests with the producer—no one but he can improve the quality of his own product and he must be encouraged to do so by the certainty that his efforts will be adequately rewarded.

The Only Fair Basis

THE most equitable arrangement possible is that now offered to producers by the Associated Exhibitors—that is, an actual partnership in the profits. Unquestionably this is a more liberal and fair basis of dealing than has ever before been open to the producer—an assurance of reward commensurate with the true excellence and popularity of his picture.

A still further advantage to the producer results from the fact that his creations are assured of a showing in the finest theatres of the country, before discriminating audiences and under the very best conditions.

Producers who are interested in the benefits of this new Association are invited to communicate with the home office in the Capitol Theatre Building, New York.

PATHÉ DISTRIBUTORS

WHAT IT MEANS TO DIRECTORS

THOUGH there are undoubtedly many directors in the country who have the ability and the knowledge to produce pictures of genuine merit the number who are actually doing so is small enough to be counted on the fingers of one hand.

The Director's Handicaps

ALL too often is this due to the restrictions under which the director is forced to work—restrictions imposed by various forces to whom the director is now subservient.

These restrictions have grown with the growth of the industry and the tendency toward centralization of control in a few hands.

The truth of this is but emphasized by the outstanding success of a tiny handful of directors who have managed to divorce themselves from these handicaps.

A Free Hand for Directors

RECOGNIZING the fact that freedom of action is the first essential to the creation of better pictures, the Associated Exhibitors offer to directors of ability the opportunity of working under conditions which will afford full scope to their creative powers.

In addition to this freedom of creative opportunity directors are offered, for the first time, the opportunity to participate in the profits of their creations on the just basis of a share of the actual box-office receipts.

Directors who are interested in the opportunity to create better pictures as well as in their profits, are invited to communicate with the home office, Capitol Theatre Building, New York.

PATHÉ DISTRIBUTORS

WHAT IT MEANS TO AUTHORS

THE foundation of the photoplay is the story—without it stars, producers, directors, are powerless. Without good stories it is obviously impossible to produce pictures of true dramatic value and artistic merit. On the author rests the structure of the motion picture industry.

Stories Have Been Undervalued

THE importance of the story has been consistently underestimated and seldom have authors concerned in the writing of successful photoplays received a reward truly commensurate with their contribution to that success. The returns have not been comparable with those from a successful play or book.

Many excellent stories have been garbled or inadequately staged in pictures, and this has deterred authors of standing from permitting their works to be screened.

For this reason the standard of stories available for motion picture production has been lowered immeasurably.

An Adequate Reward for The Author

ASSOCIATED Exhibitors by dealing directly with authors, eliminating the waste and the restrictions incident to present methods, feel that the greater rewards thus made possible will result in a standard of stories worthy of adequate production.

To this end their arrangements with authors will be such as to assure to the writer his just share of the returns, and a guarantee of worthy production and casting. This reward will be based upon a profit-sharing basis—a percentage of the actual box-office value.

Associated Exhibitors Inc., invite correspondence from authors of merit. Correspondence should be directed to the home office, Capitol Theatre Building, New York.

Speaking of

D. W. GRIFFITH'S

MASTER WORK OF GRIFFITH

"Again the magic, which in this case is another term for the imaginative insight of David Wark Griffith, manifest in the new film at the Strand Theatre. 'The Idol Dancer' is a work that takes its place in the growing list of master works by this arch wizzard. Here is a story of the South Seas told with all the tropical wealth which the story demands. The watcher, lost in enchantment, rides the surf of the Pacific, wanders in the tangled jungles, watches with many thrills the head-hunters and the cannibals. Mr. Griffith's genius is not only apparent in the excellent picture but in the alluring quality of the presentation."—New York Telegram.

THEATRE IS CROWDED

"Filled the Strand for the first showing of the cinema-conjurer's much heralded new picture. Interest is carried through the tale of Mary's half clad posturing and dancing."—New York Morning Telegraph.

FULL OF EXCITEMENT

"A pretentious photoplay. A background of scantily clad natives with an attack by cannibals led by a villainous white, which furnishes enough excitement for a dozen films, and a succession of beautiful scenes which are a delight to the eyes."—New York Evening Post.

DANCING SOUTH SEA BEAUTY

"The Idol Dancer is a dancing beauty of the South Seas. The conflict between the characters involved, staged by the artistic hand of Mr. Griffith, makes the picture very entertaining."—New York Evening Sun.

REMARKABLY ATTRACTIVE

"The atmosphere of the production indicates that Mr. Griffith both knew what he was doing and gave all his attention to doing it. Clarine Seymour makes Mary (the Idol Dancer) remarkably attractive."—New York Evening Mail.

Day in History of the Strand"

"The Idol Dancer"

GRIFFITH DOES IT AGAIN

"Mr. Griffith has gone and done it again! Twanging upon the harp of life with all his might, he has made a pictorial love story of the tropic seas. Clarine Seymour is a big hit in the Griffith film. She fits very well into the role of the maid who dances wild, strange dances to her devil-devil and who wears a sort of super Hawaiian costume."—New York News.

A REAL THRILLER

SHE IS SOME DANCER

"Exciting enough to make one want to go away and beat up a Bolshevik. Miss Clarine Seymour, who attracted notice in her Broadway 'movie' debut by her wriggle, is the logical candidate for the role of the hula hula dancer, and plays the part well, especially with her diaphragm."—The Sun and New York Herald.

PICTURE THAT'S DIFFERENT

"Mr. Griffith may be commended for another effort to keep out of the rut worn deep by others."—New York Times.

A VOLCANIC DANCER

"A great deal of beauty. Some of the scenes are like a flaming Winslow Homer canvas, and others are like a particularly wild night in the 'Cocoanut Grove' roof garden. But it is possible to enjoy Winslow Homer and the cocoanut cabaret with equal enthusiasm, and from the burst of applause which followed the picture you would gather that Mr. Griffith had not lost his discriminating audience in his appeal to the gallery gods.

"The exotic setting, the frenzied love story, and, most of all, the dance motif which runs through the entire film, were obviously woven around the personality of Clarine Seymour, the latest Griffith 'discovery.' She is a volcanic little creature, with provocative eyes and movements, and as the idol dancer she is the symbol of the smouldering, ominous tropical nights. Her dance shocked all the missionaries in the cast and perhaps some in the audience.

"Richard Barthelmess as the handsome, scawling young derelict made an instant appeal as he dared the audience to reform him. The remainder of the cast has the usual level of perfection under the Griffith direction."—New York Globe.

S for Sorrow and Suffering, that are the lot of all women.

E is Experience that refines the Soul of all women.

X is the great Unknown in the fascinating game of Life.

J. PARKER READ, Jr. becomes one of the greatest of all creative producers with the release of "SEX."

LOUISE GLAUM becomes what she has been growing to be for the past six months—the screen's greatest and most successful emotional star.

FRED NIBLO goes many steps forward and will be reckoned with henceforth as one of the greatest of directors.

C. GARDNER SULLIVAN has never before in his distinguished career written a story so big, so enthralling as "SEX."

FIVE SUPPORTING STARS do the biggest work of their careers in "SEX," reflecting the splendid liberality of Miss Glaum in desiring all of the players to have their share of success.

"SEX" is not merely powerful and technically fine—it is commercially sure-fire and artistically amazing. And in treatment it is as wholesome and genuine as a mother's embrace.

In "SEX" J. Parker Read, Jr. has produced, C. Gardner Sullivan has written and LOUISE GLAUM has acted the picture extraordinary. It is a picture for super-showmen. No exhibitor who is a poor showman ought to be permitted to book and play "Sex."

The story in "Sex" is the story of life with all of its mad, glad realistic garb; with irresistible "punches" here and there and a gloriously adequate cast to put these punches over.

Some of the trade press critics have been duly shocked—all have been startled by "Sex." The value of the trade press reviews of "Sex" to the exhibitors who book this production could not be duplicated or equalled by the spending of Fifty Thousand dollars.

IN booking the "THE VIRGIN OF STAMBOUL" be sure to give this really huge production at least twice your ordinary run. We do not want to over-sell you on any picture but the simple fact is that "THE VIRGIN OF STAMBOUL" is one of those gorgeous, glowing, mind-filling photo-dramas like "The Heart of Humanity" and "The Birth of a Nation" which instantly lay hold of the public imagination and grow bigger in box-office power with each day's showing. For this reason, you ought to net more from "THE VIRGIN OF STAMBOUL" than you have netted from anything else except, possibly, the other two productions mentioned. Do your big work in advertising this marvelously acted and masterfully directed super-drama right at the start—you'll hardly have to turn a hand after you've opened. BEST NAME

THE GREATEST NOVELTY REEL EVER PRODUCED

What the Reel Is

Within a few weeks, Universal will release a 1000-foot novelty reel. This release will consist of a number of startlingly odd and original subjects. The entire world is being combed for material which will present an irresistible appeal to photoplay patrons possessing even the most jaded of appetites. It will be a combination of humor, travel and adventure. It will contain examples of marvelous trick photography, the like of which the industry has heretofore never seen.

The Name We Want

We want a New NAME that will present an irresistible appeal to photoplay patrons of every degree, from the type of audiences which attend the palatial picture palaces, to those whose sole amusement resort is the 200-seat house. The name should be short and distinctive. Under no circumstances will a name in which the word "magazine" appears be considered.

Terms of the Contest

This contest is for the single prize of $250. It is open to Exhibitors only. There are no other prizes. It costs nothing to enter it. There is no limit on the number of names you may suggest. IF MORE THAN ONE EXHIBITOR SUGGESTS THE NAME SELECTED BY THE JUDGES, AN AMOUNT EQUAL TO THAT OF THE PRIZE WILL BE AWARDED TO EACH OF THE WINNERS.

Contest Period

The contest for this $250 prize for the best name to be given Universal's wonder-reel, opens with the publication of this advertisement in the current issue of this trade paper. IT CLOSES FRIDAY, APRIL 30th. All suggestions must be in the hands of Universal by midnight of that date.

Write your suggestions on one side of the paper only, and be sure to give the name and address of your theatre. Write clearly and legibly. Lists of names not containing the name and address of your theatre will not be considered.

THE JUDGES

In selecting the Judges for this contest, Universal has obtained the services of three men who are known wherever motion pictures are shown. Their decision will be announced as soon as possible after the closing of the contest. They are:

The capacity of the PALISADE LABORATORIES is 1,500,000 feet per week. The dead line, however, is 1,000,000 feet, and we will not, under any circumstances, print more than this amount. We are thus enabled to give extraordinary attention to everything we turn out.

At the present time we are open for approximately 300,000 feet per week. Our past performances have caused us to be known as and we maintain a uniform standard of quality.

We do not use any so-called "developing machines," nor do we turn out our product with a sausage grinder, therefore our slogan is

"Not How CHEAP" But "How GOOD!"

We are ready to do business with any concern that appreciates the highest quality on the screen and is willing to pay a fair price for such service.

We believe the crew of the PALISADE LABORATORIES is the most efficient and highest salaried in the United States. Each person has been selected for special excellence in his particular branch of work and is a well known expert in his line.

Our confidence in our forces is such that we are willing to Challenge Any Laboratory on Earth—or Elsewhere

to match their skill against our own in turning out a print of a five-reel picture, the loser to donate $500.00 to any charity agreed upon.

A Short Talk and a True One

We have seen so much in motion picture advertising, and in fact in all advertising, about the "biggest," the "greatest" and the "finest," until the words have all but lost their power to describe.

We make this statement as a foreword to explain our embarrassment in an effort to really tell the entertainment quality of Mr. Fox's newest picture in which Tom Mix is the star. Its title is DESERT LOVE but the title doesn't even begin to suggest the importance and the value of the offering.

In our opinion DESERT LOVE is far and away the supreme production of all of the Tom Mix successes.

FOX ENTERTAINMENTS

About Mr. Fox's Star Mr. Mix

Against a background of a fine story the action of the play proceeds with certainty and swiftness and there follow a series of amazing climaxes so tense, so startling, so appealing as to carry you out of yourself and into the very action of the picture.

To detail the story might mar the treat that is in store for you because in DESERT LOVE that daredevil of a Tom Mix gives you surprises that are absolutely amazing, even for a Mix picture.

Don't take anybody's word for this production--see it yourself. We know the result.

FOX ENTERTAINMENTS

Concerning an Emotional Actress

When William Fox selected Madelaine Traverse from among many artists he had in mind her remarkable ability to portray emotional roles with power and fascinating charm. His judgment has been more than proved in plays that have gone before.

In her newest vehicle, "THE TATTLERS," Miss Traverse reaches the zenith of her extraordinary genius as an actress.

We desire in this modest manner to register this important point with exhibitors everywhere that they may know the value of this really great attraction.

FOX ENTERTAINMENTS

In a Play that's Totally Different

The story of "THE TATTLERS" is so vivid, so real, so absorbing, that it will rank with the great successes of the screen.

The far-sighted showman will play it and advertise it as he would a great special because it has class atmosphere, size and beauty as a background for its remarkable dramatic action.

We are moved to congratulate exhibitors in advance upon a motion picture that will bring rich rewards in money and additional prestige to every theatre that shows it.

Gentlemen:

Permit me to congratulate you upon the announcement that Miss Wanda Hawley is to be starred in pictures produced under the Realart Brand.

I am delighted also at the opportunity given Miss Hawley to star, for I feel that she has long since merited a stellar position in the film world.

In a number of my special productions, notably "Old Wives For New," "We Can't Have Everything" and "For Better, For Worse," Miss Hawley has evidenced the possession of more than ordinary talent, and of a whimsical, ingenuous charm which renders her work and her screen presence wholly individual.

I consider her one of the most promising young actresses in the entire motion picture field and I can only reiterate that I heartily concur with your judgment in engaging her for stellar purposes in Realart productions.

Very sincerely yours,

Cecil B. deMille.

Jottings

By the Editor

WE hope every independent exchange man and producer will read the interview on Page 3069 with A. Dresner, of the Exhibitors Film Exchange, Washington, D. C.

Mr. Dresner voices a protest which is frequently heard from territorial buyers whom we meet in the Times Square district. Whether it is justified or not is a question that remains for the discussion we hope to arouse to settle.

True it is that state rights buyers are prone to complain—about pictures, prices, percentages and territories. Complaining comes easy to a man who is buying. And it can't always be possible to read behind his words to his real intentions.

But on the point of territorial divisions, the exchange man is armed with actual knowledge of his field and is apparently discussing a subject that does not entirely concern price and purchase.

So—with our fingers crossed—we are hoping for a real live discussion on the point raised by Mr. Dresner in this issue. If there is room for improvement in the division and apportioning of state rights territories—what better way to secure it then from the men who sell the pictures and the men who buy them?

At no time has such discussion been more needed than at present, when all signs point to an unusually active and healthy independent market. Anything that can promote real business hard-pan talk about this field is of value. Progress that would have come long ago has been retarded by the fact that too many state rights men are prone to guesswork and catch-as-can conversation to hide both facts and the lack of them.

THE DIFFERENCE

AS FAR as the exhibitor is concerned there is just one difference between posters—some sell tickets, and some don't! The RITCHEY poster does! It does because it always has the maximum of advertising value. It has that quality because the keenest poster advertising experts in America contribute their best efforts to it. Their efforts are blended and harmonized, are made effective and potent, through the leadership of the greatest poster expert in the world!

The RITCHEY poster is as colorful as a flower show. It is as attractive as a magnet. In its design and execution it is absolutely true to nature. Therefore it is convincing. Because it is convincing it sells the maximum number of seats. Therefore it is a boon to the exhibitor!

To make the RITCHEY poster the finest poster that it is possible to make, neither time, nor thought, nor effort, nor expense is spared—for the money that the distributor might save by using cheap posters, the exhibitor would lose a hundred fold at his box-office. All motion picture poster experience has demonstrated this one truth:—RITCHEY posters pay!

VOL. XXI APRIL 3, 1920 No. XV

"Continuity's" Important Place

BETTER theatres are springing up—everywhere—in the face of almost a prohibitive building situation. Better exhibitors are behind them. A better class audience will fill their seats—provided better pictures are made.

Never before was the need for better pictures more vital. And we shall have them.

The policy of greatly increased production is increasing picture quality and the policy is now a general one. It is significant, for instance, that Thomas H. Ince, whose well built organization is probably better prepared than any other to turn out good pictures fast will shortly adopt a policy of but six pictures a year.

It is generally realized today that one producing unit—and this unit must have a producer at the head of it—should not turn out more than four or six pictures a year.

But we are also in the midst of another sharp change in production—one not so broadly economic but very vital nevertheless to better pictures.

We have previously referred to this change; we mean the selection of a theme altogether suited to picture expression; and then the elaborate and sincere preparation of this theme for the camera.

Looking back upon Los Angeles, however, this new phase in production—it is new only because it is being more generally adopted assumes even greater importance.

Let us state again just what we mean.

We mean story creation and preparation; not these elements separately but together. They must be together—a closely related operation. One doesn't get far without the other. A good picture story will be lost if it isn't well prepared for picturization; and, vice versa, good preparation can't do much for a story not meant for pictures.

For comparison, let us say that the story and its preparation is like the steel framework of a modern building. The other operations should follow smoothly once the builders have this perfect and indestructible skeleton to add to.

So with a picture, the camera should never click till this indispensable framework is finally complete and inspection proof. And we might add that this work takes months not weeks. It is the foremost argument for fewer pictures—and better ones. And it takes brains, too; not merely brains to produce the theme but brains to adapt it to pictures—and just as good brains.

We trust we make our point clear.

Most anyone will say today that the story is the thing. So there is an indiscriminate rush to buy the best stories. The market is combed for best known books, best known plays, best known authors' names, best known short stories (via the Saturday Evening Post circulation route). And any old prices are paid.

But does "best known" mean best for pictures? Certainly not. If the story wasn't created for picture expression, if it isn't capable of expression in pictures nothing will save it from mediocrity.

Then the next common step is to turn the high priced vehicle over for adaptation to pictures, to someone who may lack the ability to create a "best known" book or play or story. And this individual—also for a goodly price—does the work possibly in two weeks, probably, in over time. Good pictures will never be made this way; high cost failures will abound.

It seems to us that a capable producing unit today has got to be built upon, or around, a staff capable of, equally capable of, creative and continuity work—in other words the creation of picture themes and their finished preparation for the camera. And it seems to us that producing units will turn out good or poor pictures, according, very largely, as they possess such staffs.

We are not decrying stars, or casts, or directors, or studio facilities or any other such very important picture essentials. Speaking of directors, by the way, there is much confusion, today, on this subject. The tendency is to class as directors men who are really producers, men who, even though they may direct, also select themes and supervise continuity—as the producer should and must.

We mean, simply, that the story and its preparation is the basis—the indispensable basis of the picture. Other values are added values.

In closing may we cite again the statement of Marcus Loew, who in our opinion has summed up present production in the best and fewest words. "We won't make mistakes in production," said he. "Pictures will be good or poor according to their themes."

But we would add: "According, also and equally, to the preparation of their themes."

Independents Meet in Chicago to Form Body

WITH the earlier steps taken in harmony, and adequate financial backing assured, the meetings held in Chicago the week ending March 27, gave promise of the development of an important organization of independent producers and exchangemen.

The sessions were called by Joe Brandt. Plans for organization which would assure close co-operation and economy in production and distribution were discussed first by each group separately and then in joint session.

The primary objects sought were to secure a constant and adequate supply of pictures for independent exchangemen at fair prices, and an assured market for producers' output at a legitimate profit.

Producers attending the meeting included Dr. Shallenberger of Arrow Film; Jack Cohan, A. H. Sawyer, E. Eddy Eckles, H. L. Barnhardt of Capital; Joe Brandt, Al Chester, Harry Sherman, Louis Burston, Murray W. Garson and Marion Kohn.

Sunday Closing Finds No Friends in New York

At the instigation, presumably of the New York State Civic League, a bill has been introduced in the New York Legislature during the past few days by Assemblyman Hunter, which has for its purpose the closing of all motion picture houses in this State on Sunday. The bill has been referred to the Codes Committee and it is generally expected that it will not be reported out before the Legislature adjourns on April 24, and will thereby die.

Among senators and assemblymen, there is said to be little or no sentiment in favor of the bill. Mr. Hunter is a newcomer in the Assembly and he was secured to father the measure only after several others had been interviewed and had turned down the proposition. Legislators asserted that on account of the excellent manner in which motion picture theatres were now being conducted in their own cities on Sundays, they could not consistently support Mr. Hunter's bill.

Cohen Protests F.I.L.M. Club's New Building

Sydney S. Cohen, president of the New York State Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, in a letter to the F. I. L. M. Club, protested most emphatically to the latter's ruling that on and after March 22 no claim will be entertained by the Credit Bureau of Grievance Committee of the club to enforce an oral promise or an oral agreement with respect to a contract for film service.

I. E. Chadwick, president of the F. I. L. M. Club, in a letter to exhibitors dated March 11, declared that they must insist that every promise made to them be in writing and be made a part of the contract. In protesting, Mr. Cohen said that the exhibitors were given no opportunity to be represented at the meeting when the ruling was adopted, and requested that it be suspended.

Independent Exhibitors Organize in Canada

A considerable number of independent exhibitors of Montreal and other centres of the Province of Quebec have followed the lead taken by the Moving Picture Exhibitors' Protective Association of Ontario in organizing a co-operative moving picture exchange. The Montreal theatre interests have organized the Amalgamated Exhibitors' Circuit, Limited, and a Dominion charter has been secured for the company, as it is the intention to establish branch exchanges in other provinces of Canada. Announcement is made that about fifty per cent of the theatre men of Montreal are financially interested in the new enterprise and stock is being sold on the open market.

An agreement was signed by practically all of the interested exhibitors last January and various investments were guaranteed by them. Even before the lists were completed, offers had been made for important distributing franchises but as yet no announcement has been made regarding such arrangements. It is understood that the man behind the development was Phil Hazza, who has resigned from the management of the Montreal branch of the Canadian Universal in order to hold office with the new circuit.

Brazilian Exhibitors to Fight Film Pirates

The day of the film pirate is past, at least insofar as Brazil is concerned. Advices received by E. E. Shauer, of the Foreign Department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, tell of the formation of an import association for the protection of the legitimate film industry in that country. This organization is known as the Junta de Commercio Importador Cinematographico no Brazil.

The new association is fully prepared to wage war on film pirates, and will join hands with the government in eliminating such business. Any theatre showing a stolen film forfeits its membership.

Y.M.C.A. Committee to Canvass Industry

Fifteen thousand dollars is the share of the million and a half dollar Y. W. C. A. campaign in New York apportioned to the motion picture industry. The committee has the indorsement of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry.

Under the chairmanship of Miss Rose Tapley, plans are rapidly materializing for a thorough canvass of the studios and exchanges in New York.

Broadwest Films Takes Over Large Plant

For some time past rumors of big film deals in Europe have been rife, but the first to bear fruit is the one concerning Broadwest films. This British firm has taken over the entire control of the Windsor Film Co., Ltd. This deal is highly important to the British producers.

Federal Commission Investigates Saenger Co.

INVESTIGATION of the Federal Trade Commission into the charge that the Saenger Amusement Company is operating a monopoly in restraint of trade came to an end in New Orleans March 23, with Charles Rosen, attorney for the company, urging a continuance of the hearing at a later date.

Mr. Rosen protested the defense had been unable to get its witnesses to New Orleans. W. T. Roberts, examiner for the Federal Commission, said he was unable to grant a continuance, but would lay the facts before the commission at Washington.

Investigation on the last day was occupied largely with the introduction of testimony of E. V. Richards, Jr., general manager of the amusement company, to show that Saengers had an agreement with certain motion picture concerns by which those who did not recognize the Saenger booking agency were refused films by those who dealt with Saenger.

Details of the conflict of the Saenger Company and the Pathe Film Corporation were gone into at length.

A number of exhibitors and exchange men testified during the hearing to the effect that the Saengers interfered with their business. J. Eugene Pearch, who runs an exchange in New Orleans, testified that "if the Saengers did not resort to pernicious practices, and sold film in the open market, he and other distributors could make from $600 to $800 more a week.

Among others, a woman exhibitor, Mrs. J. A. Buisson, gave evidence that she had been refused pictures by Goldwyn, Metro, First National and Paramount, when a new theatre, alleged to be run by or in the interests of the Saengers, opened. This despite she had for three years run these brands.

During an examination of E. V. Richards, Jr., general manager of the Saenger Company, by George McCorkle, Government's attorney, on March 23, bad feeling cropped out, almost resulting in a battle. Richards insisted throughout the hearing the Saengers were not guilty of forming a combine to restrain the other motion picture men from operating, although he did say the Saengers, for their own protection and for exclusiveness, has signed contracts by which pictures could be used by them only.

The first hearing in this case was held almost eighteen months ago.

Association Acts Quickly to Help Exhibitors

Prompt action last week on the part of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry saved the exhibitors of Texas from a very serious situation, and stopped a movement which, if it had been permitted to spread throughout the country, might have cost the industry many millions of dollars each year.

By an arbitrary order issued by a local express official at Dallas, Tex., all in and out express service on motion picture films for Sundays and holidays was to be eliminated on March 21st.

P. H. Stilson, chairman of the Transportation Committee of the National Association, called a special meeting of the committee for Tuesday, and on Thursday an order was issued rescinding the closing order, and film shipments in and out of the Dallas exchanges can be made as formerly.

Recent Editorials Call Forth Hearty Endorsements

Mary Roberts Rinehart and Roy L. Manker Express Their Approval

TWO recent editorials of William A. Johnston have called forth expressions of hearty endorsement from various sources within the industry. The adjoining box presents a letter from Mary Roberts Rinehart, commenting on "The Theme and Its Treatment," which appeared in the "News" issue of March 13th. The following statement, received from Roy L. Manker, general manager of the Palmer Photoplay Corporation, voices a warm approval of the content and spirit of Mr. Johnston's editorial on "The Film Story of the Future," which appeared in the issue of February 28th. Mr. Manker writes:

"Dear Mr. Johnston:

"Your editorial, 'The Film Story of the Future,' has deeply impressed the writer with the undeniable fact that you are possessed of an intimate insight into the greatest problem the motion picture industry ever has or perhaps ever will have to face.

"You are probably not familiar with the long, hard fight we have made to impress the producers of Los Angeles with the dangerous days that are ahead of them. A few of the more alert have sensed the imperative importance of training new writers, but many of them are still in a somnolent state.

"For many, many years the man or woman with an idea for the films received the most ungracious treatment that ever was accorded to the worker in any creative field of writing. True, many of these neophyte writers presumed too much in offering their half-baked ideas to the studios, but, unfortunately, many who did have something of merit to submit, were told, by inference at least, that their stories were 'rotten.'

"The result of this long campaign of discouragement is now apparent. The crop of new writers that should have received more than passive encouragement at the hands of the producers has been killed off by the brutality of the very people they were so unselfishly and so humbly trying to serve. And now we find in the studios a group of 'hacks' and incompetents who are fighting like grim death to hold their jobs.

"For fear I may be misunderstood, I do not mean that the staff writers are all incompetent by any means. There are many able men and women in the studios who are doing surpassing work. But I do mean that there are too many 'insiders' who are side-tracking good stories for two reasons: (a) to avoid a comparison with their own inferior work; (b) to either make secure their jobs or to earn an extra stipend through the sale of their own stories. And in both cases the producer gets the worst of the deal.

"The remedy I would suggest for this condition is this: Separate the editorial and creative departments, absolutely. Permit no creative or staff writer to read the manuscripts submitted by free-lance writers. Allow no staff scenario writer to gain access to the reading department under any circumstances, and, above all, dismiss any staff writer forthwith who tries to sidetrack a good story in order that he (or she) may sell one of his own.

"There are, of course, other evils, but I believe that this inside influence is one of the most harmful of all.

"To cite a concrete case: Our sales department, which is probably handling the greatest volume of stories of any organization in the world, recently submitted a number of exceptionally good stories to a producing company with the request that they be handed to the producer himself for personal consideration. The scenario editor gladly (almost too gladly) promised that these manuscripts would immediately be handed to Mr. B., his employer, for reading. In about one week these scripts came back minus any comment whatsoever. We suspected that Mr. B. had never seen them, although he had requested us to submit material direct to him. Investigation proved that our suspicions were well founded. Mr. B. had never seen the scripts! But he had O. K.'d for production a story from the pen of his scenario editor, which, judged by some of the editor's previous stories, were of the usual mediocre quality.

"Here is a case of a producer in search of good material who never has a chance to select a better quality of stories than he has been getting because his editor, fearful of his own laurels and loyal only to his own selfish interests, makes it his business to keep good scripts from his employer.

"There are, of course, honest editors who also do some creative work of their own, but it does not follow that this makes the present system right.

"In your editorial you state that the picture was never meant to borrow from other modes of expression, and you further declare that the picture must have and can have its own story.

"In proof of the correctness of this, I can but point to the consistently high quality of the Thomas H. Ince productions. Mr. Ince is a firm believer in the superiority of the original story. He has developed screen craftsmen and he has paid them well for their work. This policy is reflected on the screen. [illegible] have been made from original stories. Lois Weber's biggest production were originals. D. W. Griffith's most spectacular successes were original.

"We are just as strong for a novel, short story or stage play as we are for originals, for we market all kinds of stories and play no favorites. But we are strong for the work of the other arts only when they are screen material.

"A number of producers attach a great deal of importance to the fact that a story has been published. They attach so much importance to this that they are falling all over themselves bidding against each other to secure the motion picture rights to a lot of 'fine writing' that has little, if anything, in it to justify its adaptation to the screen.

"We are now conducting a research campaign among the exhibitors of the United States in an effort to find out what

Author Sides with Editor

THE following letter from Mary Roberts Rinehart was received by W. A. Johnston, editor of The News:

"My Dear Mr. Johnston:

"I am very much impressed and pleased by your splendid editorial in the Motion Picture News.

"About 'Dangerous Days,' it was rather an experiment—this attempt to co-ordinate the efforts of scenario editors with the more or less fixed ideas of the author concerning his—or her—material, and if the result is worth while it is because no one took an arbitrary stand and clung to it. The studio co-operated with me in every possible way.

"What I see in all this is simply this one thing—that the author will not supplant the trained scenario writer, but should and can work with him, realizing both the limitations and possibilities which differentiate the technique of the screen from that of the book. Authors can learn to make their own scenarios just as they can learn to write plays. They could also build printing plants and bind and publish their own novels. But why should they? Their real function is to create.

"But their function in the moving picture field is, having created, to fight for the integrity of their material when transferred to the screen, to co-operate to secure that integrity, to be willing to compromise when compromise is necessary, and to realize that in reaching an audience greater than they have ever had before, they have assumed an almost alarming responsibility. The hunger for good pictures is almost pathetic, for clean humor, for a chance to laugh with and not at the characters, for life and not the perversions of life. And surely the burden is on the writers for the screen to give them just these things.

"Very cordially,

"MARY ROBERTS RINEHART."

How the Rialto, Tulsa, Okla., Put Over "Eyes of Youth"

When William Smith, manager of the Rialto theatre, Tulsa, Okla., booked "Eyes of Youth" he secured the co-operation of the Peacock Productions, Inc., in exploitation of the picture.

On this page is shown a portion of this campaign in pictures. Other stunts used were as follows:

A projector was used to throw a slide on the sidewalk on one of the principal downtown corners at night, reading: "See Eyes of Young in Eyes of Youth."

One of the most effective stunts employed was a street car, rented from a local traction company, and operated all day long on Saturday, over every line in the city. This had never before been done in the city. Cut out figures of humorous "comic section" types were set up in each window on the inside of the car, giving the appearance of a car load of people, but with the added attraction of types that were sure to get laughs from spectators. Neat banners painted in black on yellow cloth, heralded the fact that "WE ARE ON OUR WAY TO SEE 'EYES OF YOUTH' at the Rialto, Sunday, February 22nd." Similar signs were painted on the windows on either side of the motorman and the front end of the car was covered with a striking banner, consisting of a pair of eyes, with the headlight forming the nose and the word "Youth" the mouth, the whole giving the appearance of a huge, grotesque face.

The Lobby display was featured by cutouts at each end of the unusually wide lobby. One of the life-sized figure of a Yogi. Facing him was a [illegible] of Clara Kimball Young. Between them was a black pedestal onwhich sat a crystal globe, illuminated from the inside.

John C. Ragland Joins A. S. Kane as General Manager

Resigns from Sales-Managership of Realart; Has a Wide Experience

JOHN C. RAGLAND has resigned from the position of general sales manager of Realart Pictures Corporation to become general manager of the Arthur S. Kane Pictures Corporation, in which he has been elected a director. Mr. Ragland, who has had a brilliant career in the selling end of motion pictures, and whose record with the Realart Company has been unusual, took over his new office at the Kane Corporation on Monday, March 22.

With a background of experience in the theatrical and motion picture business extending from young manhood, Mr. Ragland is considered one of the best posted film executives in the industry and brings to the Kane Corporation not only a technical knowledge of selling and distribution, but also a wide personal acquaintance with hundreds of exhibitors in all parts of the country.

Starting in his youth as assistant treasurer of the Academy of Music in Richmond, Va., Mr. Ragland's first promotion was to treasurer of this house, following which he was transferred to the managership of the Norfolk Academy of Music, one of the houses on the Keith Circuit. His progressive ideas of theatre management led to one promotion after another in the circuit, and by taking over management of the bigger houses of the Keith chain, Mr. Ragland extended his activities to all the important cities in Virginia and North Carolina.

After his strenuous "front of the house" experience, Mr. Ragland became a manager of road companies, going first with the then famous Barlow Brothers Minstrel, with which organization he remained for two years. Then followed several seasons as the road manager with a number of notable stage productions, among them being "Brewster's Millions," "The Man of the Hour," "The County Chairman," "The Three Twins," "The Girl of My Dreams," "Get-Rich-Quick-Wallingford," "In Old Kentucky," and "The Red Woman."

It is interesting to note that Mr. Ragland was also manager of the tour of the original "Forty-five Minutes from Broadway," which Charles Ray is now about to make into a film for the Arthur S. Kane Company, with which Mr. Ragland allies himself.

Following his long experience as road manager of theatrical enterprises, Mr. Ragland was initiated into film circles, becoming business manager for George Kleine at the first presentation of "Quo Vadis" in this country. Later Mr. Ragland took entire charge of booking the various road presentations of the Cines

John C. Ragland, who has resigned as general sales manager of Realart to become general manager for Arthur S. Kane Pictures, of which he was elected a director production, "The Last Days of Pompeii," also one of Mr. Kleine's attractions.

The theatre again claimed Mr. Ragland's services when he took the grand opera "Parsifal" on tour, after which followed several other successful tours with such famous musical comedies as "The Merry Widow," "The Prince of Pilsen," "The Red Mill" and "My Best Girl." A second excursion into the motion picture business was followed by a big theatrical venture as business manager for Neil O'Brien, the famous minstrel star.

It was at the close of Neil O'Brien's season (in the spring of 1918) that Mr. Ragland became acquainted with the president and organizer of the Arthur S. Kane Pictures. At that time, Mr. Kane was general manager of Select Pictures, and the splendid record of Mr. Ragland in sales work with theatrical and motion picture enterprises attracted the executive's attention. As a result, Mr. Ragland was appointed St. Louis manager for Select a position which he held until the organization of Realart by Arthur Kane, when he was invited to join his former associate in the new venture.

Mr. Ragland's record with Realart Pictures has been one of the big accomplishments of contemporary sales work. Beginning his connection there as manager of the St. Louis branch of the newly organized film company, Mr. Ragland proved his rare ability in short order and was soon asked to become general sales manager in the home offices where he has remained up to his present affiliation as general manager of the Kane Company.

Mr. Ragland's positive achievements and his fine personality earned him a host of friends in St. Louis, and when his new position took him to New York, he was tendered a farewell banquet by the local film board of trade. As an evidence of personal esteem, Mr. Ragland was presented with a gold watch and Elk's charm, and an Elk's card-case of gold. In addition, he received a gold fountain pen from his former associates.

In leaving the Realart Company to go with Arthur S. Kane, Mr. Ragland expresses a deep appreciation of the fine spirit of friendliness and co-operation which he has experienced in that concern at all times. The film executive declares that in ending his services with Realart on the best possible terms, he terminates one of the most pleasant associations of his theatrical career, and retains for his former colleagues only the warmest of good wishes.

In a statement made by President Arthur S. Kane, the latter declares himself and his organization highly gratified to obtain the services of John C. Ragland in the work of building up the new Arthur S. Kane Pictures Corporation. The statement follows:

"The election of Mr. Ragland as a director of the Kane Company and his appointment as general manager is regarded with the greatest satisfaction by officials of this company. With a record of sales activity behind him that is hard to equal, Mr. Ragland represents, in addition, the highest type of the gentlemanly quality in business. For a long time prominently identified with the business management of big theatrical and motion picture enterprises, he has established a reputation among showmen of the country as a straightforward, plain dealing business man, whose honesty and human personality have won him personal as well as business friends. This is the element that makes for progress and co-operation in any industry and by a long practise of man to man relationship with exhibiting interest, Mr. Ragland has won the confidence and esteem of the entire industry.

"Aside from the personal value of a man of Mr. Ragland's good character, the Kane Company feels that it is adding to its forces a film executive of vision, whose knowledge of picture conditions is not of one territory, but extends to the far ends of the country, and who appreciates the problems of the owners of small houses as well as the needs of the big chains, with which he has long been associated. Mr. Ragland will bring to the directing councils of our company an intimate knowledge of national conditions and a personal acquaintanceship with film men."

Novel Musical Attraction at 'Frisco's California

Under the direction of Eugene H. Roth and Jack A. Partington, a novel musical attraction was added to the program of the California theatre for the week of March 7th. It was named "The Melody Shop" and permitted the singing of the latest in popular songs. Girls of beauty were included in the cast of twenty people and to say that the response accorded the act by the patrons of the big dignified theatre was spontaneous and enthusiastic is putting it mildly. A ball room couple dancing a late fox-trot, a two year old baby singing "Bubbles" and a scenic effect involving the "Venetian Moon" with clouds, stars and the moon itself carrying a pretty maiden into the dark blue sky simply "stopped the show." Patrons were so vociferous in their applause and comment that the management is considering bringing the act back for another week

Universal Branch Managers in Convention

Eastern District Branch Executives Meet in New York and Hold Lively Sessions

THE Universal branch exchange managers for the Eastern district were assembled in New York City early this week for an important "pow-wow" to consider plans for the Universal sales campaign. The convention had for its purpose an attempt to get the exhibitor's point of view, through the territorial manager, before establishing new policies for the coming season. Similar conventions will be held in other sections of the country. The second, in Chicago, will begin Sunday, March 28th.

The New York meeting was the most enthusiastic gathering of Universal men ever held. The assembled branch exchange managers represented the most important centers in the United States, and each gave voice to cheerful accounts of Universal popularity.

Harry M. Berman, general manager of exchanges, presided at all meetings of the film men, held at the Universal office and at the Hotel Astor. They greeted with enthusiasm his announcement that Universal plans to mould its ideas of the fall campaign, with the policies of the country's exhibitors. The exchange managers, being in close touch with the exhibitors, were solicited for information as to what the exhibitor likes and wants. Upon this information, all new Universal plans will be based.

The discussion revealed that Universal does not intend to set any new and questionable precedents in the film world, or to promulgate any new "wrinkles" but is projecting a plain, open-face policy, calculated to give the exhibitor what he wants, says the Universal statement.

The main business of the conference was transacted in the Universal offices on Sunday, the opening day of the convention. The exchange managers in rotation, were given the floor and "pumped" for their ideas. E. H. Goldstein, general sales manager, warmed up the meeting with a red hot sales talk.

All phases of the Universal product was discussed with a view to possible improvements, every brand being taken up in its turn. The serial subject came in for an unusual amount of consideration. Every exchange manager reported extraordinary success with serials, giving as a reason, the unusual advantages this form of Universal product extends to the exhibitor, in the way of guaranteed product, advertised stars, protection against competition, and advance advertising.

Art A. Smith, district manager for the Universal territory east of the Mississippi and north of the Ohio, was the principal out-of-town man on hand. George Uffner and Charles Rosenzweig of New York, F. S. Hopkins of Buffalo, Herman Stern of Pittsburgh, E. J. Smith of Cleveland, Louis Baum of Cincinnati, W. D. Ward of Detroit, Ralph Abbett of Indianapolis, Edward Golden and W. H. Hill of Boston, Vernon Carrick of Philadelphia, Morris Josephs of New Haven and Jules Levy of Toledo, completed the list of visiting exchange men. Mr. Maurice Fleckles, an official of the Universal Company, also attended.

Sunday evening, Mr. Berman was host at a dinner at the Hotel Astor for his assembled managers. After the dinner, the entire assembly adjourned to the Broadway theatre to attend the opening of Priscilla Dean's new picture, "The Virgin of Stamboul." The exchange men were delighted with the picture and enthusiastic over the prospect of selling it.

Despite the volume of business transacted, the visitors found plenty of time to pay respects to Times Square and other points of interest. W. D. Ward, of Detroit, even hopped a fifth avenue bus and dashed over to the Hippodrome (via Grant's Tomb, which was just passing astern of him when he realized his mistake).

Louis Baum, Cincinnati's bid for fame, won the leather D. S. C. of the New York engagement. He proved by mouth and by deed, that the most "non-consequental" part of the convention was the business conference. He strongly urged that the next convention be held in Charlestown, W. Va., where, he maintains, there would be no disturbing factors.

The high watermark of the conference was reached in an able speech by Charles Rosenzweig of the New York office, on how to sell film. He concluded, modestly, with the remark that his knowledge of the picture game extends as far north as the Bronx and as far south as Tenafly, N. J. He was loudly applauded. The visitor who applauded reaped rich reward, later, in the form of Rosenzweig's abundant hospitality.

Seconds J. D. Williams' Recent Statement

Exhibitor Deardorff of Indiana Endorses Call for Active Defensive Measures

FOLLOWING is a statement, received from Bert Deardorff, manager of the Princess theatre, Kendallville, Ind., in which hearty endorsement is expressed for the pronouncements of J. D. Williams, manager of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, on the topic of the alleged invasion of the independent exhibitors' field by producer-exhibitor interests:

"As an independent exhibitor I certainly endorse Mr. Williams' statement. I trust that all independent exhibitors will join hands in army array to fight these monopolies now trying to invade our territory. I, for one, am ready to board the ship of Mr. Williams and make a final fight with the other independent gladiators against the producer-exhibitors now endeavoring to establish their almost impregnable defenses into a chain welded so strong that it would be almost indestructible. One either has to be an independent exhibitor ready to fight for his own individual rights or yield to the alleged combine. You must remember there are other fishes in the pond. First of all, one must withdraw his business from the combine that is soon to be his strongest competitor. You are just nourishing the hand that is soon to reach out and crush the very life right out of you. The thing to do right away is to drive the producer-distributor-exhibitor out of your field by refraining from patronizing him.

"I believe strongly in independent producers; I can see disaster and chaos ahead for we independents unless we awaken to the hour and need of a death struggle in the movie game, which is now being gripped by the producer-exhibitor. If they get a foothold in your town what possibility has the independent exhibitor in offering certain high class productions when he is completely frozen out? It would mean that the independent exhibitor would be completely annihilated, and might as well forget about his past success and engage in some other business or be kept busy driving the wolf from the door.

"It is my candid opinion that this menace should be blasted at once, and while it is not pleasant to contemplate, I believe in a showdown. It is like the old-time adage, 'too many cooks spoil the broth.' Naturally, the way to sound the death knell of this alleged sidestepping of the producer-distributor is to patronize the independent. The time is ripe when producers who seek independents and a competitive market and exhibitors who want to conduct their houses in opposition to exhibitors and not the big combine-producer-distributor must support one another and co-operate in downing the would-be-theatre monopoly now grasping out like a monster octopus for all. The independent stars and producers are working for your interest and mine. Let us be the minute men and make a final drive for our rights."

"State Rights Lists Need Modifications"

A. Dresner, of Washington, D. C., Declares That Territorial Divisions Do Not Match Real Field Facts

"NUMEROUS independent producers are robbing themselves of a good percentage of the possible return on a picture through their carelessness in dividing territorial districts and their adherence to schedules that do not jibe with conditions as they exist at present."

This was the statement of A. Dresner, general manager of the Exhibitors' Film Exchange, of Washington, D. C., to a News representative last week. Mr. Dresner had been in New York several days purchasing the rights to several big features for his territory and refusing twice as many more because they had been "territorially mishandled," according to his declaration.

"The shelves around the film district must be filled to overflowing with good pictures, according to the offers made to me," continued Mr. Dresner, "but I could not touch most of them no matter how reasonable the price and good the picture—and why? For the simple reason that the sellers have available only a part of my territory. They don't offer me the subjects for the territory which my salesmen cover, and which I can cover efficiently and must cover to operate on a sane business basis. No, they offer me pictures for a small slice of my territory, for an arbitrary division and for which they think I should buy.

"Judging by what I hear from other buyers who are in town the same condition applies to numerous other territorial districts throughout the country. That is why I say that instead of the hundred per cent return—or close to that—which the producer of a good picture at a reasonable price should receive, there are many percentage points lost solely through short-sighted business policy.

"Here are the facts in my case. The Exhibitors' Film Exchange covers the District of Columbia, Maryland, Delaware and Virginia. This is the only territory for which I will consider pictures. There is nothing related to good business sense in having my salesmen cover Virginia and then be forced to inform the exhibitors that on half of our subjects we cannot handle that territory.

"But what do the producers in New York say? Like a flock of sheep, they all turn to the First National schedule—forgetting the fact that this percentage table was devised for First National's purposes—and inform me that my territory consists of only the District, Maryland and Delaware. And then I am told that this territory is worth two and a quarter per cent.

"What are the facts? For one thing, the producers seem to forget that the District of Columbia is only a city. To hear the phrase roll off their tongues you would think it was a State as big as Wisconsin. It is a city in every film sense and no more.

"Then come to Delaware. Here is a State that might as well be a single city for all film purposes. After you get through with Wilmington you may as well consider that portion of the territory practically done for. It's a State on the percentage tables, but when you go out after business you may as well consider you are going to eleven theatres.

"Maryland is a bit better, giving you Baltimore and a few small cities. But then you are through with the territory—and no reasoning under the sun can make such a territory justify the operation of a high grade independent exchange.

"But, on the other hand, from the Washington, D. C., office a salesman takes a short trip and he is in Virginia. And still, if I am to buy pictures according to the arbitrary schedule laid down in New York I am supposed to forget this territory right at my doorstep.

"What is to blame for this condition? The fact that the men who have to buy the pictures have never set down a definite percentage table based on field facts and adhered to it. The only man who had the courage to lay out a schedule and stick to it is J. B. Williams, of First National. For that he deserves praise. But the percentage schedule that is good for First National is not certain to be good for the rest of the field. Many independent producers do not think of this. Their sole knowledge of the field is contained in the list of First National percentages which they jealously guard.

"Take another fact concerning the Washington, D. C., territory. West Virginia is always included as a whole in the territory of the Pittsburgh buyer. Yet there is a large slice of West Virginia which is nine hours from Pittsburgh, and only an hour and a half from Washington. There isn't enough business there to induce the Pittsburgh salesmen to cover it, and yet the Washington independent exchange hasn't the right. The result? Some bookings are being lost to the independent exchange and the independent producer. And exhibitors in one section of West Virginia must either face the inconvenience of trying to force their business on distant Pittsburgh or limit their bookings to the Washington exchanges that are able to enter that territory.

"It is time for a shake-up in this territory—and in others if what I hear from other buyers is true. And when the shake-up is over producers and brokers in New York will stop working by arbitrary, rule-of-thumb geographical divisions devised for some other purpose and adapt their methods to actual field conditions.

"I know the News can do a lot of good if it will secure the opinions of other independent exchange men throughout the country on this point. Perhaps, with the aid of the brokers and producers, we can all get together and devise a territorial division and percentage scale that will be of incalculable benefit to the independent market.

"Let's hear from the other fellows!"

Samuel Goldwyn Issues General Message

Film Executive, on Sailing for London, Speaks of Picture Costs and Rental

SAMUEL GOLDWYN, president of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, sailed for England recently on board the Mauretania. Mr. Goldwyn did not define the purpose of his mission. He will join Gabriel L. Hess, secretary of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, and other members of the company in London.

His only statement was in the form of a general message to the industry. The statement reads:

"The motion picture industry has grown up so fast we in it have taken little time to consider whether the things we had built up were right. The further growth of the industry depends upon two things: stability of quality and stability of price. Great strides have been made in the former, great strides will be made in the latter.

"To-day we are on the verge of a departure in the system of pricing pictures. Emphasis is being laid upon value rather than upon price, and the day has come when the motion picture salesman is no more effective than the product which he sells.

"The motion picture is not a standardized product, and its price is, of course, not standardized. Where a picture can yield a return of several thousand dollars a week from one theatre, and less than a hundred a week from another, there is bound to be some element of confusion with regard to the actual merchandising of the product. The important point is that a photoplay must be released at a price that will mean a profit to an exhibitor whether he has a two hundred seat house or a house seating over one thousand.

"There is to-day a definite attempt to seek for a sliding price standardization."

R. S. Cole Delivers Impressive Speech at Convention

Gives A Comprehensive Survey of Past Activities and Future Plans

AS a fitting climax to the dynamic convention of Robertson-Cole branch managers, which was held in New York the announcement was made that the company will call its next semi-annual meeting in Los Angeles six months hence. The West is chosen in order that the exchange men, supervisors and other executives may visit the studios and study the working methods of the companies which are making Robertson-Cole productions.

The speech of R. S. Cole, delivered at the convention, was one of the most concise documents of broad-visioned and forward-looking motion picture administration ever given the trade. Sketching the accomplishments of the past year, the first in Robertson-Cole's history, Mr. Cole made promises for the future which indicate that this company is setting and will continue to set a standard not surpassed in America.

Mr. Cole said:

"First, a word of welcome. We had planned to delay our first convention until you had attained a certain quota. While you had been steadily moving in that direction, our plans for the future had progressed so much faster, and we had been so successful in our negotiations for big productions, that we decided it was best to hold our convention immediately so that you might learn of our plans and go back to your territory with a firm idea as to what we intended to do for you in the future.

"Furthermore, it was very important that we meet personally, in view of the fact that I had not had the pleasure of meeting most of the members of our organization while many also were not known by Mr. Kirkpatrick. We felt that we could explain better to you our policy and ideals, and the programme we planned, by coming in personal contact with you, rather than through the medium of the mail.

"So, we brought you in here; and, unless I am greatly mistaken, after you have heard what I have to say and what Mr. Kirkpatrick and others will tell you, we are going to send you back with a very strong determination on your part to meet our wishes and to fully justify the plans which have been formulated.

"We are exceedingly glad to see you here. We want to know you better and to send you back feeling that we are friends.

"At times it may be necessary for us to point out certain faults in your work through the medium of circular or personal letters, and these, perhaps, may disturb you unless you have firmly in mind the ideals of our business. You must realize that whatever instructions or criticism may be forward dto you, it is intended simply to assist in your field work to attain and preserve such ideals.

"It was only a short time ago that an infant was born and you have to care for it. My birthday is on the 15th of December, and unintentionally I gave our firm a birthday present on the 15th of December, 1918, because on that day we started our distribution in the United States. We had been doing business in foreign countries, in which we had made quite a success.

"So we adopted a youngster in the form of Robertson-Cole Productions. The youngster was pretty well formed, a good strong boy, but we had to have a guardian for him. We picked out a guardian. We furnished the money for his food, and we furnished the money for his clothing. The food was represented by the productions which we released; the clothing by the commission we paid to have the productions marketed properly. You know as well as I do that the food did not seem to set well on his stomach, and he was not thriving as we might expect such a strong boy should.

"So far as his clothing was concerned, the money spent on it did not seem to give the baby the right appearance. We watched the infant carefully, but he was not growing as we had hoped for. After a lot of worry and study we called in a specialist. The specialist looked him over. He said the boy was all right, but the food which we were buying for him, while good, was not being prepared in such a way that he would be nourished properly, and that we ought to do something to see that this food, for which we were paying a good price, should be so prepared that proper nourishment would result. Growth would then follow naturally.

"So on October 18th we started not only buying the food for the baby but preparing it, i. e., we commenced selling our own productions. Things went better, but the boy was still a little backward. Again we called in the specialist, and he told us that there was nothing the matter with the food. He said the trouble was due to poor judgment in selecting the baby's style of clothing. He advised us to buy his clothes for him ourselves, instead of letting others do it for us.

"That meant that in addition to selling our own productions we would have to take charge of their physical distribution. After mature consideration we decided to do this. Therefore, on the 3d day of January we took over the physical distribution of our production, which meant that we were taking care of our adopted child without the assistance of a guardian. What we have accomplished since January 3d is well known to you, and very gratifying.

"We have had our troubles, but I rather imagine that in the year and a half we have been nurturing the infant we have, to a very great extent, attained many of the ideals we had in mind.

"In regard to the personnel of our company, I think we have a very great advantage, because there is no divided authority. There is no great corporation with many interested persons in it all pushing along different lines, some perhaps with personal interests, and all together doing away with that one thing which is necessary—co-operation and unity.

"What we are trying to do is to get together a product which you will be proud to sell, and one which you will be very glad to offer to the exhibitor. If you can do that we have given you the nucleus of a strong organization. You will be able then to build the foundation which is so necessary in order that you may secure results in proportion to our investment.

"As to our financial facilities, there have been many references to the new bank roll that had come into the film business. In the beginning it was rather amusing to see how hard they tried to touch that bank roll, but it gradually tightened up, for it was plain that the bank roll was to be spent along certain lines, and that we were to receive a 100 per cent investment every time we touched the bank roll.

On this and the opposite page are shown one of the Imperial theatre's "Personality" presentation novelties in the shape of a fashion show staged with an elaborate stage setting designed for the occasion. All manner of smart apparel for the fair sex was displayed by the performers. The whole show was tied together by a specially written and rehearsed "act" which added interest to the fashion revue

Fashion Show Bids With Feature for Public Favor

To call a theatre a "House of Personality" is one thing. And to vitalize the alleged personality is quite another. Jack Partington has earned for the Imperial, San Francisco, through characteristic presentation, "Personality." Patrons first christened the Imperial the "house of personality." When a picture warrants a prologue, a fashion show or other atmospheric introduction, the requirement is supplied. Accompanying photographs depict the detailed lavishness embodied in a recent fashion show. Beautiful girls, beautiful gowns, enthusiastic and sincere management; result—Imperial theatre, the house of personality, with due credit for Jack Partington, director

A Novel Exploitation Idea for Eugene O'Brien Feature

Danforth Discovers New and Good Use for Broken Phonograph Records

WHO says there is nothing new under the sun?

Just read the following from the Atlanta Sunday American: "There, little girl, don't cry, if you have broken the latest jazz record on your phonograph or your favorite grand opera piece is ruined past mending. Save the pieces and take them to the Criterion theatre, where they will admit you Monday afternoon or evening to see Eugene O'Brien in The Broken Melody.'"

And understand this is not an advertisement. It was a newspaper contribution and comment on a real exploitation idea. Read further, as the Journal said, "The Criterion theatre has discovered a use for broken phonograph records. Just what commercial use the theatre can put the broken records to has not been made public. A lot of records have been broken at the theatre, it is true. These were mostly house records, however. Meanwhile the theatre is offering a wonderful program. Eugene O'Brien, who is the favorite of so many Atlantians, is to be shown in his new production, 'The Broken Melody.'"

If you haven't the idea here is another explanation. Willard C. Patterson, manager of the Criterion theatre in Atlanta, has booked "The Broken Melody" and then called upon Ed. Danforth, exchange exploitation man, to originate a stunt to assist in drawing the crowds. And Danforth, like a true knight of the press agent's realm, "carried on." He wrote two advertisements, of three column size, inviting the owners of broken records of "broken melodies," you know, to bring them to the Criterion theatre on the opening day and receive free admission to the theatre.

There was no object in asking for the broken records other than to hook up the picture with the idea of broken melodies. But it set all Atlanta to thinking. It was novel, was unique, and was something unheard of.

Some idea of the capacity business for the first day is shown by the fact that Manager Patterson found himself with three hundred pounds of broken records on hand. As one newspaper, the Journal, said, "In the Criterion attic today John McCormack hobnobs with Bert Williams.

When Bob Wall, owner and manager of Wall's theatre, Fremont, Neb., booked "In Old Kentucky" he went to its exploitation with unusual enthusiasm. Wall is a great lover of horse racing and owns a string himself. On the opening day of the feature at the Wall a parade was held at noon. It consisted of the band and six of Mr. Wall's own horses, two of them ridden by negro boys in jockey costumes. At two o'clock the band gave a concert in front of the theatre and the first run of the picture was at 2:15. The band also gave another concert inside the theatre before the picture was run, and while the last reels were being shown were once more in front of the theatre attracting a crowd for the next run. Wall had also used extensive space on bill boards to attract people from the country districts surrounding the city into town during the run of the attraction, for Fremont boasts a population of but 10,000

Grocery Store Advertises Semon Comedy at the Rialto

When George Mann, manager of the Rialto theatre, San Francisco, Cal., finished his exploitation of Larry Semon in "The Grocery Clerk," every man, woman and child in that city was thoroughly familiar with the new comedy king and his antics. No corner of the large Western city was forgotten in the mammoth campaign to put this funmaker over big. Every available billboard, every grocery store and even the most out-of-the-way places carried a likeness of Larry Semon. At every hand the face of this comedian met the gaze of the passerby. Two hundred one-sheet posters and 100 three-sheet posters of "The Grocery Clerk" were used in the campaign. In addition to this special publicity was built. The Albers Milling Company co-operated with Mr. Mann in the building of cutouts of Larry Semon and grocery counters, which were displayed in every store in the city. Every 24-sheet stand available throughout the city was stripped of its gay posters to make room for special Larry Semon publicity. The lobby of the Rialto was turned into a grocery store, showing Larry Semon at work behind the counter. It was a display that created much favorable comment and attracted large crowds during the two weeks in which the comedy was shown.

Prologue and "Peacock" Dance Win for Manager Harris

"On With Dance" Given Elaborate Presentation in Columbus Theatre

DEFYING the lull of Lent, laughing at the inclement weather, ignoring the "flu" scare, Will D. Harris, impressario and manager-de luxe of the Grand theatre, Columbus, Ohio, put over "On With the Dance," in a way that still has the Ohio capital talking, and which merited a return engagement of the picture, already arranged by Mr. Harris.

Manager Harris is known in Ohio as the fellow who does things 100 per cent—when he gets an idea he puts it over just a little bigger than it has been done before. So when he thought of a prologue to embellish Mae Murray and David Powell's success, he decided it would be a real prologue. First, he had a special set made—a New York roof-garden effect. Then he was fortunate enough in securing Major Madja, classical dancer, who was in Columbus. She, costumed exactly like Mae Murray in her famous scene in "On With the Dance," brought to vivid life the "Peacock Dance" of the picture. Stanley Warner, widely known Columbus actor, was secured to enact the "man-about-town," introducing the series of dances that made up the prologue. The dance numbers were introduced with a written prologue "spoken" by the screen. Mr. Harris had the especially written prologue made into a film. It carried the theme of the picture. Then came the series of symbolic dances—"The Dance of Wall Street;" "The Dance of Fifth Avenue;" "The Dance of the Bowery;" and a medley of all—"The Dance of Broadway." Mr. Harris's very clever young daughters, Eleanor and Ann Jane, took part in the dances with striking success.

The prologue as flashed on the screen said:

"And now that you are all here—what would you see? Would you be instructed, amused, thrilled, shocked? No? Perhaps, a bit of each? Yes! Then let your heart beat in tune with the dance of humanity to-day. Let your soul drift with the current of humanity that swirls through the canyons of Broadway. For you are to be led into the heart and into the soul of a great city—New York! The play you'll live to-day is the play of Broadway; the play of the gay way; the play of the narrow way; the play of the crooked way; the play of the great city.

Don't blame the city. It's not her fault! (says Clyde Fitch). It's our own! What the city does is to bring out what's strongest in us. If at heart, we're good, the good in us will win. If the bad is strongest——. Don't blame the city. She gives man his opportunity. It is to him what he makes of it! A man goes to the gates of the city and knocks; and she comes to her gates and takes him in—in the middle of her market place. There she strips him naked of all his disguises—all of his hypocrisies—and she paints his ambition on her fences and lights up her skyscrapers with it—'What he wants to be and What he thinks he is!' And then she says to him: 'Make good if you can, or—On With the Dance!'"

And the dancers come on, doing the prologue numbers.

Then the screen "spoken" prologue continues: "So there you have it! Shakespeare hath said that the world is all a stage. To-day he might say: The world is all a dancing floor—and we all mere dancers. 'The Dance of Wall Street,' how many of you have learned its step! 'The Dance of Fifth Avenue,' where fashion fritters time away—you know that step, too! 'The Dance of the Bowery'—does not this refrain sing ever and anon in every soul of souls—under the skin, you know, we're all the same. So life's a dance—and we mere dancers. Let's see ourselves upon the silver screen, bits of you and bits of me and bits of each of us, mingled into a drama of the city, a drama of today. We all dance through life—sometimes in sunshine, sometimes in shadow, some laugh, some weep, some win, some lose—but what of that——'On With the Dance!'"

The picture then begins with a blare of brass from the orchestra.

Mr. Harris didn't stop at his impressive prologue. He advertised "On With the Dance" to full jazz time. One thousand one-sheets put Mae Murray's likeness all over Columbus. Seven hundred windows cards backed up the lithograph barrage.

The front of the theatre was made spectacular with a huge cutout figure of a dancer from the twenty-four sheet.

Then Mr. Harris arranged with the Columbus citizens to put on a special morning matinee for women only, at which Madja, the dancer, delivered a health and beauty talk. This gave first-page publicity; some extra newspaper "art" and food for gossip among the women. The Citizen printed a coupon admitting its women readers. Hundreds were on hand. Mr. Harris made full use of the snappy "stills" for newspaper work and lobby decorations.

And "On With the Dance" went merrily on—and is going back to Columbus to continue the good impression made by the first showing.

Something Worth Cogitating About

At two Broadway theatres this week are conspicious evidences that the Fifth industry is improving.

The Rivoli theatre is playing "Excuse My Dust," a feature where the love interest enters into the production only as a necessary part of the development of the plot and without it could not continue logically rather than being forced to become the theme around which something else has been wrapped to furnish action. The innovation is decidedly welcome as are also such types of pictures as is "Excuse My Dust."

The Capitol theatre is presenting the first of the "Edgar" comedies adapted from Booth Tarkington's stories, and strange as it may seem, the children who enact most of the roles are just "kids" playing "kids" as "kids" really are and not stage automatons, plainly directed and instructed how to "act." The result is a two reel picture that will attract a lot more attention and earn a great deal more laughs and provide much more entertainment to the average person than half of the so called "features" in five reels or better and which have cost ten times as much to produce. Hats off to the producers of both these pictures. Their release signifies a great deal more than one might see at a casual glance.

Tieing Up With Local Events Wins

Omaha celebrated automobile week recently and H. B. Watts, manager of the Strand theatre, decided he would coax some extra money into the box office by reason of the event.

First he booked "Double Speed" and "Speed," the Al St. John comedy for the auto show week. Next in order to carry out the spirit of the show, he arranged for two new cars to be shown on the Strand stage, along with a complete camping outfit, tent, cookstove, etc. Following this was the borrowing of a number of tires from local dealers. One was placed over the ticket window to the box office and the tickets had to be sold through it. Others were distributed about the theatre. A full page newspaper display was used to advertise "Double Speed," for which the Rialto paid nothing, the bill being rendered to a local automobile company. All in all, having an idea at the right time and putting it into deeds worked wonders for Watts. The show at the Rialto drew a whale of a business and the expenses were less than usual, all of which meant greater net profits.

How the Colonial of Lincoln, Neb., Decorates Its Lobby

One of the most enthusiastic exponents of the lobby display as a box-office tonic is E. E. Duncan, manager of the Colonial theatre, Lincoln, Neb. On this page are shown two of his displays that were productive of satisfactory results.

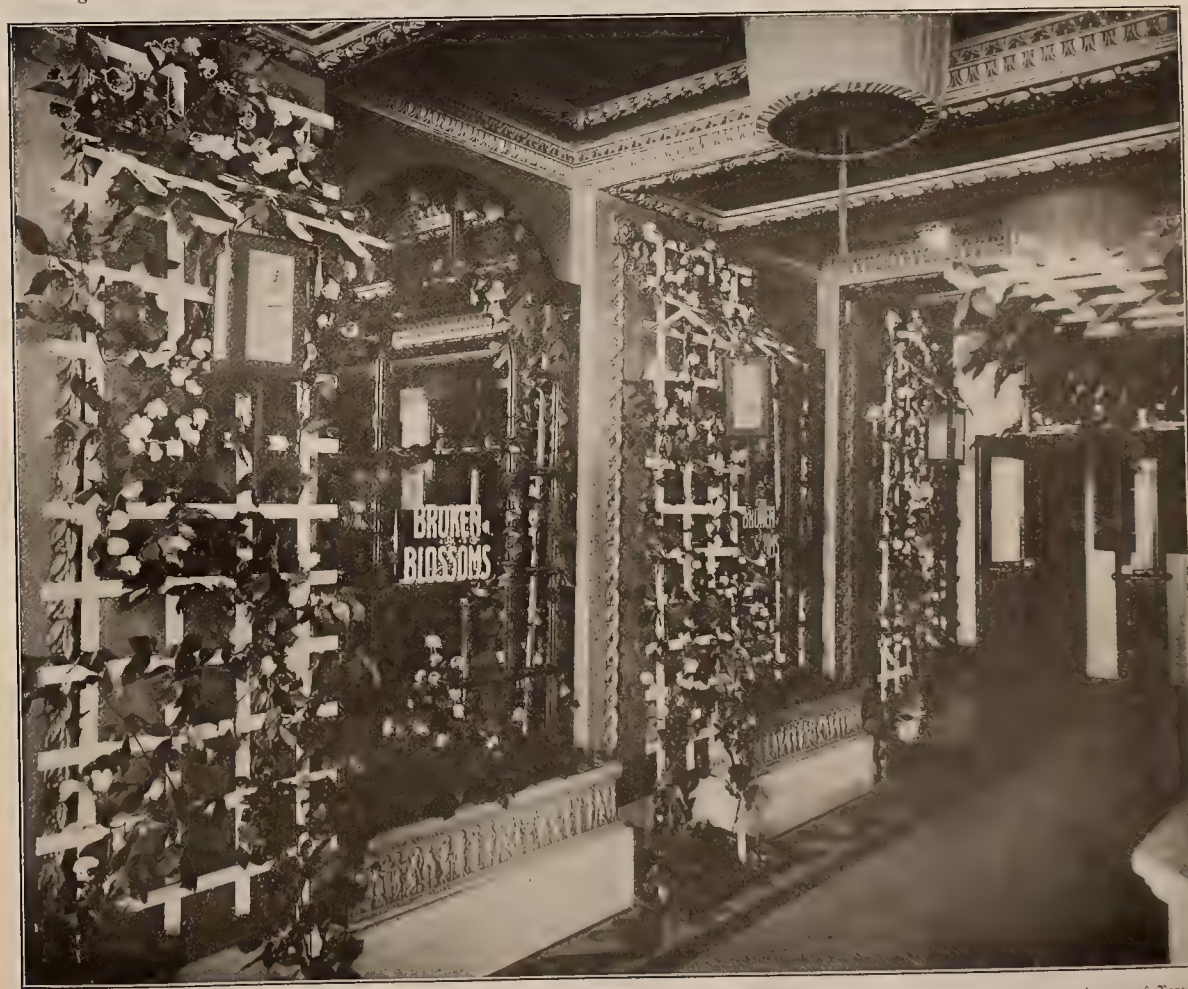
Co-operation Pays, Says Richard P. Sims

Due to the efforts of Richard P. Sims, assistant manager, Liberty theatre, Spokane, a very attractive lobby was displayed before and during the run of Bryant Washburn in "It Pays to Advertise."

The week before the running of this picture, the coming feature was announced by a display board about ten by ten feet in the interior lobby of the theatre. For the display Mr. Sims secured the co-operation of the local dealers, who willingly contributed cutouts and signs of all sizes, colors, and descriptions advertising their wares. These were tacked on this board in every angle possible, giving the appearance of a crazy quilt. In the center was an announcement card painted in attractive colors—Bryant Washburn, in "IT PAYS TO ADVERTISE."

During the run of the picture the entire exterior lobby was covered with advertising in the same manner. The large display board which was used in the interior lobby before the showing of the picture was hung above the entrance in the exterior lobby.

To many exhibitors of the high class theatres this stunt may be termed "Freak Advertising." However, the purpose of advertising is to attract attention in the first place, and in the second place, interest the people. No one could help noticing this lobby and one glance made them curious to look again, and the effect was very gratifying.



It has several advantages over the ordinary lobby display. There was no expense to it whatever. Every local dealer who heard of the idea was glad to contribute. All Mr. Sims had to do was to mention it to them, and they crowded into the Liberty office, bringing all they had for the display.

"I feel that this co-operation with the local dealers will have a lasting effect," said Mr. Sims, "as it won them over to us and gave them a personal interest in not only this picture, but also our theatre.

Makes Capital of Local Spring Flood

Hardly had the word gone forth that the residential districts of Manayunk, Pa., were under five feet of water as the result of the Schuylkill River overflowing its banks at that point during the recent rain and snow storm, than banners bearing the inscription, "Water, Water Everywhere" began making their appearance all over the inundated districts.

The meaning of this bit of irony immediately became the topic of discussion for the natives, and newspaper offices and police stations were besieged with queries as to their meaning. The authorities were as much at sea as the natives and directed all questioners to the Electrical Bureau at City Hall, Philadelphia. Here it was revealed that it was the opening gun in the campaign for exploiting Will Rogers in his latest production "Water, Water, Everywhere" which will play the Victoria theatre on the Stanley circuit, on April 12th.

One of the most attractive lobby displays we have seen for "Broken Blossoms" is shown in the above cut. It was the work of the American theatre of Terre Haute, Ind., managed by S. P. Katzenbach. Mr. Katzenbach is convinced that the expense and time involved in making the lobby attractive for the showing was more than made up by the increased revenues obtained

"Old Kentucky" Spelled Victory for the Victoria

The lobby and front of the Victoria theatre, Philadelphia, aroused great interest when "In Old Kentucky" played this house, because of its transformation into a race track entrance. All the doors were camouflaged with posters of people and the effect was exactly as a race track existed inside the lobby

Riviera Presentation, Phrase of Real Import

Balaban and Katz Activities Keep Chicago Public Interested

RIVIERA PRESENTATION is an electrical term to the Chicago devotees of the silent drama. It was coined by Balaban and Katz, proprietors of the Riviera and Central Park theatres, two of the choicest houses in the Windy City, and serves to describe the Riviera's artistic fashion of serving motion pictures.

The industry knows comparatively little of Balaban and Katz's activities. Yet without fuss or feathers, sans brass band or other brash display, this theatrical firm has attained an honored position with the foremost showmen in less than two years. Besides the above-mentioned theatres, they will operate two of the world's largest theatres in process of construction at present, one in the loop, a 5,000-seat house, to be known as the Capitol and the other on the South Side, a 4,000-seat house, called the Tivoli. And these theatres will be as magnificent as they will be capacious if architectural plans mean anything.

And the reason for their success is the superb style of their entertainment. It has been remarked by industrial tourists who make it a habit to visit America's leading theatres that the Riviera's interior not only excels in splendor any edifice similarly engaged, but that its entertainment is better balanced and more pleasing to the eye and ear than performances of similar nature on exhibition elsewhere.

That is the secret of their meteoric success. Their shows are carefully planned with a view of close harmony. Their specialties and novelties groove into the general scheme of things as if they had been especially created for the occasion. As an illustration, here are their "stunts" for "In Old Kentucky," on display at the Riviera the week of March 1.

Preceding the picture was an exquisite twilight scene in the southland. Colored urchins could be seen happily grouped, singing melodious Southern tunes accompanied by the guitar and dancing familiar jigs of their race. Gradually the sun sank behind the distant mountains and darkness came upon the pleasure-loving negroes. Only the moon and the red glow of a camp fire penetrated the darkness, but their songs and general gayety were heard, as the scene faded gracefully into the opening scene of the picture.

That was merely a perfunctory specialty, fitting to be sure, but more or less hectic by comparison with other displays on exhibition at the Riviera previously. The big event has created a veritable sensation in Chicago showmanship, occurred in the course of the picture's unfolding.

Stage Setting Adds to Vocal Number

THE second vocal number on the Rivoli theatre program this week is being "staged" and in a way which adds greatly to its entertainment value.

The selection is "Visione Veneziana," a Venetian composition in locale, sung by Edoardo Albano, the Rivoli baritone.

For the selection Dr. Reisenfeld has provided a drop showing a street scene in Venice with the canals and typical buildings showing.

In the foreground what purports to be a wharf is seen. At one side of the stage the singer stands in a "pit" back of the "wharf," the effect being as if he was in a gondola, this effect being carried out by the painting and design of the wharf. With paddle in hand and costumed in the clothing of the Venetian boatman, Mr. Albano sings the song interpreting the emotions of the "Visione Veneziana."

The canvas in design is not exceptional, being what may be called "orthodox" of the Venetian water scene, but the colorings used blended with fine lightings make the effect one of beauty and add greatly to the enjoyment the patron of the Rivoli gets from the number.

To break into the middle of a picture with a theatrical specialty is a dangerous thing. For it interrupts the continuity of the drama and results in a more or less irksome exhibition at its best. But when the novelty is made part of the picture, injecting genuine life into the story in place of the silent portraiture represented in the film, and the stunt is accomplished unexpectedly, fading into the film with the same suddenness as it emerged into view, a surprising effect is obtained.

Such was the achievement of the Riviera's producing staff during the presentation of "In Old Kentucky." This famous melodrama was drawing close to the exciting race track scene. The jockey had arrived for the notable event and was safely concealed in the loft of the stable, stupefied drunk. Anita Stewart had donned the jockey's outfit, and had hastened with the colonel to the track. In the jockeys' quarters a dozen or more riders could be seen waiting to be summoned. An official appeared, and the riders darted forth to be weighed in and to qualify for the race. Then a subtitle appeared announcing the annual event.

Meanwhile the pink curtain of the Riviera stage had been drawn over the screen, and the subtitle registered upon it. When the stage returned to view, a veritable paddock was on exhibition. The entries of the race were observed on a chart on one side. Elsewhere was a scale and jockeys were seen tripping upon it and off again. A young jockey came dashing upon the scene (representing Miss Stewart), hastened on by "the Colonel," and was weighed. In the distance live horses were being led by the bridle, and were mounted by costumed jockeys. Meanwhile two expert dancers were doing fancy foot work in the centre of the stage, colored stable boys were shooting craps in an offside, and the Riviera Orchestra was playing fast and effective melodies. It all took less than 90 seconds, when the curtain was drawn over the scene, and "They'e Off" was announced in a subtitle. The picture then returned and continued to the very end.

The thing was accomplished so rapidly that the Riviera audience were left gasping fully a half minute at every performance before they realized what happened, and when they recovered from their surprise, spontaneous applause burst forth.

Spooks Hold No Terrors For These Youths.

Spooks hold no terrors for the youths of Beresford, S. D.

In response to a recent advertisement of the First National Film Exhibitors' Circuit in the exploitation of David W. Griffith's "The Greatest Question," asking for volunteers to sleep alone all night in a graveyard at $25 a night, Clark F. Eidsmoe and Harold J. Larson, both of Beresford, came near breaking all speed records in writing to tender their services.

Eidsmoe, in writing to Manager J. F. Cubberly of the Minneapolis First National office, vowed he was perfectly willing to sleep in any graveyard he ever saw. Larson expressed a willingness to park his bed among the tombstones for any length of time from one night up to a year.

"I see that you are offering $25 a night for a white man to sleep all alone in a graveyard," wrote Eidsmoe. "I am perfectly willing to sleep in any graveyard I ever saw. If you mean business, write me at once. Kindly state how long the job will last. Also give other particulars."

"I would like to have more information about your offer," Larson said. "I am enclosing a stamped envelope and hope you will reply by return mail. How many nights do you want me to sleep there—one or for a year?"

Great as was their alacrity in answering the advertisement, other adventurous spirits beat them and obtained the job

Salt Lake Showman, Mormon When It Comes to Ideas

Mysterious Entertainers Stunt Gets Much Attention

Carpenter Successful at Paramount-Empress With Masked Dancer Stunt

FROM out where Brigham Young migrated to establish a village now known as Salt Lake City comes an interesting story. George Carpenter, secretary and manager of the Paramount-Empress theatre, his able assistant, which joke-smith Manager Carpenter has labeled the Official Shock Absorber, and an exploitation expert fresh from Broadway, New York, introduced a masked and mysterious dancer to Salt Lake City's public as an exploitation aid in putting over "On With the Dance," when this picture played the Paramount-Empress.

Reduced to a description of the facts, and eliminating the procuring of the dancer, the secret conclaves of Mr. Carpenter, the O. S. A. and the F. P. man, one day a taxi drove up to the auto show being held in Salt Lake City at the time and out hopped a stranger and a masked female. The man walked up to the leader of the orchestra, which was discoursing music for the benefit of those attending the show, and handed him a music score with the request that it be played. Whether said leader had been "fixed" or not is unknown but anyway the request was granted and the masked lady, to the crash of alleged music, did artistic didos, clad in a peacock blue (and behold) gown, shorn shoes, hose, etc.

After the exhibition, to be figured both ways, the pair made a hasty, unexplained but dramatic exit to the waiting taxi, leaving the gaping prospective auto buyers both astonished and mystified, and asking each other what it was all about and receiving no authoritative reply, curious to find out if such a thing was possible.

The "act" had gone over big, so the next night a similar scene in a crowded hotel cabaret was staged. This was just as successful as the first appearance of the mysterious entertainers. The following night a visit was made to the Hotel Utah with more dancing by the dancer, masked at one end and exposed at the other.

The next appearance of the masked dancer still incognito was in the window of a leading Main Street music store (see top cut on the opposite page).

By this time all of Salt Lake City was properly curious and some of it was really scandalized.

Stories and teaser ads now began to appear in the newspapers inquiring who the masked dancer was. Next the dancer appeared at a Rotary Club dinner. It was decided after this appearance that it was time to let the public in on what the dancer was dancing for, so the announcement was made that she would soon appear on the stage of the Paramount-Empress theatre.

However, no mention of a motion picture was contained in this information.

Prior to dates for the theatre engagement of the lady, the University Club of Salt Lake City held its annual banquet. The management of this affair 'phoned Mr. Carpenter that the services of the mysterious dancer were desired for this affair, for which they were prepared to pay providing a price could be agreed upon. Just how much was charged off the exploitation account for "On With the Dance" is not known, but something was, for the dancer "played" the University Club function with everybody well pleased with the "barnstorming engagement."

Along the last of the week prior to the film's opening on Sunday, Carpenter and his gang broke the news that his barefoot girl was advertising the film at the Paramount-Empress and would appear in a prologue prepared for the engagement. It was also announced that anyone guessing her name would be awarded passes good for matinees.

A lot of people started guessing. Mae Murray was a favorite choice, given a tip by a rumor that perhaps might have been inspired by a misleading whisper from about the Paramount-Empress box office (not an inference, just a surmise).

Anyway the Paramount-Empress passes were mailed every guesser with no explanations made and Salt Lake City is still arguing who the lady really was.

Aside from the salaries of the F. P. E. and the O. S. A., who had to be paid anyway whether they did anything or not, and what Mr. Carpenter thought his time was worth, the whole stunt cost about $75, which same was about the cheapest piece of real publicity and exploitation ever conceived in or about the city of the late and lamented Brigham when the results in dollars and cents and interest aroused are considered.

The masked dancer finally took off her mask after doing her part in the prologue as advertised and opened up a dancing academy, the ban on the terpsichoric art during Lent for obvious reasons not being so strong in Salt Lake City as in some other cities, New York for instance.

Probably no more will this lady be able to dance for the Paramount-Empress staff incognito or to the tune of its money, but the moral is: Does this stunt beat carrying a banner around the streets or installing a jazz band on the marquise considering the present union scale for horn blowers? We say it does and that the Carpenter of the Paramount-Empress and his partners in crime are to be congratulated not only on the financial reward accruing from the engagement of "On With the Dance"—well exploited by one possessing the grey matter to originate and carry out the plans as related. Incidentally here is a member of our beloved Advisory Board who has again done his duty, which is a reminder that some of the others should "kick" in instanter.

It isn't often that a motion picture wins a front page reveiew in a big newspaper. And a review that has all the pep of Mabel Normand, herself! It was an accident that secured page-one-prominence for the review. But it was the careering Mabel's work in "Jinx" that inspired the laudatory tone of the squib.

Neal S. Anderson, who is dramatic editor for the Topeka State Journal, treated himself to an all-comedy night at the Orpheum theatre. The leading feature was the Goldwyn production, "Jinx," and it was introduced by an old Chaplin picture, "The Champion." He sat down, all unaware of the shock in store for him, and arranged the aura of editorial indifference about him. He had thought that aura to be invulnerable until then.

Charlie Chaplin began his antics while Mr. Anderson looked on. Suddenly the editor recognized the referee of the comedy. His placidity was shattered to pieces—the referee was himself. He had almost forgotten that six or seven years ago he had acted with the Essenay Company and incidentally with Chaplin in "The Champion." In one entire reel the Dramatic Editor figured prominently. The smart reporter of the Topeka State Journal—every newspaper has a smart reporter—also recognized Mr. Anderson in the picture. The result was a skit on the front page and the transposition of the review from its wonted obscurity to the enviable front row pew.

Under the striking head "N. S. A. Is Seen in 'Movies' at Orpheum," the reporter spieled off a clever story quoting Mr. Anderson's audible reaction to the shock verbatim.

"Queer thing—seeing one's self in the movies," the dramatic editor had said. "It's not so disturbing while your screen self is acting before your eyes, but when you walk off down the street, off the reel into nowhere, you can hardly understand it."

Exploitation and Presentation Often Inseparable

(Above)
The management of the Palace theatre of Schenectady, N. Y., chartered a trolley car in its exploitation campaign for "Should a Woman Tell?" The car plastered with signs was taken over the principal car lines of the city during the run of the picture at the Palace

(Right)
Stage setting for "Dangerous Hours" used by the Strand, Fort Wayne. Both these settings may be viewed as exploitation aids as well as presentation novelties since they helped attract attention to the pictures by making people who saw them go out and talk about the sets

"Brass Band" Vs. "Violin" Exploitation Methods

How Dr. Hugo Reisenfeld Advertises His Houses Without "Shouting"

WHAT is exploitation? Where does legitimate publicity end and when does it begin to prove a boomerang if such a thing is possible? The result of what we were wont to term "circus methods" a short year or so ago, have proven successful from apparently every angle, with no ill effects when the public, attracted to the theatre by the "fire works," found only an ordinary feature on the bill. Who is to determine what is good advertising and what is bad advertising? The answer is the man who controls the destinies of a picture house; the particular public he attracts for his theatre, or which comes to the theatre naturally, and last but not least, whether or not the prestige of the theatre from size, beauty, convenience and location, or for any other reason is of enough importance so it is better business to "sell" the theatre, than to "sell" the attraction.

This is not a criticism of the methods which we have described, but rather a defense for those who, possessing the right kind of a theatre, have not discarded their policy of conservatism and have maintained and added to their clientele without shouting from the housetops, without the use of brass bands, fake news-paper stories, etc.

Of this number of theatres can be classed the Rivoli and the Rialto of Broadway, managed by Dr. Hugo Reisenfeld. Exploitation in these houses has not as yet been affected by the tendency of the times to "circus" a production.

Both houses go on the even tenor of their ways, doing more business to more net profit than the owners hoped to receive for many a year. Is it because New York, transient-filled continually, just naturally reaps a harvest of dollars from those who come to spend? We think not, and in this opinion we have the concurrence of Dr. Reisenfeld, with explanations that there is in effect at these two theatres a policy of exploitation which never ceases to operate and which has its basis in the "sell the theatre" idea.

Dr. Reisenfeld does not claim that he originated the idea, nor that the idea is a triumph for him, but he does claim that he in the Rialto and Rivoli has proven the soundness of "exploitation without shouting."

Where others have used a brass band, Reisenfeld has used a violin. Every tradition of the Broadway show-business has fallen before his idea. Fiction has disappeared from his advertising; even adjectives have vanished. There has been advertising, plenty of it, and exploitation of almost every conceivable kind, but in every case there has been one object in view—to tell the truth, to tell it effectively and artistically and to make the patron feel that he is going up, not down, when he visits a Reisenfeld show. And always there has been the special aim to attract the women and children.

The career of this man, who now has three Broadway picture palaces, the Criterion now having come under his management, is a lesson in exploitation that every other exhibitor ought to study, for it not only has brought business to his two houses—and business is their only excuse for existence—but it has brought a steady, permanent clientele on whom the houses can depend in all kinds of weather and with all kinds of pictures. If the program is not satisfactory one week they seem to believe that it is one of the thing that can't be helped and that next week will bring a better one. They come back. Of course, with exceptionally good pictures the business is greater than the houses can handle. In other words, he has built up a Broadway business on neighborhood policies. His patrons are his friends.

Hugo Riesenfeld has barred all exaggerations. His advertisements are simple and free from adjectives. As a rule his advertising carries the name of the star, and the title of the feature picture; the title and make of the comedy, the name of the musical selection and the name of the conductor. In exceptional cases, where the picture has unusual merit, some of the story is told. In only one case since he became manager of the Rivoli and Rialto theatres has Riesenfeld told the public that the picture he was offering was of unusual merit, and that was when he presented "The Miracle Man" at the Rivoli. Then, over his own signature, he announced that he believed it was the best picture he had ever seen. The record-breaking throngs that crowded the house for two weeks was a testimonial to the public faith in his word.

Reserved Seats Sell First-Says Moore

George Moore who owns and manages the Lion and Royal theatre of Bellevue, O., is a great believer in the reserved seat plan of selling the seats in his theatres. Every time he books a big picture his reserved seats cost 44c as opposed to the regular admission price of two bits. And anyone who knows the present day generation knows also that the present day generation enjoys a 44c show a whole lot more than a 25c show. Anyhow, it's classier to get reserved seat ahead of time, and pick out the very seat you want to have. Makes you feel as if you were laying down a ten spot for the opera. The only difference between them being that the chap that lays down his 88c is sure of being entertained.

And this little plan of selling reserved seats assured Manager Moore of a full house for the first performance, for the reserved seats go like hot cakes. "There's another real advantage to the plan," Mr. Moore explains. "By selling tickets in advance this way, we get our people all seated at the beginning of the picture. Then when the show is over, the whole house is cleared out for the next show. We don't have people staying over from one show to another, and annoying those who came later, when they leave. It keeps the theatres more orderly, and my patrons have become so accustomed to seeing a show through from beginning to end, rather than from the end forward as frequently happens elsewhere, that they are very much grieved to be trampled upon by those who leave in the middle of the picture because they saw the ending before the beginning."

Also, it makes the task of exhibiting motion pictures a pleasure. Moore is always assured of a capacity house before he opens his show. He has all the first part of the evening to collect his audience for the second show. But, he is always careful to give a good show, and not abuse the confidence of the residents and movie patrons of Bellevue.

Jungle Scene in Lobby Gives Serial Big Send Off

When the Park theatre played its first episode of the serial "The Lost City" the lobby was transformed into a veritable "jungle." In addition to the mounted animals, there were the big natural sized stuffed animals that nod their heads, and wag their tails. This display brought people from far and wide. Those who had kids brought 'em down to see the make-believe zoo. And those who were stay-at-homes by necessity and wanderers by inclination came again and again to get a breath of the spirit of the wilderness. But the crowds didn't stay on the outside. The same attraction that brought them to the doors of the Park theatre took them within the portals, and once initiated they became steady followers of the serial

How The "Giant's Tracks" Sold Three Admissions

"The River's End" Exploitation at St. Louis Arouses Much Curiosity

A MAN, his wife, and their small son, pleasure bent, stepped from a United Railways sardine box at Grand and Olive—the Forty-second and Broadway of St. Louis. They crossed the street and walked north with the slow moving crowd. "Where shall we go?" the husband asked. "You name it and I'll buy the tickets." The wife was undetermined and the conversation was interrupted by the child.

Awe-stricken, he had stopped and with a short, chubby finger he was pointing to the sidewalk.

"Daddy!" he exclaimed. "Da-dee! Mother! Look—see—there's been a giant walking! Look daddy—mother—he's been going right up this way. See?"

The boy, greatly excited, pointed to the imprint of a giant hob-nailed boot—stenciled on the pavement in white.

Mother and father, also interested, gazed down on the tracks and noted that they continued North along Grand avenue.

"Mother! Daddy! Let's fellow 'em! Let's, daddy—mother—won't you? See—they go right on up the street."

Father and mother smiled consent and the trio, with the boy running ahead, trailed "the giant."

Across Morgan, Washington and Lucas the stenciled trail led to the New Grand Central theatre—and right on into the lobby and up to the ticket windows. High above the theatre the great electric sign, in red, green and yellow, bore the legend "The River's End." Three tickets for the picture had been sold by exploitation which began with the "giant's tracks" that excited a small boy's curiosity.

The hob-nailed boot tracks—"stenciled to stay"—was the most striking feature devised by Manager William Sievers, of the New Grand Central, for the exploitation of Marshall Neilan's initial attraction for First National exhibitors. The tracks, nineteen inches from toe to heel, certainly attracted attention. "Henry," leader of the janitorial force of the New Grand Central, with a force of helpers, started out at 1.30 a. m. on Sunday—the day the picture made its debut—to doing the tracking.

For blocks in every direction the trail led to the New Grand Central.

Even the Sunday morning crowds—bound for church—had to follow the tracks "just for fun" to see where they led to. And the lobby of the theatre, with its picturesque northern setting, found at the end of the trail certainly was a magnet.

Sievers must have had a "tie-up" on the weather, for during the entire two weeks of the engagement of "The River's End" at the New Grand Central there was not enough snow to hide the tracks. And "Henry" with his helpers went out with stencils and paint and gave the tracks a second coating on the Saturday night prior to the beginning of the second week.

Book stores, butcher shops, department stores, barber shops, saloons and sporting goods houses were drafted to aid in proper exploitation of the film.

It was the first instance in St. Louis of the near-beer establishments doing their "full" duty. Cards in the windows of the thirst quenching emporiums carried this message:

"Keith couldn't even get 'near-beer' at 'The River's End.'"

Another card with a bottle of "one-half of one per cent." on each side of it, carried the announcement:

"If one of these contained one-tenth of the kick that is in 'The River's End,' one bottle would be more than enough."

On the day before the exploitation campaign opened a seal died at the Zoological Garden. Now it took a lot of nerve to put this over, but the publicity man "pulled a wire" and got several nice portions of seal blubber. This was divided among several of the leading butcher shops—those with choice locations—and it was exhibited in the windows with this message:

"Did you ever see seal blubber? Look at it. It is all Conniston had to eat while tracking the outlaw Keith in the Arctic to 'The River's End.'"

For the barber shops this sign was prepared:

"If you had been with Conniston while he was tracking Keith to 'The River's End,' you would not have had a hair cut or a shave for nearly two years."

The book stores, without being coaxed, got busy with the proper display of James Oliver Curwood's famous novel. The sporting goods houses, glad of an opportunity for something unusual, offered displays of "the kind of firearms carried by Keith and Conniston to "The River's End," and exhibited snow shoes, dog sleds and fur clothing.

Capitol Stages New Opera

IN pursuance of its policy of staging grand opera, the Capitol theatre, New York, is this week giving "Paoletta," a romantic composition by Pietro Floridia, sung for the first time in New York.

It is a fifteenth century story and as presented at the Capitol theatre is a colorful number both from musical and staging angle, and perhaps the most tuneful from the standpoint of the uneducated in music that has been sung in the Capitol repertoire.

A handsome stage setting by John Wenger and splendid costumes aid greatly in adding interest to the offering. It is also somewhat more abbreviated than most of the Capitol operas given.

The opera gives the chorus a better opportunity that most compositions so far selected and this seems to be appreciated by the audience. The performance we attended was enthusiastically received.

Four Real Exploitation Ideas

When an exhibitor gets four real ideas and puts them across with a real bang in connection with two productions, the results of which bring capacity business, it's worth while talking about and giving the exhibitor his just credit.

Well it's to Elwyn M. Simons, of the New Family theatre of Adrian, Michigan, that the credit is due, for he pulled a particularly unique one for the "kids" of his town on "When the Clouds Roll By," and three stunts on "Pollyanna."

On the Fairbanks picture he issued the announcement that he would admit any boy in the town to the first performance, upon the child presenting to the box office ten horse-shoes. And it was a screaming success. There were over two hundred old horse-shoes that came to the place, and some children who were only able to gather eight or nine, strolled along, and the good hearted manager let those pass the door also.

The week before "Clouds" came to the theatre he had a wagon driven about the town, with the sides painted with black cats. He used mysterious advertising, and interested every person in the community that was superstitious.

When "Pollyanna" came along he ran "the gladdest incident of your life" contest, offering money prizes for the best stories along that line.

He also entertained at a private performance the girls from the local Industrial Home, only those however who were on the "good behavior" list and who had no demerits against them. There were over three hundred of these state charges that were entertained by "Pollyanna's" phylosophy. The newspapers gave Mr. Simons no end of publicity on his stunts and he did the biggest business of his career.

Search For Original Fans As Exploitation.

If hundreds of exhibitors don't use this stunt, in one way or another, we're mistaken. Paramount Artcraft hasn't copyrighted it and offers the suggestion for what it's worth to any exhibitors trying to put over a big, elaborate picture. The stunt was originated for the Cincinnati engagement of "Everywoman" at the Strand theatre by the exploitation department of the Cincinnati Famous Players-Lasky office. The simplicity of the idea is its big point. It will get newspaper space where publicity is hard to get—as it is in Cincinnati.

The idea is this: Start a search for the "original moving picture fans" in your town. At this time, due to the twenty-fifth anniversary of the event, the presentation of the first photoplay is receiving much publicity. A reproduction of this first photoplay, "Miss Jerry," is included in the Paramount magazine released Feb. 15.

Try to find the film fans in your town who saw "Miss Jerry" 25 years ago. And when you get their names—you'll get one or two surely—give them a special party, showing the "Miss Jerry" from the Paramount Magazine, and in contrast show them your latest, biggest production of the silent art.

In Cincinnati to work up publicity for "Everywoman" a month in advance of the engagement at the Strand the "search for the original fans" was sprung. The papers saw the possibilities of good "human interest" copy and ran the announcement that Manager Fred Strief of the Famous Players-Lasky Cincinnati office would give a party in the exchange "private theatre" for the original fans, showing them again, for old time's sake, "Miss Jerry" and then comparing it with "Everywoman." As fast as the mails could carry them, several letters were received from "original fans." They furnished splendid "copy" for the papers. One man, Jacob Jordan, of Covington, Ky., wrote that he saw "Miss Jerry" 25 years ago at Cincinnati and that since then he hasn't missed more than two nights a week at a moving picture show.

The Post sent a photographer to get the man's picture and interview him. Mrs. Frank Bennett wrote that she saw "Miss Jerry" and had her son with her. He is now 34 years old and works for a railroad. So they'll use their passes to come to Cincinnati to see "Everywoman." That's long-distance pulling!

Attorney J. A. Mingus, well known in Cincinnati, another "original fan," tells (the Times-Star carried this interview) of seeing "Miss Jerry" and how it puzzled the populace. Everybody left the old Heck Dime Museum in Cincinnati feeling they had been buncoed—they thought the picture must be a fake and that real, live actors were doing the acting and were reflected on the screen in some trick way. Other interviews proved space getters in the papers, each referring to the special party to see "Everywoman," the most lavish film to be constructed with most crude and original picture.

Making your publicity "news" so the newspapers will not only carry it, but want it enough to send out for photos, is the real wedge to open the columns in towns where the papers are "tight."

In Cincinnati the stunt was lengthened out by getting a letter from Alexander Black, who "produced" "Miss Jerry" a quarter century ago. He congratulated the "original and faithful fans" of Cincinnati. More newspaper space.

"Exploitation Men's Minute Book—"

GIVING Credit Where Credit Is Due. The text of the pages under this heading is devoted exclusively to the achievements of the Exchange Exploitation Men.

It places at the disposal of the exhibitor all the exploitation ideas these experts originate, renders their services practically universal and gives credit where credit is due.

Michigan Church Enters Picture Business.

The People's Church at East Lansing, Michigan, is going into the motion picture business.

Rev. O. W. Behrens, student pastor, makes the announcement.

The intent of the church is to serve the growing community both religiously and in a secular way. That is to say, that on Sunday evenings the pictures are to be used to illustrate Bible stories and to illustrate popular sermons.

On week day nights, high class pictures of a general nature will be shown with no religious propaganda involved except that vulgarity will be excluded and the purpose to inculcate good taste kept in view.

The church is undertaking the picture business not with a view to profits but rather with a view to community service. The price schedule has not been announced but it will be based, so it is said, on a policy of covering costs rather than with a view to profit.

The church is not all rigged for the new enterprise as yet but preparations to that end are under way. It is believed that all will be in readiness early in March.

The People's church is typically a community church, being the only church at East Lansing, a suburb of Lansing, Michigan, the state capital. The Michigan Agriculture College is located at East Lansing. The school is one of the largest and oldest of the federal land grant colleges and has around 3,000 students. East Lansing is taking on new commercial importance and during the past year has added a half-score of new business places to its "main street."

Believes in Advertising Coming Attractions.

Advertising the character of a theatre by using coming attractions in the advertisements of the current production is an idea which is being used by Jack Boyle, of the Strand theatre, Fort Madison, Iowa. Nearly half of all the advertising used by the theatre is devoted to attractions which will appear at the theatre at some future time. Mr. Boyle declares that the value of this sort of advertising has already been attested by increased receipts.

"Such advertising is of special value to exhibitors in towns around the size of Fort Madison (50,000 population) or smaller," declares Mr. Boyle. "No matter how small the place is, the screen patrons are right up-to-date in the matter of releases, and the reviews which they read of the pictures that are making the hits in the larger cities on first runs or pre-release dates make a big impression on them. The particular picture which you happen to be running may have slipped out of their memory, or again maybe they never heard of it, but the thing that gets them is to see that in the future you will run the picture which is at the present time making a big hit in the larger cities. They draw the conclusion that if you have booked productions of that sort as soon as you are able to obtain them, the one you are running at the present time must be good.

"It makes a reputation for a house quicker than any way I know of. The continuous advertising of the big productions as future attractions naturally brands your house as being the place where the big productions are shown and a steady day by day patronage results. Until something else turns up that I regard as better, and from the results I have gotten from this form of advertising it will have to be very good, announcements of future attractions will continue to be carried in all advertising for the New Strand theatre."

Advertising Idea With a "Kick" in It.

In these arid days of "less than one-half of one per cent," a brewery wagon is in itself a sight to excite curiosity. For that reason, John D. Howard, Famous Players-Lasky exploitation representative in San Francisco, effected a tie-up with a local brewing company which attracted several times the amount of attention which the ordinary wagon ballyhoo usually gets. Bryant Washburn's latest "The Six Best Cellars," was the picture which was being shown at the Portola theatre. The picture being a prohibition comedy, the idea of a tie-up quite appealed to the advertising manager of the Rainier Brewing Company, and with his permission a banner advertising the picture, as well as the Rainier product, whatever it is, was attached to the rear of every one of the dozen trucks of the brewery and was borne around the streets of Frisco for the full week of the Portola's engagement.

New Fox Star Proves Hit at Dayton

Gill Burrows, manager of the New Auditorium theatre, at Dayton, Ohio, declares in a report recently received that Miss Shirley Mason's first starring production for William Fox has awakened other producers for the possibilities of this type of screen entertainment.

The New Auditorium, which Mr. Burrows manages for the Auditorium Amusement Company, has a capacity of eleven hundred. After the first day's showing of "Her Elephant Man" the manager expresses his regret that the picture had been booked for only four days instead of a full week. The business, he states, went far above his greatest expectations and has established the Fox star firmly in his locality.

White House to Have Pre-Release Show

When "Cynthia of the Minute," the new Gibraltar special feature, is ready for release by the W. W. Hodkinson Corp., a print will be sent at once to the White House at Washington, addressed to Mrs. Woodrow Wilson, and it is probable that the President and Mrs. Wilson will witness the new production in a private projection before anyone else except Arthur F. Beck, president of Gibraltar Pictures, and a few officials of the corporation.

Lloyd Ingraham Will Direct "Old Dad"

Lloyd Ingraham, who has two of the year's best pictures to his credit, "Mary's Ankle" and "What's Your Husband Doing?" is now directing Mildred Harris Chaplin in "Old Dad," a Louis B. Mayer production which will be released through First National. The story was written by Eleanor Hallowell Abbott and had its first publication in serial form in the Woman's Home Companion.

Many First Runs Book "The Sagebrusher"

Benjamin B. Hampton apparently showed good judgment when he chose Emerson Hough's famous novel, "The Sagebrusher," for screening as a Great Authors' picture for distribution through the Hodkinson organization. "The Sagebrusher" has been booked by days are the Auditorium, Rapid City, S. D.; the Lucille, Chicago; the Broadway, Albert Lea, Minn.; the Family, Port Huron; De Luxe, Detroit; the Princess, Benton Harbor.

Keenan's Personal Exploitation Succeeds

As a result of a distinctly novel campaign of personal exploitation conceived and directed by Frank Keenan on behalf of his own productions released through Pathe Exchange, Inc., five-reel motion picture dramas are finding their way into schools and colleges.

Mr. Keenan has written letters to woman's clubs, American Legion and Knights of Columbus posts throughout the country, which are calculated to arouse the interest of educators.

C. J. Ver Halen, who has inaugurated an advertising-engineering service

"Doug" and Mary Congratulate Sennett

Both Douglas Fairbanks and Mary Pickford, who recently saw "Down on the Farm," the Mack Sennett five-reel comedy at private showings, have sent congratulatory messages to the producer. The big laugh producer will be marketed through United Artists.

"It was one of the funniest productions I have ever had the pleasure of witnessing," stated Miss Pickford. "Doug" was even more enthusiastic. "You certainly have ripped it up at a hundred and fifty miles an hour and picked flowers every inch of the way," he wrote. "The thrills you have injected positively make this picture 520 per cent."

Much Press Advertising on "Daredevil Jack"

Advertising campaigns, conducted by exhibitors in connection with Pathe's new serial, "Daredevil Jack," have been confined for the most part to straight newspaper announcements, in many cases full page ads having been used with Jack Dempsey's name displayed. Teaser displays have also been used; as for example, the insertion of a small head photo, cut just below the eyes, under the caption, "Who Is He?"

Eileen Sedgwick Coming in Two-Reelers

Eileen Sedgwick, remembered as the heroine in the Universal serial, "The Great Radium Mystery," has been signed by the Pacific Producing Company to appear in two-reel westerns. Her first is "Sergeant Hammond of the N. W. M. P.," which was written by Frances Power and will be directed by William Craft. Others in the cast include Joe Moore, George Williams, Robert Kortman and Joe Dickson.

George Sargent to Direct Vitagraph Star

George Sargent has been engaged to direct Alice Joyce, the Vitagraph star. Active work on this production began this week. Vitagraph has not yet announced the title of the subject.

Mr. Sargent was formerly stage director with Cohan and Harris

R. S. Cole's Speech Unique and Impressive

"Today we have the privilege of viewing virtually every production, not already contracted for by our competitors, and deciding whether or not we care to include such product under the Robertson-Cole standard.

"I want to make a statement that even the largest organizations would experience difficulty in uttering. It is this: I don't care what production is offered—whether they ask $100,000, $200,000 or $500,000—if we feel that the production is worth it, if we feel that our organization has the ability to get it back for us with a reasonable amount of profit we have the finance to go into that proposition.

"It puts up to you men great responsibility, because while we are ready and willing to give you everything you need in the way of the right kind of productions, still, you can appreciate the fact that we must be influenced a great deal by what you accomplish for us. While it is admitted that in the beginning you had a great many difficulties to overcome, we have spent much money with a view to overcoming these difficulties. When we took over our sales organization, it required the increased investment would come back to us in the way of increased returns. Then on the first of January, when I came back from Europe, when we found that conditions were not working right, we were again forced to put in a big investment.

"We never could hope to attain success if we gave you the privilege of pointing out to us that you could not do what you ought because your hands were tied. Altogether you were not in the position to give us the best of your ability, which was just as important for us to correct, as it would be for us to turn down a picture, because we cannot be in a position where you can make excuses. We must put you in a position where you have to make good.

"As we are fixed today you are in a position to go to any exhibitor and preach the Robertson-Cole gospel. In so doing we are giving you the material with which you can give us results. Mr. Kirkpatrick has tried at various times to tell you that we are not looking for an enormous profit in this business. We are not a big organization of men who are looking for a big return. The return in our business is distributed among a very few persons. In our quotas to you, you will find that we are going to give you a reasonable quota to attain, and that when we fix your quota we are going to put behind it a picture which justifies our demands.

"As to the ideals of our business. We have been doing a very big business, exporting, importing and financing various propositions; and we have, I believe, established for ourselves a very fine name in the business world. When I first became identified with the sale of motion picture foreign rights I sensed the possibilities, (which was proved in the returns we have had in the sale of pictures abroad), and it occurred to me that if that could be done abroad there was no reason why it could not be done in the United States. Up to a short time ago, the question of unquestioned honest-to-goodness money in motion pictures was scoffed at. Everybody felt it was not a safe investment. There were so many different angles to it. Of course, a lot of people did make money, but still a great many lost money. I thought that if the business was not just as straight as it might be, it was such that any man with ideals could enter it and try to live up to its ideals.

"I always said and I still maintain that the day that I feel the Robertson-Cole Company cannot remain in the film business and do it honorably and straight as well, leave the field. I do not care for it if our name is going to be dragged.

"We all want to make money. That is natural. At the same time there is happiness in being identified with any business where you have the respect of all.

We have never set out to achieve anything without succeeding. Were we to [illegible] were to produce pictures there is nothing that would stand in the way of our doing it. If we found that we could not place our product through [illegible] States in the distributing [illegible] would be chosen, we [illegible] would build our own theatres. I don't care about the expense involved. It may be a rather rash statement to make, no matter what investment might be necessary for us to make a success of our business, so long as in the end I felt that we were right, the [illegible] business would. However, I do not think it will be necessary for us to [illegible] or to buy theatres.

"[illegible] if you looked back about a year ago you could count on the fingers of one hand the independent producers who had remained in the business five years. What was the reason? They were turning out good productions, but they did not get a square deal. They did not have an organization that they could go to, which was able to properly exploit their product, they were forced to accept organizations to handle their pictures, on an inequitable basis.

"Now, if it was a good picture it stands to reason such organization would like to keep that picture off the market. Then came the haggling about the advance. The producer would finish one picture; he wanted money for the next. It had gotten to a point where he simply had to have money. The result was that after much negotiation he would give the picture for distribution to this competing organization.

"The condition in 90% of the cases was that when they got their advance they might just as well go back to their office and open their ledger. On the debit side their had what the picture cost; on the credit side they posted the advances received, and they might just as well have drawn a red line, because that was the finish of it.

"Now, we realize that if we could work with the independent producer and with proper organization, and working along lines where we could command respect for what we were doing, we could make a success. So we directed our course accordingly.

"We have your here for one purpose —to try to cement our organization so firmly that when you men go back you will feel that your success is assured. If you make a success for us and for yourselves, it automatically makes a success for the independent producer.

"When the independ nt producer gets his advance he simply hows it on his ledger as an advance, and sits back, and sooner or later further checks are going to start to come in to him. At the present time we have a great many pictures which have turned, and we send remittances to the producers every week, and this result is noised around.

"The telegrams of appreciation from the producers previously read to you should make you realize that whether they know you or not they appreciate the work you are doing for them in your efforts to build up a gross satisfactory to us, for in its turn it must be satisfactory to them.

"I know we have a good reputation. I believe our competitors realize that we are in this industry to stay and I think they are observing our progress and are watching us closely. They realize every time we make a change, every time we make an announcement, it is for the better. We want you to realize, that we are continually figuring what we can do in order to give you a product to sell that will have behind it our confidence, your energy and your enthusiasm, because you know we are offering to the exhibitor the very best that money can give him. So long as we do this we are going to command the attention and respect of the exhibitor.

"The exhibitor is continually faced with the possibility of competition from producers who may erect theatres in the exhibitor's territory and show their own pictures. Not one thing has happened in the past six months, or even in the past year, which has not been a boon to the Robertson-Cole Copany.

"As long as we step in and are able to say that we have not only a comparative product but a better average product, that means our future is assured, and you have a customer.

"As to the future, prestige is everything. If we can make the industry realize and then the general public realize that not only are we in this business to stay, but that we are continually progressing and bettering our position in the trade, there is only one possible result; they must take notice of it!

"I was rather amused this morning to hear that a rumor had been circulated that a competitor had bought out Robertson Cole. Robertson-Cole went into this business and struggled to attain its present position. No one could buy us out, and no other company is going to reap the benefits of our work. Instead of retiring from the business, we are going into it heavier and heavier every week, because we realize we are on the right track. When we get your men to realize that there is permanency in this, and when you see through the announcements what we are doing from week to week, you will be able to sit down and make your comparison and will be fully satisfied with the prospects for the future.

"In summing up, I want you to take this thought away with you: We are very much in your hands—I might say 99% in your hands. It is all very well for us to invest money. It is all very nice to have it to invest, but we invest it with the confidence that you men have the ability to get us the return which justifies the investment. I think you learned that we are in this business to give you the best the market offers. We work on the basis of getting not what is offered to us, but what we want.

"We want a good gross. We are giving you a product today that is costing 100, 150 and in some instances 200 per cent. more for our pictures. We are giving you a quota we want you to reach by May 1. Every week you will have something big to offer and book.

"I want you to realize that when we ask you for a certain quota by May 1, we do not want 90 per cent. of it, we do not want 95 per cent. of it, we want 100 per cent. and if you give us 100 per cent. we are going to be justified in giving you big productions.

"How many times have you told yourself that you knew your ability and that if you only had the money you could make a great success in life? Did you ever stop to consider that we are providing you with the backing to make such a success.

"In exactly the same proportion that you give us a return on our investment, you may expect recognition from us for the work which we do in every branch of our business. Every employee should realize that in some manner and to some extent such employee is a partner with us in our business. If we make a reasonable return on our investment, we are very glad to show proper recognition to those who aided us in obtaining that return.

"In view of this, it rests entirely with you to capitalize our investment by putting behind it your everything you have. In other words, Robertson Cole Company in the film business is going to be a big factor. We want you to grow with us and we want you to feel that, in assisting us to achieve the ideals we have in mind you may expect that it will be recognized. Many firms in this business are going to stand still, some are going to go back, but we are going to forge steadily ahead.

"I wish to instill in your minds the one thought as to our business. It may be summed up in three words—honesty of purpose. We insist on your commanding the respect of every exhibitor with whom you do business, whether he is paying two thousand dollars for the use of one of our productions, or paying only five dollars. We want every exhibitor to know that we are giving him a square deal, and we want every employee to realize that we will not tolerate methods which might be considered by an exhibitor as "putting something over."

Governor Smith Congratulates Exhibitors

SYDNEY S. COHEN, president of New York State Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, which recently held such a successful convention in Utica, N. Y., is in receipt of a letter from Governor Alfred E. Smith, of New York, in which the governor states that only the pressure of official duties prevented him from being present at the convention.

The executive has the highest praise for the patriotism of the motion picture exhibitor. "From my knowledge of the personnel of your organization," he writes, "I feel that you will rise to the responsibility of rendering a great patriotic service to your State and Country. The moving picture exhibitors of this country made an enviable record in the recent war, by enthusiastically responding to every call made upon them."

Injustice of Territorial Divisions

A. Dresner, general manager of the Exhibitors' Film Exchange of Washington, D. C., has given material for one of the most interesting articles on this subject, so close to the state right interests, the News has yet published. Turn to page 3069, and then let us hear from you.

Film Exports Largest in Past Years

MOTION picture film more than 50,000 miles in length was exported from this country in the year of 1919, according to a statement issued by the National City Bank of New York. The number of feet shipped from the United States totaled to 273,279,172 feet, of which 153,237,260 feet was exposed film. The value of this later amounted to more than eight million dollars, or an average of 5.3 cents per foot. The unexposed film was worth 2.2 cents a foot.

The amount of film exported in the past six years was as follows:

1915	199,000,000
1916	125,000,000
1917	166,000,000
1918	151,000,000

Editorials Brings Hearty Praise

their patrons really want. The returns from a typical mid-west State have been received and we are going to present producers with some data in a short time that will shock them. These figures are going to be of surprising importance to the film producer who is genuinely trying to make pictures that will satisfy the public demand.

"This data will be published in the leading trade papers for the benefit of the motion picture industry. We are assuming the entire expense of writing every exhibitor in the United States, and, believe me, we'll come pretty close to putting our finger on the public pulse by the time we get through.

"This is a verbose letter, I know, but we are in this story fight to a finish. Our department of education is training a large number of talented people in the technic of this new medium of expression, and we are going to stay with these students and help them gain the recognition so many of them so richly deserve.

"Thanks to such men as DeMille and Ince, a gratifying number of these new writers are at least being accorded courteous and sympathetic treatment. Many of them are making good with their free lancing and several already have taken staff positions in the studios. We are proud of the records these students have made and there is no doubt but what some of them wil be the big writers of the future. One student who came to us without any previous knowledge of either photoplay or fiction writing has earned over five thousand dollars in the last six months.

"There is even now an apparent aversion to second-hand material in certain quarters and we find that an increasing number of producers are beginning to consider a story from a standpoint of screen merit rather than of style and author-reputation.

"Recently we submitted an original story that was rejected simply because it was an original. This story has just been bought by a large publishing house for a novel and George M. Cohan has bought the stage rights to it. The producer who rejected this story because the author was unknown, and who could have purchased it one month ago for $1,000, is now peeved at us because we didn't tell him that George M. Cohan was going to buy the stage rights. Can you beat it?

"It looks like a case of the buyer not knowing the quality of the goods he wants to purchase. In short, he is afraid to trust his own judgment. But if Charles Wellington Booth offers him a story that has been published in the Friday Morning Stump, he just knows it is a good story and he digs deep and pays an inflated price for it.

"He doesn't realize that less than ten per cent of the patrons of motion picture theatres ever read the Friday Morning Stump and that less than five per cent of the ten per cent ever heard of Charles Wellington Booth anyhow. And worst of all, author Booth knows less about the dramatic and pictorial value of a scenario than many of our newest students, who at least do know how to construct a story for the screen.

"Getting back to your editorial, I predict that there is going to be a mighty explosion within the next twelve months. The evolution is going on now, but it will soon take on the form of a revolution.

"You have certainly hit the bulls-eye in your editorial."

Neilan Will Produce Abroad

Historic Locales to Serve as Setting of Productions

MARSHALL NEILAN yesterday made public his plans, on which he has been quietly working for the past few months, for the production of a number of foreign subjects in Europe. Mr. Neilan will take an entire producing unit with him including various famous players among which will be Marjorie Daw, who has achieved the success of her career in "The River's End."

Mr. Neilan will produce a number of stories in the different historic locales offered in England, France, Belgium and Spain and will be the first independent producer to take a company abroad since the war. In his absence from his Hollywood studios, various American productions on which he is now working will be completed there under his supervision, the details for this work to be arranged before he leaves.

To attend to advance preparations for Mr. Neilan's activities abroad, Harry Ham, his personal foreign representative, sailed on the Adriatic Saturday, March 20th. Mr. Ham arrived in New York from the West Coast recently. In speaking of Mr. Neilan's foreign plans he said: "The American motion picture public will welcome foreign backgrounds in motion pictures. For years we have had practically nothing in the way of foreign-produced subjects. With pictures offering the totally different locations obtainable only abroad, we open a new class of film entertainment since the war started.

"We intend to do foreign stories staged in the exact locale of the plot. An entire producing unit will accompany Mr. Neilan, including a number of very prominent players. I am leaving on the Adriatic and among my duties abroad will be the preparation of advance details affecting Mr. Neilan's activities there. The present plan is to have the entire company make the trip within a few months, or sooner if the many arrangements we have in mind, can be perfected before then."

Mr. Ham stated that Mr. Neilan would in the near future announce further details concerning his foreign trip, including the names of the stories he is to produce, which he said will be of international prominence. "We feel that we will have some very interesting information for exhibitors shortly," said Mr. Ham, "and realize fully the great opportunity of the fertile territory offered us."

Mr. Ham is American-born, but has been educated in England and on the Continent. He comes from a very influential family in European circles. His brother at present is American Consul General in Spain. As foreign representative to Mr. Neilan, Mr. Ham is particularly suited for his work abroad, having spent most of his life there. Mr. Ham has been connected with the motion picture industry for some eight years, and during his sojourn in Europe as an officer in the R. F. A., he had many opportunities to study motion picture conditions abroad since the war.

In the meantime, Marshall Neilan has just finished his second independent production for First National release, following "The River's End," which is said to be breaking records everywhere. Few details concerning this second picture are available at this time, although it is stated that Matt Moore and Marjorie Daw play the leading roles. A third film is now under way and advance preparations for "Penrod," in which Wesley Barry will be starred, has also been started. May 28th is the tentative sailing date of the Marshall Neilan troup for England, where the first film will be staged.

Comic Strip Boosts Monk

Universal Issues Cartoons to Exploit Joe Martin, Monkey-Actor

JOE MARTIN, Universal's almost human orang-outang and the central figure of many Universal comedies, is being exploited throughout the country by a novel method—the publication of a comic strip entitled "The Life, Loves and Adventures of Mr. Joe Martin."

These strips are issued weekly and sent gratis in six-column mat form to those newspapers requesting them. Already many papers have asked for the service. The series has just begun.

There is no advertising or Universal publicity connected with these "comics" except the name "Joe Martin" and caricatured representation of the famous monk. The subject matter of these cartoons is a varied assortment of humorous situations depicting Joe's adventures from the time he is lured from the jungle home with promises of stardom and high pay. The artist is Forest A. McGinn, a newspaper cartoonist, who worked on several middle west papers before the war.

Universal is planning to have Joe make a personal appearance in those towns where the "Joe Martin comic" is published. Many exhibitors have seized the opportunity for this exploitation and have arranged with local papers for the publication of the series.

Vitagraph Names Episodes of New Serial

Vitagraph announces this week the complete list of episode titles for its new William Duncan superserial, "The Silent Avenger." The titles are given as follows: "The Escape;" "Fighting Back;" "Within the Noose;" "Tearing Through;" "Blotted Out;" "The Hidden Blow;" "Dynamite Doom;" "The Crusher;" "Into the Jaws;" "Blades of Horror;" "Shot Into Space;" "Facing Eternity;" "A Human Pendulum;" "The Lake of Fire;" "The Final Trump."

Merit Film Acquires Pioneer Franchise

The latest addition to the chain of exchanges handling Pioneer pictures is the Merit Film Company of Minneapolis, which will take over the Pioneer franchise for the states of Minnesota and North and South Dakota.

The Merit Film Company is headed and managed by F. W. Thayer and is located in the heart of Minneapolis, its offices being situated at 206 Film Exchange Building.

Norma Nichols Cast In Ruth Roland Serial

Norma Nichols is a recent addition to the company supporting Ruth Roland in her next Pathe serial, "Broadway Bab," which is now in production at Los Angeles. Miss Nichols began her screen career in Sennet Comedies and has since appeared with Roscoe Arbuckle and Chester Conklin and many of the Kalem Ham and Bud Pictures in comedy roles.

Pioneer Office Opened in Cincinnati

Southern Ohio and Kentucky will in future be handled by the new office which Pioneer has just established in Cincinnati. R. E. Kerly, who for the past year has been second in command of the Cleveland office, has been placed in charge of the Cincinnati branch by General Manager M. H. Hoffman.

First views of three Paramount-Artcraft releases. Left—Thomas H. Ince drama, "Dangerous Hours." Center—Ethel Clayton as she appears in the Bronson Howard play, "The Young Mrs. Winthrop." Right—Mr. and Mrs. Carter De Haven in their two-reel comedy, "Hoodooed"

Canadian Company Increases its Capital.

The Sterling Films, Ltd., which holds the Canadian franchise for the handling of the Pioneer output, has just gone through a reorganization, with the result that a large increase has been added to the working capital. This will make possible the plans formulated some time ago for the establishing of exchanges in the western section of the Dominion.

The main office of the Pioneer in New York has been rendering the officials of the Sterling every assistance in order to make the reorganization a success.

Rogers Leaves on Tour to Place Features

Frank B. Rogers, who recently joined J. Stuart Blackton Feature Pictures, Inc., as general sales director, is touring the country in the interests of Blackton pictures. Mr. Rogers left New York City last week for Chicago, his first stop.

Mr. Rogers expects to place Blackton features not only in territory where they have not been shown, but for "repeats" in theatres where they have already played.

American Special Gets Heavy Bookings

"That the name of a famous grand opera singer is not without weight with the exhibitors when it comes to booking a special, has concrete evidence in the volume of signed contracts which the producers of 'The Honey Bee' are receiving, especially when that name is backed by histrionic talent and a charming personality."

Such is the opinion expressed by the American Film Company, Inc., in commenting on the bookings that have been received for "The Honey Bee" which presents Mme. Marguerita Sylva, the Belgian opera singer, in the stellar role.

Hallroom Boys Coming in "This Way Out"!

Percy and Ferdie Hallroom, inseparable for years, have had a falling out. As is usually the case, a woman is to blame—in this instance, a very pretty woman.

However, it is only part of the story of "This Way Out," an early Hallroom Boys release.

Georges Carpentier being greeted on his arrival in this country by John Adolfi, who will direct him in a picture for Robertson-Cole distribution

Carpentier Gets Big Welcome

Reaches New York on Tuesday Aboard La Savoie

GEORGES Carpentier, heavyweight champion of Europe and challenger for Jack Dempsey's crown, accompanied by his pretty young bride and his manager, M. Descamps, arrived in New York Tuesday morning on the French liner La Savoie. The Frenchman came here under contract to pose for a Robertson-Cole special, which will be directed by John G. Adolfi and produced at a studio in New Jersey. Work on this super special will commence Tuesday.

The welcome extended Carpentier was on a par with those given by the American public to the distinguished ambassadors of European nations during the war. From the moment that the Customs cutter drew up alongside the La Savoie at Quarantine with its cargo of newspaper reporters, special writers and celebrities of the sporting world, until the Carpentier party disappeared behind the portals of the fourteen-room suite at the Biltmore, the French pugilist was a very busy person.

Would he speak a word of greeting to the American press? The vanquisher of Beckett, Britain's pride, would—and did. He said in his attractive broken English and through his interpreter that his one message to America was one of thanks for the assistance that she had so generously given to his beloved "patrie" when she needed it most.

There was no doubt in Georges' mind as to which nation had gone into the world war at the crucial moment. He said: "France realizes the tremendous debt she owes the United States, and she shall never forget the blood spilled by more than 70,000 of your valiant sons for the defense of her soil and to save the world from the threat of autocracy."

"There is only one way of showing my appreciation of the United States," Carpentier said, with his inimitable smile, as the Statue of Liberty appeared off the La Savoie's quarter, "and that is by exclaiming, Vive L'Amerique! Vive les Etats Unis!" And Georges' homage was repaid by a cheer for France from his delighted interviewers and spectators.

Carpentier was quite reticent when asked to discuss his motion picture and fight plans.

Pressed repeatedly by the reporters for a statement on his proposed championship battle with Dempsey, good-natured, smiling Georges showed evident traces of annoyance. Then came rather explosively a volley of French.

"He says he is insulted because you do not ask him about his wife, instead of talking business," said the interpreter. The reporters good-naturedly acted on the cue but the information that they derived concerning Madame Carpentier and the romance that preceded their marriage was as meager as the fight intelligence.

"I am amazed," said the French pugilist when he was received by the lusty yells of a crowd of more than 1,000 noisy admirers on the pier as the La Savoie drew into her berth. And he was more than amazed when, after passing through the front ranks of a reception committee, he was ushered into West Street, where another crowd of more than a thousand fight fans had collected to pay him homage. Fans cheered him all along the route to his hotel. The warmth of the reception was very pleasing to the Frenchman, who saw in it a sign of the ever-growing friendship between France and the United States.

Carpentier was met down the bay by Adolfi, and John F. Reilley, publicity director for Robertson-Cole. Adolfi, who will be remembered for his work in "The Cavell Case," continued to register silence when asked to give an inkling as to the plot of the story Carpentier is to be starred in. "It will all come out in good time," he smiled as he bundled Georges and Mrs. Carpentier into their auto on the trip from the pier to the Biltmore.

Stage Play Made Ready for Metro Picture

"Indiscreet Wives" is the title decided upon for Metro's next special production with Alice Lake at the head of a notable cast. The picture is an adaptation of a stage play by Julie Herne, daughter of the late James A. Herne. Its original title was "An Outsider." John E. Ince, who directed Miss Lake in Finis Fox's melodrama, "Should a Woman Tell?" will again guide this young actress in "Indiscreet Wives." The production will be made at the Metro studios in Hollywood.

Hodkinson Release to Have Trade Showings

Trade showings of "King Spruce," starring Mitchell Lewis, in the Dial Film Company's vivid picturization of Holman Day's story of the Maine forests, will be held the coming week at all Hodkinson exchanges.

Three New Scenarists for National Films

Three additional scenarists will be added to the scenario department of the National Film Corporation of America's studios in Hollywood, Cal., to write original stories for the three Marion H. Kohn Productions' stars.

Press Gives "Jiggs" Comics Big Space

Hundreds of newspapers in which "Bringing Up Father" has been a feature for several years have announced to their readers the advent of Jiggs in motion pictures. Johnny Ray and Margaret Fitzroy, who are featured as Jiggs and Mrs. Jiggs, have been photographed and in scores of the papers the screen actors of the comedies have been compared with the original comic characters so well known to newspaper readers. Many tie-ups with newspapers and theatres for the mutual advertising and exploitation of "Bringing Up Father" have been reported.

Anita Stewart's Past Efforts Eclipsed

If reports from the coast are to be believed, Anita Stewart's latest production, "The Yellow Typhoon," by Harold MacGrath, will eclipse any production in which that dainty star has ever appeared, not excepting "In Old Kentucky," which is proving one of the big successes of the present season.

"The Yellow Typhoon" will be released as a Louis B. Mayer-First National attraction. It was adapted to the screen by Monte M. Katterjohn and the supporting cast includes such well-known film players as Ward Crane, Donald MacDonald, Joseph Kilgour, E. J. Brady, George Fisher, Mrs. Orlamond and Frank Tokunaga.

Assembling "Yukon" Film

Making of Robert W. Service's Poem Done with Much Difficulty

CHARLES MILLER started work this week in New York City on assembling "The Law of The Yukon," his first special feature for Mayflower Photoplay Corporation. Camera work was completed a short time ago when the company returned from Port Henry, N. Y.

The production is founded on Robert W. Service's famous poem, "The Law of The Yukon," which sounds the keynote of the poet's most popular volume, "The Spell of The Yukon." From the poem Mr. Miller has fashioned a most powerful story of life in the Canadian Northwest, it is said.

The keenest expectations have been aroused in the picture among officials of Realart Pictures Corporation, which will distribute it, and preparations were made to exploit it on a scale proportionate with its expected importance as one of the outstanding and notable features of the year.

Mr. Miller discussed his experiences in making the picture with great enthusiasm. The blizzards during the winter gave a picturesque background that, according to Mr. Miller, he could not have bettered even by taking his company into the Northwest.

"The storms, however, were not an unmixed blessing," Mr. Miller said. "They made it extremely difficult at times for us to make progress with our work. This could only be done at the cost of great physical exhaustion, and I believe the company is to be congratulated on the spirit with which they overcome conditions that paralyzed other activities elsewhere.

"For one thing, it was very difficult to hunt location. I managed to accomplish something, however, when a local inventor came to the rescue with an automobile sleigh, which was not only ingenious but practical. Of course there are a number of expensive automobile sleighs on the market, but this was a simple device for putting a machine on runners."

Locklear Forms Company

New Organization to Star Aviator-Actor in Feature Pictures

LOCKLEAR Productions, Inc., is the name of a new company formed to make feature pictures, starring Lieut. Locklear, the daredevil of the skies, who has proven in his recent triumph, "The Great Air Robbery," a Universal Jewel Production, to be a big box-office attraction.

Joe Brandt is president of the new corporation, Isadore Bernstein vice-president and supervising director, C. Eddy Eckels secretary, and S. L. Barnhardt treasurer. It will be noted that Lieut. Locklear does not appear in the list of officers and it is understood that he is leaving the business management of the company entirely in the hands of his experienced associates.

According to officials of Locklear Productions, Inc., it is planned to give the star full latitude to defy death to his heart's content in the forthcoming productions, but however sensational his plays may be, refinement and artistry will be the watchword.

Isadore Bernstein has purchased "The Air Pilot," Randall Parish's story, to be used as Locklear's first production. This novel was published in 1913 and now is in its fourth edition.

Locklear is not only an aviator, he is also a professional swimmer and fancy diver and motorcycle rider of note. He also has won numerous medals and cups in boat races and at present owns and drives the sister to Barney Oldfield's "Golden Submarine."

The executive headquarters of Locklear Productions, Inc., will be Consumers' Building, Chicago, and an eastern office will be maintained on Boadway, New York. Distribution plans are being considered at present and will be announced at an early date.

F. Lewis, Realart's St. Louis manager, who is making a name for himself and Realart in this territory

Floyd Lewis Becomes Realart Manager

Floyd Lewis, prominently identified with the motion picture industry for more than sixteen years, has been appointed St. Louis manager of Realart Pictures Corporation. To accept the new post, Mr. Lewis has disposed of his controlling interest in the Arrow Film Company, an independent St. Louis exchange, and will devote his entire time to Realart's affairs in the Middle West.

In 1915, Mr. Lewis opened the Triangle office in St. Louis, and he holds the record of having put over one of the biggest exhibitors' contracts ever negotiated in the country. It was with Cella and Tate in St. Louis for showings of Triangle pictures at a rental of $3,750 a week.

Mr. Lewis was connected with the Triangle company for three years and then formed the Arrow Film Company of St. Louis, an independent booking and state rights concern.

Mayflower Publicity Staff Is Increased

In line with his recently announced plan to launch an extensive advertising and publicity campaign in the interests of Mayflower productions, Isaac Wolper, president of the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation, has engaged Albert W. Meeting of United Theatres

Business Session at Chicago Adopt Important Measures

THE regular quarterly meeting of the Board of Directors of the United Picture Theatres of America were held at the Hotel Morrison, Chicago, on Tuesday and Wednesday, March 17 and 18, with President J. A. Berst presiding.

At this meeting many matters of importance to United Picture Theatres of America, United Picture Productions Corporation and the entire motion picture industry were taken up and passed upon. It was intimated that United would soon acquire another large distributing organization, deals now pending for the taking over of the company in question being in the process of completion; and full authority was given President J. A. Berst and the officials at the home office to act in this matter. It is expected that an announcement concerning this deal will be forthcoming in the very near future.

President Berst announced to the assembled exhibitors that United had just entered into one of the most extensive poster advertising campaigns ever inaugurated by a motion picture company. This contract was entered into because of the possibility that billboard space would be greatly curtailed during the coming year, and so United was making certain that their productions would be heavily advertised in this way. The contrast covers the territory tapped from thirty of the largest cities, in all of which United now has branch exchanges and calls for the posting of paper for a period of twelve months with frequent changes of paper.

It was also announced that over two thousand theatres were franchise and stockholders in the United Picture Theatres of America, Inc., and that the growth of the company was continuing in a manner which indicated that the three thousand mark would soon be reached.

In taking up the matter of new productions, a schedule was outlined for the next six months that will run to a cost in excess of one million dollars, it is stated. In the matter of production it was pointed out that United's first four releases this year included "The Corsican Brothers" with Dustin Farnum; "Women Men Forget" with Mollie King and an all-star cast; Florence Reed in "The Eternal Mother," and the recently acquired photo-dramatic mystery story, "Face to Face," starring Marguerite Marsh. Reports presented showed what an unusual success is being scored by "The Corsican Brothers," and at a dinner given at the Morrison Hotel on the 17th "Women Men Forget" was screened for the directors, the Chicago exhibitors and members of the press. It was pronounced on of the big pictures of the year.

Various constructive measures were passed at the meetings, which were most harmonious and enthusiastic throughout, and the following were elected as the executive committee to act until the next quarterly meeting: Harry Hall, of Troy, N. Y.; George J. Schade, of Sandusky, Ohio; C. M. McCloskey, of Uniontown, Pa.; W. G. Hartford, of Pawtucket, R. I., and Leo Brecher, of New York City. Ex-officio members of the committee consist of President J. A. Berst and Milton M. Goldsmith, Treasurer of United.

Three new directors were elected to act on United's Board of Directors to represent various territories, the three men having previously been appointed by the exhibitors in their respective sections of the country. Abe Goodside, of Portland, Maine; W. H. Linton, of Utica, N. Y., and H. T. Treffer, of Davenport, Iowa, were the ones elected. Mr. Goodside is one of the most prominent and well liked exhibitors in New England. W. H. Lintno, of Utica, N. Y., is the owner of the Hippodrome theatre in that city and is treasurer of the New York State Exhibitors' League.

Because of the fact that many pictures are to be purchased in the open market, the directors realized that an ample war chest was needed. It was therefore decided that every franchise holder would pay for at least three pictures in advance. In many instances, the directors themselves paid for ten pictures in advance, it is stated. It was the consensus of opinion, as expressed at the meeting, that with its two thousand theatres covering practically every city and village in the country, United was capable of purchasing pictures of the highest possible value from a box office standpoint.

Mayflower Features on Way

Announces Forthcoming Production; Circus Acrobat Starred

THE production which Emile Chautard is now preparing at the Paragon Studios, Fort Lee, is said to be based on a widely known stage play dealing with life after death. Actual filming has been completed. The director is now cutting and assembling the picture, which will be presented by the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation.

This is the first intimation made by Mayflower concerning the nature of the new Chautard subject. The title and cast are being withheld pending final completion of the production. It is hinted, however, that an important role has been assigned to one of the country's most celebrated spiritual mediums.

The secrecy surrounding Chautard's recent activities at the studio is declared to have given rise to considerable speculation in the trade. Mayflower's statement leads to the belief that the production now under way will be the most ambitious undertaking of the director's career.

In its announcement, Mayflower particularly stresses the timeliness of the forthcoming Chautard production. Though said to be totally dissimilar from "The Mystery of the Yellow Room," Chautard's previous picture, which Mayflower presented through Realart, the director's new subject will contain an equal measure of dramatic force and suspense. The picture, it is declared, will be lavishly mounted. Full details, including title, author and cast, will be made public upon final completion of the picture, which it is expected will take place within a week.

Bird Millman, aerial performer, has been added to the list of international celebrities appearing in motion pictures. The noted circus star makes her screen début in "The Deep Purple," R. A. Walsh's first independent production to be presented by the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation.

Ever since she attained prominence as a star of the circus and vaudeville stage, Miss Millman has been sought by picture producers, says the Mayflower Corporation. Contracts calling for her appearance here and abroad, however, have prevented her from engaging in film work, it is stated.

Miss Millman lately appeared in the Ziegfeld Follies. Her appearance in the Walsh production was made possible by the closing of the Ziegfeld show, two weeks before the inception of the circus season.

Miss Millman has already commenced work at the Paragon Studios, under Walsh's direction. She will appear as a tight-wire walker in an elaborate cabaret scene, performing many acrobatic feats, it is stated.

Upon completion of her work in "The Deep Purple,' the aerial star will join the Barnum and Baily circus, which opens its season at Madison Square Garden.

SIMPLE SOULS

New Films to South America

Trade Expert Advises Against Old Reels Being Sent There

ALL that is necessary to make an American producer, exporter or moving picture man prick up his ears, is to say, "South America," for the southern half of our continent today is regarded by many as the moving picture man's land of opportunity. Therefore, when John Robinson, newspaper man, trade expert, former theatrical manager and dramatic editor, reached Chicago last week, after a ten-months' tour of the South American republics, making a trade survey for the J. W. Butler Company, the largest paper merchandising house in the world, we said to him, "And how does South America look to you from a moving picture angle?" and got a reply which is a real close-up of the situation and gave us something to think about.

"The West Coast of South America, as well as the republics of the Caribbean, constitute golden soil for manufacturers of American films," said Mr. Robinson. "So far, the market has been scratched—that is all.

"My recent trip took me through Costa Rica, Venezuela, Colombia, Panama, Ecuador, Peru, Bolivia and Chile. In Venezuela I visited all the coast cities, as well as the gay city of Caracas, the capital. In Colombia, I made the Magdalena River trip to Bogota, 900 miles from the coast, and on the return trip went to Medellin, the rich capital of the department of Antioqua.

"Eighty per cent of the films shown are of American origin. But our magnates make the fatal mistake of sending down old, shopworn films. Most of the films I saw were from three to five years old. Just as soon as the South American finds out that he is being imposed upon by old films, and remember, he will find it out soon, then there will be a sentiment against us in a new direction.

"Our producers must realize that we must give the South Americans a square deal. These people are well educated, cordial, cultured and strictly up-to-date. They have plenty of money and spend it freely if you meet them half way. It is unfair to them, and to the reputation of the film industry, to send them shabby old reels that have gone the round of every ten-cent theatre in the United States before being exported.

"Their tastes in drama are very high. This is witnessed by the fact that the sterling actor, Frank Keenan, is perhaps the most popular male star in the territory I visited. A Frank Keenan picture will crowd any house all day and night. In Peru, when I was there, a serial with Grace Cunard and Elmo was doing an excellent business.

"Among our women stars, girls of the type of Anita Stewart and both Talmadge girls are well liked. Our vampire films do not find sympathy. Certain kinds of American comedies have not taken well, but my opinion is that the joyous fun of a "Fatty" Arbuckle film would find great favor.

"Love stories of the intense sort are wanted. That is why the Italian, of the European films, finds favor. The Italian film invariably is of the old chest-heaving and big-eye-gaze sort. On the other hand, a drama with plenty of action, a few killings, and an interwoven love scene, is fitted to the tastes of the people. But our Western cowboy film falls flat everywhere excepting in Argentine, because the people do not understand the type. In Argentine, however, the film would be a success, because the people there know the cowboy, although under the name of 'gaucho' from their own great cattle plains.

"Good acting always is appreciated. I do not believe we could possibly find a film that would be too high grade for these people in the line of acting. You must remember that almost every member of the elite in South America has been educated in France, England or the United States, and many of them talk far better English than we hear in our own New York or Chicago."

Exchangemen Well Pleased

Robertson-Cole Managers Enthusiastic at Convention Screenings

NOT the least of the enthusiasm with which the Robertson-Cole branch managers went back to their exchanges after the first convention held last week in New York was inspired by their views of "The Butterfly Man" and "The Fortune Teller," two special productions which are to be given to the trade as early releases. Introductions to these specials which they are to distribute during the spring took place in the ball room at the Hotel Astor at the close of two of the luncheons which were held there daily during the convention.

The branch managers went home with the feeling that in these two pictures they will have two productions not only easier to sell than anything which they have offered in some time, but which will make many future friends for Robertson-Cole. They declared them to be the best pictures of any make they saw while East and films which will stand comparison with the best which is being given the screen today.

"We are glad," said A. S. Kirkpatrick, vice president and general manager of Robertson-Cole, at the close of the convention," "to learn that all our branch managers sincerely share the trust that we have in these two specials. We believe that "The Butterfly Man" is the best picture that Lew Cody has made, surpassing even "The Beloved Cheater" which established him as a star of the first degree. So far as 'The Fortune Teller" is concerned, it is a picture which will stand among the classics,"

Current Releases For Paramount-Artcraft

"April Folly," adapted from the novel by Cynthia Stockley and presenting Marion Davies as its star, is the Cosmopolitan production which shares with Wallace Reid in "Excuse My Dust" the honors of the Paramount Artcraft release schedule for March 21.

Conway Tearle, well known for his leads opposite Norma and Constance Talmadge and Clara Kimball Young, is Miss Davies' leading man, having the role of the publisher-hero. J. Herbert Frank is appropriately sinister as the "heavy" and Madeline Marshall, Hattie De Laro, Amelia Summerville, Warren Cook, Spencer Charters and Charles Peyton are also in the cast.

In "Excuse My Dust," which is a story of automobile adventures, Wallace Reid is seen as "Toodles" Walden, the speed fiend; Ann Little is Dorothy, now married to "Toodles"; Theodore Roberts is "Old Man" Ward, Dorothy's father, head of the Darco Company; Guy Oliver is the mechanician, and Tully Marshall is seen as the head of the rival firm.

Says New Film Adds to Author's Fame

Because of the impetus given the success of Mary Pickford by "Tess of the Storm Country," and to the success of Norma Talmadge by "The Secret of the Storm Country," there is much curiosity among exhibitors as to just what "Polly of the Storm Country," the third of the Storm Country stories by Grace Miller White, will do for Mildred Harris Chaplin under the management of Louis B. Mayer.

Miss White herself personally believes "Polly of the Storm Country" the best she has yet written, and those who have already seen the finished screen product are quite sure that it furnishes the opportunity for the finest work Mildred Harris Chaplin has yet accomplished during her motion picture career.

McMackin Engaged to Direct Bible Series

Archer McMackin has been engaged by the Historical Film Corporation to serve as director in the filming of the Bible. Three stories are now being prepared by this company and production work is progressing. The first will be titled "The 1920 Prodigal," the second, "When Love Was Young," and the third, "A Letter to Philemon." Henry Christine Warnack is author of the stories and continuity and scenario writer for these subjects. The Historical Film plans to use the studio formerly occupied by the Rolin Film Company.

Capitol to Show Third Realart Production

"Sinners," Alice Brady's recent production for Realart Pictures Corporation, has been booked by the Capitol theatre in New York City as the attraction for the week of April 28.

"Sinners" is the third Realart picture to be booked at the Capitol. "Soldiers of Fortune," an Allan Dwan production, and "The Luck of the Irish." also an Allan Dwan production, and both presented by Mayflower Photoplay Corporation, were the two previous attractions to have their eastern premiers at the big New York house.

Ascher Leaves to Join "Evil Eye" Company

Sidney Ascher, head of Ascher's Enterprises, Inc., who is producing Roy L. McCardell's serial story, "The Evil Eye," in which the lightweight champion of the world, Benny Leonard, has the star role, left New York on March 19 to join his company on the coast.

Mr. Ascher will make his trip to the coast one of business and pleasure combined, and it is expected that his partner, Joseph A. Jacobs, will join him in a week or two before the final scenes are "shot."

J. N. Naulty Leaves For Chicago Studios

J. N. Naulty, general manager of the Eastern Studios of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has left for Chicago with John S. Robertson to inspect studio conditions there. Mr. Robertson will direct his next picture in Chicago.

Simplex Notes

That the modern industrial plant has many uses for the commercial projector is amply illustrated in a partial list submitted below which the officials of the Simplex factory have recently made public, covering Simplex industrial installations during the past four months.

Among the firms listed below are some that are using from one to three Simplexes, while one industrial plant uses at least twenty-four of these popular projectors, both on the road and at the plant itself. The number of Simplex installations in the mining districts are greatly increasing, say the Simplex officials, many of the lumber, coal and coke companies using the motion picture not only as a source of amusement but for the teaching of lessons in efficiency, safety and Americanism as well.

Since the recent Prohibition legislation has gone into force the number of hotels that are installing projectors has also greatly increased. The following is a partial list of four months' Simplex installations referred to:

Hub Clothing Company, Hinton, W. Va.; Solvay Colliery Company, Marytown, W. Va.; Northern Cambria Real Estate Company, Spanglers, Pa.; Stonewall Cotton Mills, Stonewall, Miss.; Greenbrier Hotel, White Sulphur Springs, W. Va.; Homestead Hotel, Hot Springs, Va.; Electric Furnace Products, New York City; Power Mercantile Company, Power, Minn.; Emerson Hotel, Baltimore, Md.; Sauntauglake Inn, Lynnfield, Mass.; Tuolumne Hose Company, Tuolumne, Cal.; Scruggs-Vandervoort-Barney (largest department store), St. Louis, Mo.; Jefferson Coal Company, Detroit, Mich.; J. H. Hudson's Company (largest department store), Detroit, Mich.; Statler Hotel Company, St. Louis, Mo.; Statler Hotel Company, Detroit, Mich.; Statler Hotel Company, Buffalo, N. Y.; Hotel Pennsylvania, New York City; Kobacher Furniture Company, Flint, Mich.; International Harvester Company, Chicago, Ill.; Standard Coal Company, Standardville, Utah; Liberty Coal Company, Bonnyman, Ky.; West Baden Springs Company, West Baden, Ind.; Wasatch Store Company, Castlegate, Utah; Wasatch Store Company, Sunnyside, Utah.

Goldwyn Releases for April

DURING the month of April four Goldwyn pictures that promise to keep up the record-breaking success scored by the earlier issues in this year's schedule will be released. They are Rex Beach's "The Silver Horde," Geraldine Farrar in "The Woman and the Puppet," Gertrude Atherton's "The Tower of Ivory," and Tom Moore in "The Great Accident." All of these productions have been completed at Goldwyn's Culver City Studios.

In "The Silver Horde," Rex Beach, whose "Girl from Outside" is still among the best selling features, is said to have written his screen masterpiece. The action of the story is laid in Alaska, the Alaska of the salmon fisheries in the Kalvik district, where a Wall Street syndicate fights to reap the profit on a silver horde of salmon when the claim rightfully belongs to Cherry Malotte, the beautiful heroine of the drama, played by Myrtle Stedman.

"The Silver Horde" combines dramatic vitality of "The Brand" and "The Spoilers" with the irresistible humor and pathos of "The Girl from Outside." In addition to Miss Stedman, the cast includes Robert McKim, Curtis Cooksey, Betty Blythe, M. B. Clynn and Hector Sarno.

Geraldine Farrar in "The Woman and the Puppet," a Reginald Barker production from the play by Pierre Louys and Pierre Frondaie, has the type of colorful character that she knows so well how to portray with striking effect. Lavish sets constructed at the Goldwyn studios supply a picturesque background for the stirring tale of love, hate and jealousy. The French authors, according to Goldwyn, remained true to Spanish traditions in unfolding the story of the Spanish cigarette girl who fascinates the aristocratic Don Mateo. The incidents are said to be intensely emotional as acted by Miss Farrar, Lou Tellegen, Dorothy Cummings, Bertram Grassby, Macey Harlam and others in a finely balanced cast.

"The Tower of Ivory," an Eminent Authors production made under the direction of William Parke, is an adaptation of Gertrude Atherton's popular novel.

It is a romance of America and England in which Barbara Castleton appears in four distinct characters. In the early part of the story she is seen as a half-starved, ragged-looking factory girl without employment and contemplating suicide. She next plays a dance-hall singer in a rough cafe on the Barbary Coast in San Francisco, where her voice attracts the attention of a wealthy visitor. From these roles she passes into that of the pet of her wealthy admirer, who pays for the cultivation of her voice that she may become a famous singer and the wife of an English nobleman.

"The Great Accident," Tom Moore's latest starring vehicle, is one of Ben Ames Williams' widely circulated tales. It appeared first as a serial in the Saturday Evening Post, where it attracted much attention, and later in book form. Harry Beaumont directed the picture with a cast including Jane Novak, Ann Forrest, Andrew Robson, Willard Louis and Lillian Langdon.

D. Z. Doty Joins Universal

Experienced Editor to Be "Plot Doctor" in Los Angeles Studio

DOUGLAS Z. DOTY has joined the Universal forces and is now on his way to Los Angeles where he will create a new post in the Universal scenario department. He will be the Universal literary advisor and "plot doctor."

This is said to be a new department in the film editorial field and Universal, in conceiving the importance of this work, selected Mr. Doty. Besides being a noted author, he is a magazine editor of many years' standing. After being associated as magazine editor with the Boston Journal and the New York Sunday Herald, he entered the magazine world exclusively and became literary advisor of The Century Company. Later he became editor of The Century Magazine and resigned to become editor of The Cosmopolitan. Recently he has been connected with the publishing concern, Harper Brothers, as fiction editor.

He has "discovered" and helped to bring out more popular authors than any other editor in the business. Among those popular novels in which he had a hand, are "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch" and "Lovey Mary" by Alice Hegan Rice; "Daddy Longlegs" and "Dear Enemy" by Jean Webster; "Molly Make Believe," "Sick Abed Lady" and "Little Eve Edgarton" by Eleanor Hallowell Abbott; "Home," "Through Stained Glass," "Taxi" and others by George Agnew Chamberlain; "The Jack Knife Man," Ellis Parker Butler; the novelization by Frank Bacon's "Lightin'"; the forthcoming Fanny Hurst novel, "Star Dust," and "Slipping McGee" by Marie Louise Oember.

Universal Announces Current Releases

Universal announces "The Road to Divorce," with Mary MacLaren as a special attraction, to be released April 5th. This picture was directed by Philip Rosen, the maker of several Universal successes. It is taken from a story by J. Grubb Alexander.

Among serials Universal releases for the week are "The Assassin's Knife," the ninth episode of "Elmo the Fearless," with Elmo Lincoln, and "The Furnace of Fury," the fifteenth episode of the "Lion Man," featuring Kathleen O'Connor and Jack Perrin.

A picture full of pep is the latest Lyons and Moran comedy, "Downing an Uprising." A new Rainbow comedy, "Champion Loser," featuring June Love, Billy Engel and Harry Sweet is the other fun maker for the week. The second of Major Jack Allen's Animal Hunt pictures, "The Story of the Wolf," also will be released.

Tourneur Finishes New Film for F.P.-Lasky

Maurice Tourneur has finished the final scenes in his forthcoming production, "The Pavilion on the Links," and the production is now receiving its final editing before being presented by the Famous Players-Lasky Co. The photoplay is a visualization of one of Robert Louis Stevenson's short stories.

The story has been enacted by a cast of good players, including, Jack Gilbert as Cassilis, Janice Wilson as Clara Huddlestone, Spottiswoode Aitken as her father, Tarry S. Northrup as Northmour and Wessley Barry.

Jackson at Screening of His First Play

With confirmation of the recent rumor that Arthur Jackson, playwright and dramatist, had signed a contract with William Fox to contribute to the screen through the Fox studios, comes the report that Mr. Jackson, well-known in New York dramatic circles, has witnessed a special showing of his first pictorial endeavor, and has pronounced the production superb.

Arthur Jackson is known to the theatergoers of the country as the author of "Scandals of 1919" a topical revue crowded with fun and frolic.

American PressBook Ready

Photographs of Principal Players Included in Aids for "Honey Bee"

A TWENTY-FOUR page "Honey Bee" campaign book for the use of exhibitors is ready for distribution to exhibitors at the Pathe Exchanges. One of the outstanding features of this press book is several pages devoted to photographs of the star and principal players. This to meet a need constantly voiced by exhibitors that they want pictures of the principal members of the cast as they appear in real life off the stage. So here are full page half tones in fine screen of Mme. Marguerita Sylva, and also excellent photographs of Thomas Holding, Nigel Barrie, Albert Ray and Kid McCoy.

Another feature is a unique suggestion for a newspaper ad teaser, a sample of which stands out in color—dark blue and gold in the campaign book. What is required to accomplish a "smashing" ad is a few inches of blank space in a newspaper and some blue and gold "Honey Bee" stickers which may be ordered from the nearest Pathe Exchanges.

Some free admission tickets to the show would pay two small boys to paste these stickers in the white space reserved for the purpose, before the newspapers are distributed. An upper corner of the page would, of course, be preferable, and it is believed that this brilliant little ad will dominate the whole page. While this scheme is probably not feasible for a large daily of a metropolis, it will prove a winner in a smaller city.

In every department this campaign book aims to be practical. It offers a synopsis which is really a thumbnail sketch, "catch-lines" which will catch, and "Funny Spots" which are funny.

Metro Gets New Playwright

Eugene Walter Latest Literary Figure on the Metro Staff

EUGENE WALTER, author of "Paid in Full," "The Easiest Way," "Fine Feathers" and other notable stage successes, has joined Metro's staff of authors. The dramatist is already at work on a manuscript for the screen, according to the announcement from the Metro offices, telling of his acquisition by that producing and distributing corporation.

Mr. Walter is the third distinguished playwright to become associated with Metro within the past few weeks. The other two are Bayard Veiller, author of "Within the Law," and "The Thirteenth Chair" and Winchell Smith, who wrote "The Fortune Hunter" and "Brewster's Millions" and was co-author of "Turn to the Right" and "Lightnin'." These three comprise a formidable dramatic triumvirate.

In connection with its acquisition of Mr. Walter, Metro has issued the following statement:

"Metro's policy in placing the leading American dramatists under contract to write for the screen is in line with the often-repeated conviction of the company's guiding heads that the greatest need of the industry to-day and its greatest difficulty is to obtain stories by master craftsmen that will realize to the full the artistic possibilities of the silent drama.

"Mr. Eugene Walter has frequently been referred to as 'America's leading dramatist.' He won through to success after tasting the bitterest dregs of adversity. He slept on park benches in New York with the manuscript of 'Paid in Full' in his pockets, before he finally obtained recognition."

Blache to Direct New Metro Production

Herbert Blache has been selected to direct "The New Henrietta," the first Winchell Smith production for Metro, at the company's West coast studios in Hollywood. Mr. Blache has just finished directing "The Hope," the first of the five great Drury Lane melodramas to be released by Metro.

New Production Forces Active in Canada

A moving picture producing enterprise, possessing an imperialistic color, has been established at Montreal, Quebec, according to an announcement made by A. Reynolds Allison, an English playwright and producer, who states that he represents a syndicate of Canadian interests. The new company has been called the Patricia Photo-Players, Limited, and the capital of the company has been placed at $1,000,000; it is declared. The object of the company is to produce photoplay features and to exploit Britsh and Canadian releases.

Three men have been named in connection with the enterprise, these being Maurice R. Coste, William C. Smith of St. John, N. B., and Mr. Allison. The latter declares that the project is already well under way and that production will be started in less than two months. The first feature will be "The Re-Birth of a Nation", it is announced, and this picture will depict post-war developments in Canada, it is claimed.

In connection with activities in the Canadian moving picture producing field, announcement has been made that the studio at Trenton, Ontario, is now being used for the making of one-reel comedies under the direction of Jean Hornbostel, formerly with the World Picture Corporation of New York. The first of these comedies is called "Oh Joy" and the principals include Edna Hume, Evelyn Florence and Albert E. H. Grupe.

"Just a Wife" Pleases Rochester Manager

The Regent Theatre, of Rochester, N. Y., one of the leading motion picture theatres in the Eastern part of the United States, was the first to wire congratulations to Lewis J. Selznick upon the excellence of "Just a Wife," the initial release of National Picture Theatres, Inc.

The Regent wire was sent immediately upon the conclusion of the presentation in Rochester of the production, and coincidental with the release of the picture which is being distributed to exhibitors throughout the country. The opinion was expressed by the management of the Regent that the feature should prove a record box office attraction.

Mabel McQuade, playing one of the principal roles in the Schomer-Ross production, "The Hidden Light"

Mabel McQuade Seen in Important Role

Mabel McQuade, who will be remembered for her splendid performance with Virginia Pearson in "Impossible Catherine" will next be seen in one of the principal roles in the Schomer-Ross production "The Hidden Light."

Miss McQuade came into the motion picture fold about two years ago and has been making rapid strides to stardom. From her recent contributions to silent drama there is every reason to believe that this young artist will soon realize the fulfillment of her great ambition to attain eminent heights through sincere and conscientious efforts.

Mayflower May Concentrate on Coast

The Mayflower Photoplay Corporation may possibly concentrate all its production forces on the Pacific Coast, according to a report emanating from the Paragon Studio in Fort Lee, where Emile Chautard and R. A. Walsh are now making their productions.

It was learned at the studio today that the Mayflower lease expires early in April and Isaac Wolper, president of the company, is seriously considering the advisability of sending both the Walsh and Chautard companies to Los Angeles where Allan Dwan and Sidney A. Franklin are now working.

Laemmle, en Route to Coast, Tells Plans

Carl Laemmle, president of Universal Film Company, spent three days in Chicago last week on his way to Universal City. Mr. Laemmle expressed himself as most optimistic in regard to the future of Universal and its big list of feature and short reel pictures.

He stated that no new manager had been appointed, as yet, for Universal City, but that during his six weeks' or two months' stay on the coast, he will personally take charge of his company's big production center. He also announced that Carmel Myers has just signed a contract for three years to appear in Universal pictures and that it is his intention to sign up a fifth star at an early date.

Super-Special Now Available

THROUGH a change of plans decided upon late last week, in deference to insistent requests from many leading first-run exhibitors, the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation will release the Paramount-Artcraft super-special, "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," in which John Barrymore is starred, on March 28, and on that date the production will open an engagement at the Rivoli theatre, New York City.

"It was our original intention," said S. R. Kent, sales manager, "to release 'Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde' early in June, as a fitting subject to offset the slump in theatre patronage which usually makes itself keenly felt at that time of year. But so many exhibitors had heard such great things about the picture and made known their desire to have it released now that I got into long-distance communication with Mr. Lichtman, with the result that we are releasing it immediately.

"I have no hesitation in saying that the picture is not only the most perfect production made on the screen by John Barrymore, but it embodies the greatest acting ever contributed to the stage or screen by an American artist. Moreover, it is a remarkable example of what close co-operation can accomplish, for I understand that throughout its production the star was in constant consultation with Director John Robertson and Clara Beranger, who prepared the scenario from Stevenson's work."

A unique and intensely interesting plot has preserved for more than forty years the popularity of Robert Louis Stevenson's "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde." When the novel was first published in a cheap shilling edition almost 250,000 copies were disposed of in a brief period, and today the strength of Stevenson's literary reputation and popularity of "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" are such that the book sales run into thousands annually.

Probably no other author has ever conceived a more striking theme than the transition of personalities. Urged on by the temptation to satisfy his evil desires in security, Dr. Jekyll, a kind, respected member of the community, experiments with chemical formulas until he can change his own identity into that of an entirely different being. Not only does the man change mentally and spiritually from his former self, but his physical characteristics are debased and blackened in the change to Mr. Hyde.

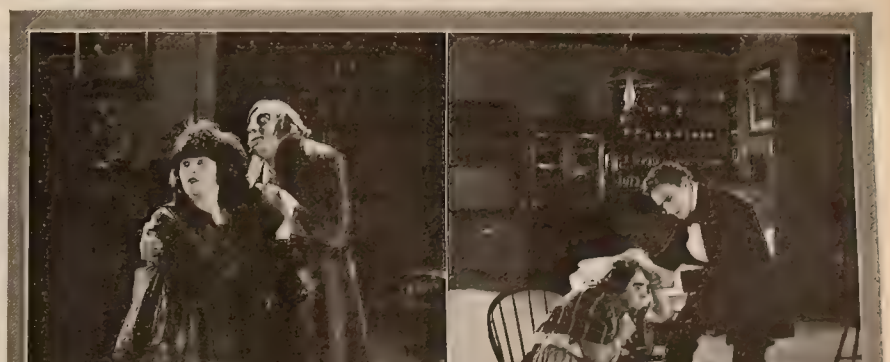
The vivid action of the story, which was published for the first time in the stern Victorian era, caused it to be classified as a "shocker," and this was responsible for the cheap edition which marked its initial appearance. Subsequently its intrinsic merit as a work of literature was recognized.

It was a no less eminent authority than Lloyd Osbourne, step-son of Stevenson and collaborator with him in some of his later works, who having seen Mr. Barrymore's Jekyll and Hyde in the Famous Players-Lasky projection room, declared: "Mansfield was the greatest Jekyll and Hyde of his generation without a doubt, but John Barrymore has gone him one better. It is doubtful if there will be another such portrayal in this generation or the next."

The world owes a great debt to Mansfield, however, for it was he who suggested to Thomas Russell Sullivan the writing of a dramatic version of the Stevenson story, and it was first acted by him May 9, 1887, at the Boston Museum, Boston, Mass. The following September it was presented at the Madison Square theatre, New York.

The leading feminine role of Millicent Carew is taken by Martha Mansfield, the latest beauty to make her way into motion pictures via the Ziegfeld Follies. In addition to her great beauty, Miss Mansfield has acting ability far above the ordinary. She has played in numerous Broadway successes, notably "The Century Girl," while in pictures she has appeared in all the Max Linder comedies and with Eugene O'Brien in "The Perfect Lover."

Brandon Hurst, who plays Sir George Carew, is an English actor who is particularly gifted in striking character roles. As the district attorney in "Within the Law" and with Rose Coghlan in "The Sporting Duchess," he laid the foundation for a successful stage career.



Charles Lane, an actor of long experience both on the stage and in pictures, has the part of Dr. Richard Lanyon, while J. Malcolm Dunn, who plays the lawyer, John Utterson, first found himself playing leads in Drury Lane melodramas. Subsequently David Belasco recognized his ability and obtained him for the Irish boy in "Sweet Kitty Bellairs." Recently he has been seen in numerous Broadway runs.

Cecil Clovelly as Edward Enfield is accustomed to appearing in John Barrymore's successes, as he also had a part in "The Jest" and had previously played with that star in "Justice" and "Peter Ibbetson"

William Russell in "The Valley of Tomorrow" on Church Bill

A SPECIAL booking of "The Valley of Tomorrow" made, according to the American Film, at the request of the Rev. J. A. Kilian for his church auditorium at Melrose, Minn., is taken by American Film as bespeaking a broader and more advanced point of view on the part of the clergy both in regard to "movies" in general, and in regard to the portrayal of actual life dramas (which necessarily display elemental passions of humanity), in particular.

Commening on the theme of the William Russell vehicle and the motive that prompted the clergyman to make a booking of this production, the American Film Company, Inc., states:

"This 'Flying A' super-drama draws a vivid picture of virile Americans who migrated from the mountains of Kentucky to the broad plains and rugged mountains of the glorious West. The force of the old eye for an eye tradition, 'No Morgan sleeps till vengeance is done; that's our ancient law,' was broken by the mighty struggle of the hero of the story, battling with his own awakening conscience and the united reactionary stand of his kinsmen and friends. Of course, true to history, blood was shed. Was ever a battle won by imperfect mortals without heart-rending scenes? But through the up-hill struggle the higher concept of a more advanced ideal won out, and one could not leave the picturization of the subject without feeling 'the nobler nature within him stirred to life.'

"When the Rev. Kilian arranged for the booking of 'The Valley of Tomorrow' he was evidently perfectly willing that his flock should see American life pictured as it is laid bare in the pages of history."

"Penrod" Under Way Soon

Neilan Will Produce Tarkington Stories with Heustis Continuity

ANNOUNCEMENT was made by the New York offices of Marshall Neilan Productions, that the director-producer would soon start work on his adaptation of Booth Tarkington's famous "Penrod" stories, rights for which were purchased last fall, at which time considerable rivalry was evident among picture producers, for the motion picture privileges to the stories.

Initial preparations for the productions of this photoplay are now under way at the Neilan studios in Hollywood. Reed Heustis, one of the best known newspaper humorists in the country, has just been engaged by Mr. Neilan to write the continuity for "Penrod." Mr. Heustis is known especially for his personally conducted columns which for a long time have been running in a great many newspapers throughout the country. Besides writing the continuity for "Penrod," he will prepare several original boy stories to follow.

The "Penrod" stories have for the past several years appeared in various magazines including Metropolitan, American, and Everybody's. In 1914 the book "Penrod" was published by Doubleday, Page & Co., and proved one of the biggest sellers of the day. In fact, the demand for these stories among the reading public was so great that in 1916, Doubleday, Page & Co. published a sequel by Tarkington, in book form, entitled "Penrod and Sam."

Press Lauds Lloyd Comedy

Reviewers Hail "Haunted Spooks" as One of Best Comics of Season

MOTION picture critics of the leading Metropolitan dailies, in passing judgment on Harold Lloyd's new $100,000 comedy, "Haunted Spooks," distributed by Pathe, which played at the Rivoli and Strand theatres, proclaimed it not only Lloyd's best effort but one of the finest comedies of the season. The opinion expressed by the New York Evening Sun representative reads as follows:

"The most entertaining feature of the Strand bill this week is the Harold Lloyd picture, called 'Haunted Spooks.' The audience yesterday afternoon roared over its comicalities. It's the funniest motion picture comedy of the season. Lloyd's attempts to commit suicide, and his adventures later with the very human spirits, far exceeded the ordinary fun limit of screen farces."

Almost as positive that Lloyd's latest attraction is his most representative screen work, was the reporter of the New York Tribune who covered the Strand show.

"The true feature of the bill at the Strand is the Harold Lloyd comedy, 'Haunted Spooks.' There were moments when this picture drew laughter from every member of the big Sunday audience, and it made all the people laugh some of the time. There is more than a semblance of plot to the thing; the titles are amusing; and the business which produces the laughs is astonishingly fresh and diverting."

From the pen of the New York Sun and Herald scribe came the following praiseworthy comment:

"A word of blessing must be said for 'Haunted Spooks.' Harold Lloyd's latest frolic, for it has something of a spirited plot, some of the most diverting suicides ever attempted on the screen, and altogether is hilarious enough to cause even a medium to cease, for the time being, to take ghosts seriously.

"Dream Cheater" Comes

Kerrigan's Next Release, a Balzac Story, Scheduled for April

W. W. HODKINSON Corporation announces for early April release J. Warren Kerrigan's sixth in his series of Robert Brunton productions, "The Dream Cheater," adapted from Honore de Balzac's "The Wild Ass' Skin."

"The Dream Cheater" is claimed to be a noteworthy production in that it reveals an entirely new phase of the popular star's artistry. As Brandon McShane, scholar, dreamer and philosopher, Kerrigan departs at times from light comedy and romance and gives the public a real glimpse of his abilities as a dramatic actor.

Unusual dramatic strength is obtained by sudden and striking contrasts in the production. The hero's happy boyhood stands out in relief against the tragedies which follow, his former wealth contrasts with his want, his superstition and fear give way to the light of truth and understanding.

Fritzi Brunette plays opposite the star in his fourth successive Hodkinson release. Among the other screen favorites who support Kerrigan in "The Dream Cheater" are: Sam Sothern, a brother of the celebrated E. H., and Joseph J. Dowling, who played the Patriarch in "The Miracle Man." Aggie Herring and Thomas Guise have excellent character parts and Alice Wilson is seen as Mimi Gascoigne, an unscrupulous social climber. The picture was directed by Ernest C. Warde.

Re-Issue of Talmadge Picture Planned

Joe Brandt, general representative of the National Film Corporation of America, announces that this company is contemplating the re-issue of their first Norma Talmadge production entitled, "Captivating Mary Carstairs."

"Captivating Mary Carstairs" was produced by National several years ago and met with success wherever it was shown. The call for Talmadge pictures has become so great that National has decided to answer the insistent demands from exhibitors to re-issue this picture. It will be marketed on the states rights plan.

Universal Makes Story of English Authoress

Universal is producing a photoplay by a prominent London society woman. She is the Baroness de Meyer, and her story, written under the name "Clothes and Treachery," is being filmed as "The Devil's Pass Key" by Eric von Stroheim, the director of "Blind Husbands."

The Baroness, who now makes her home in New York, has written many magazine stories. She also is the authoress of a novel, "Nadine Narska," published several years ago. In her screen story, now "The Devil's Pass Key," she has woven much of the life and intrigues of Paris, in which she lived for many years.

"Shore Acres" Now Completed

Picture Directed by Rex Ingram Stars Alice Lake

"SHORE ACRES," the Metro picturization of James A. Herne's drama of New England life, with Alice Lake, heading a strong cast, was one of the first plays in the history of the American theatre to achieve the run of "a hundred nights." In 1892, when "Shore Acres" was first produced, three months in the same playhouse was a long period of time for any production to last, and the record made by the Herne play at the Boston Museum was considered as nothing short of phenomenal.

This record of "Shore Acres" is especially remarkable in view of the great difficulty its author, James A. Herne, had in getting his play produced. Mr. Herne was the American theatre's first apostle of realism, and his methods of simplicity and naturalism in attaining dramatic effects were bitterly opposed by the producing managers of the day, who catered to the tastes of a public nourished on a dramatic fare of cheap artificial clap-trap and mock heroics. It was therefore increasingly difficult for the author of "Shore Acres" to get a hearing from the men who saw nothing in his precept of "truth for art's sake."

It so happened that "Shore Acres" went the weary rounds of New York theatrical producers, and was time after time returned to its author, who was making so desperate a fight against odds. Mr. Herne had written and produced "Hearts of Oak," "The Minute Men," and "Margaret Fleming," but in "Shore Acres" he felt that he had achieved something new and something which, in a world where material interests hold full sway, would outlast the very theatre walls that housed its production. Time alone justified the faith of James A. Herne.

The script was finally presented to Mr. Field of the Boston Museum, who at length accepted the play for production largely on the strength of a letter written him by William Dean Howells, a close friend of the author.

In speaking of its first appearance before the public, Hamlin Garland, the novelist, said:

"That glorious night at the Boston Museum, when 'Shore Acres' began its golden tale of a hundred nights, and telegrams from New York poured in upon Mr. Herne offering 'time' that formerly he had begged for."

This was the commencement of a record in play production that has remained unequalled in the American theatre. It marked the beginning of "Shore Acres" success on the stage—a success that has lasted for thirty years, and established a new school of dramatic craftsmanship. And in addition it marked the beginning of easier times for Mr. Herne, for the play earned a fortune for him. Following its record run at the Boston Museum, Mr. Herne played the famous drama of New England life throughout the country, so that its very title became a household word.

The screen production of "Shore Acres" just completed by Metro, with Alice Lake as the featured player, constitutes a notable achievement on the silver-sheet. In the picturization are contained all the qualities that were part of its authors ideals, and which made the play for nearly thirty years the greatest American drama. Rex Ingram directed the screen production and, among other things, achieved some exceptional photographic shots of a storm at sea and the wreck of a coastwise sailing ship.

Associated Exhibitors Active

WITH the arrival in New York from California of F. C. Quimby its general manager, the Associated Exhibitors, Inc., sponsors the news that negotiations virtually have been completed for the early release through Pathe Exchanges of several big attractions. It is also stated that the details of arrangements for several sources of future productions soon will be made public.

Close on the heels of this information, as to which Mr. Quimby and other officers are quite reticent at present, comes the further statement that it will be but a very short time before the hundreds of exhibitors who have expressed interest in the organization will have made known to them the full scope and workings of the sub-franchise part of the Associated Exhibitors' plans.

It is understood that Mr. Quimby cut short his visit to the Coast because of a vitally important proposition that developed in New York during his absence, and which now is in the process of being welded into a potentially powerful part of the co-operative machine under whose workings every factor in the industry will benefit, it is asserted.

At present the Associated Exhibitors are being represented in California by Harry Crandall, treasurer of the association and owner of a string of theatres in Washington, D. C., who is known to be carrying on many of the negotiations started by Mrs. Quimby, as well as opening new channels of benefit to all concerned. Information from Los Angeles is to the effect that several big stars, directors and authors soon will begin work in the furtherance of the plans of the Associated Exhibitors, but that definite announcement as to names and connections cannot be made at present because of existing contracts.

Meanwhile the organization is working with enthusiastic activity, marshaling its various component parts into a co-ordinate unit powerful enough to make itself one of the biggest factors in the industry the moment its opening gun is fired. This is possible, it is said, largely through the power of Pathe Exchange, Inc., and the courses laid out through the experience and judgment of men like Paul Brunet, Messmore Kendall, Edward Bowes and many of the other prominent persons who are already connected with the organization.

When seen at his offices Mr. Quimby was very reticent as to what he had accomplished in California.

Universal Will Star Anne Cornwall

Anne Cornwall is the little star whom Universal has been so mysterious about in connection with "Virginia," the story by Ida M. Evans that is to be put into production shortly at Universal City.

Universal announced the forthcoming production of the picture several weeks ago, withholding the name of the featured player. A new star was promised. It is understood that "Virginia" will be the first of many starring vehicles for Miss Cornwall. At present she is playing with Lyons and Moran in their first five-reel comedy.

Mignon Anderson Gets an Early Start

Mignon Anderson, the leading woman for Mitchell Lewis in "King Spruce," produced by the Dial Film Company for W. W. Hodkinson Corporation from Holman Day's novel of the Maine woods, is represented by Hodkinson officials as having had an unusual career during her early years, starting as an artist's model at the age of ten and becoming a member of the Richard Mansfield and Joseph Jefferson companies before her fifteenth birthday.

Walthall to Appear in Dwan Pictures

After an absence of several months, Henry B. Walthall will come back to the screen in Allan Dwan's picturization of Harold McGrath's novel, "The Splendid Hazard," to be presented by the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation. Mr. Walthall has been given an important role in the production.

Loew Circuit to Show American Feature

That the patrons of first class theatres give a "velvet" reception to "Jim the Penman" type of drama, is evident, and the Loew circuit of New York leads the chain theatres in booking this American feature, "The Dangerous Talent." Only in this film version the role of "Jim" is taken by an unsophisticated young girl, which adds greatly to the appeal of the story.

Eileen Percy Signs with Fox

Contract Covers Six Months; to Play with Mix in "The Untamed"

EILEEN PERCY has been placed under a six months contract by William Fox to appear as leading lady with various Fox stars. The first production in which Miss Percy will figure under her new contract is the screen adaptation of the Max Brand novel "The Untamed." Tom Mix will be the star in this Western drama, and Miss Percy will be in the chief female role.

In her latest picture "Leave It To Me" also a Fox production, the versatile actress did such fine work opposite William Russell that Mr. Fox decided to place her under contract for other male stars at his Western studios. She has already appeared with almost a score of the most popular male stars of the screen in roles which varied from the strongest drama to light comedy and farce. In each line she is said to have acquitted herself with equal success, and with each impersonation has established herself more firmly among the leading players of this country.

Miss Percy is Irish born, having smiled her first golden smile in Belfast. While still a baby her parents brought her to this country. Little Eileen received her education in New York. Like many of her professional sisters, she is a graduate of the convent—this particular convent being in Brooklyn.

Miss Percy received her early stage experience in the musical field. For two and a half years she was in the front rank of the famous Ziegfeld Beauties, starting with Ziegfeld while in her sixteenth year. It was while appearing with the late Gaby Deslys in the successful production "Stop, Look and Listen" that Mr. Ziegfeld discovered her and chose her for his beauty chorus. Later she was enhancing the beauty of the Cocoanut Grove atop the Century Roof when Douglas Fairbanks spied her and induced her to enter the picture field.

Begin on Vitagraph Special

Alice Joyce to Star in "Dollars and the Woman"; Gorgeous Scenes

ALICE JOYCE and a large company under the direction of George Terwilliger are commencing this week the Vitagraph special production, "Dollars and the Woman," adapted from the widely read story by Albert Payson Terhune. Lucien Hubbard wrote the scenario. It is expected that "Dollars and the Woman" will be released some time in May.

Miss Joyce plays the role of Madge Hillyer, a young society matron, married to Dan Hillyer, scarcely more than a youth, whose future is staked on an invention. The pair have been used to luxury and ease, but as the picture opens, they are beginning to find themselves in straitened circumstances.

Soon thereafter they plunge heavily on Dan's venture in getting his invention into the hands of a western magnate. In order to put up a successful "front" to the financier, Dan and Madge have to resort to many audacious expedients, including entertainment at the St. Croesus, modeled along the lines of the most gorgeous of New York City's super-hotels. One of the scenes, among the most ambitious of its kind ever staged for a film it is believed, is the dining room scene in which over 200 persons are shown. This scene was staged in the largest set ever built at Vitagraph's Brooklyn studio.

Robert Gordon, who recently co-starred in several pictures with Sylvia Breamer, is the central figure in this scene. Prominent in the supporting cast of "Dollars and the Woman" are Crauford Kent, in the role of Arthur Crews, Madge's rejected sweetheart, and Jessie Stevens, well-known in stage and film circles as a character actress.

Universal Manager In Portland Resigns

Sol Baum, for the past two years manager of the Universal Branch Exchange in Portland, Oregon, has resigned. C. W. Koerner succeeds him.

"The Toll Gate" Said to Be Hart's Best

Enthusiasm over his latest Paramount-Artcraft picture, "The Toll Gate," on the part of the star-producer, William S. Hart, is taken to indicate that it is certainly one of the best he has ever done—if not the best. It embodies the story that Mr. Hart has planned and hoped to do for the past three years, and when he declares himself thoroughly satisfied, "it should be sufficient evidence, says Famous Players-Lasky, that 'The Toll Gate' will come up to every expectation even of the most sanguine nature.

"Those who saw the picture in an advance running at the Hart Studio in Los Angeles, maintain that it is William S. Hart at his very best—the William S. Hart everybody likes best. Also there is much praise for the cast and for the settings, which are far above the average."

Pathe Records Broken By Lewis Feature

Breaking every record for Pathe feature business, "Other Men's Shoes," Edgar Lewis's first special for Pathe distribution, has won a place for itself among the great pictures of the year. Sales figures established by "Common Clay" and "The Thirteenth Chair," which have stood preeminent among Pathe marks, have been surpassed by "Other Men's Shoes."

Predicting that every theatre in Iowa will show the production, H. L. Conway, manager of the Des Moines Branch Office, has reported the remarkable success of the picture in his territory. Mr. Conway has just spent a week in New York, at the Pathe Executive Offices preparing the schedule for his territory in the coming months.

Pathe Says Mrs. Drews Comedy Is Big Hit

The tremendous New York success of "The Charming Mrs. Chase," the first of the Mrs. Sidney Drew Comedies, featuring John Cumberland, is being duplicated throughout the country, according to reports received at the Pathe offices. The entire series of six comedies has been booked for practically every first class house in the United States, and press and public have expressed strong approval of the work of Mrs. Drew in adapting and directing and of Mr. Cumberland's artistic work before the screen.

Realart Has First Runs in Mid-West Cities

With the closing of new contracts, Mark Goldman, Indianapolis manager of Realart Pictures Corporation, has reported to the home offices of the company that first runs have been arranged for all Realart pictures in that city and in surrounding key cities.

The record established by the first two Mayflower specials, "The Mystery of the Yellow Room" and "Soldiers of Fortune," has been maintained in the section by "The Luck of the Irish," recently released, according to an announcement of the company.

Fox Salesmen Compete for $20,000 Prize

There is unusual activity now-a-days in the offices of the Fox Film Exchange in West 46th street. For William Fox has offered twenty thousand dollars as prize money to the best ten salesmen. If there is a tie the money will be distributed equally among the winning contestants.

In this drive there are 140 salesmen scrapping for the distinction of being one of the ten winners. The salesman of the smallest territory has the same chance as a salesman in the biggest field. The prize money will be distributed among the ten leading salesmen whose gross revenue is the highest amount against the actual number of contracts they have secured during the drive. The drive will be continued until Saturday, April 10th.

Barriscale Picture Is Liked in New York

With a New York showing which indicates that it is going to be a popular picture, Bessie Barriscale in "A Woman Who Understood" is drawing big crowds all over the country. All New York likes to go "down to the Village" and it is saving the price of tea and crumpets on this picture, because in it Miss Barriscale is a Greenwich Village sculptress and has her own tea room.

Forrest Stanley is a new leading man who supports Miss Barriscale in "A Woman Who Understood." Thomas Holding plays the husband of the dilettante, which latter role is played by Dorothy Cumming.

Harry Durant Writing Again for "Legit"

Harry Durant, of the Famous Players-Lasky organization, is turning again toward the legitimate stage after several years spent in writing for the screen. Mr. Durant now has four of his plays scheduled for New York openings — "The Beautiful Virgin," with which George Broadhurst will open the Broadhurst Theatre early in the summer; "The Man Within," a Napoleonic drama with Jose Ruben in the title role, to be produced at the Fulton Theatre; "Neither Do They Spin," a comedy drama which Lawrence Webber will bring into his Longacre Theatre.

Educational to State Its Policy

Preparing Booklet to Advise of Policy in Future

ANNOUNCEMENT is made this week that Educational Films Corporation has in preparation its announcement of the future policy to be followed by the company as the result of its greatly enlarged activities. This announcement will be made in the form of an attractive booklet. Officials of the company state that there will be no effort made to distribute this broadcast, but that it will be sent only to those who are sufficiently interested to make the request on their own theatre's stationery.

Last week it was announced that Educational had acquired the entire product of the C. L. Chester studios, including the Chester-Outing Scenics, which will continue to be released weekly; the Chester Screenics, which will be bi-weekly publications; and the Chester Comedies, the first of which has just been given a pre-release showing, and which will be issued monthly. Work is already under way on the first product of the "Stereospeed" camera, the new invention of Earle Emlay and controlled by the Johnson and Hopkins Co. First of these pictures will be delivered to Educational within a few days.

In the meantime Joseph Lee, who will be concerned with special exploitation in connection with the Educational Films exchanges which are being established, is spending a considerable portion of his time out of the city, making special investigations under the direction of E. W. Hammons, vice-president and general manager. As yet only tentative arrangements have been made toward forming the general sales organization until a complete survey of the situation can be made. However, it is the plan of the company to make the New York exchange the model one and to bring those having charge of the out of town exchanges here so that they may acquaint themselves fully with Educational methods and policies.

"We are being kept very busy," said Mr. Hammons, "examining the material that is being offered us. It is very flattering to find that the great majority of the producers, both established companies and others who have not yet secured permanent distributing arrangements have the greatest confidence in our plans. We are earnest in our efforts to get the very best of the material, and therefore we always have time to go over such material as is sent us. However, we do not care to look at any material that is supposed to be a part of a proposed series unless the producers are able to give us assurance that the later product will be kept up to the same high standard.

"I am afraid that a great many own exchanges and since we began to give especial attention to one and two reel comedies we have had much of this material offered to us, people are unaware of the care that we have always taken in the past to assure quality in our product. I do not hesitate to make the assertion that in the five years of our existence we have gone over a thousand feet of film for every foot that we have bought. It has been no uncommon thing for us to take 15,000 or 20,000 feet and then accept only enough material for a single reel out of it. Since we announced the enlargement of our work through our a great deal of which we have rejected in entirety. Some we have accepted, others we have made suggestions on and it may be possible that later production will come up to our standards.

"We are going ahead slowly for a very good reason. There is a temptation when a company greatly increases its potentialities to do things more or less hurriedly. The instructions to each one of our heads of departments is that there must be no speed that will interfere with results that quantity must never be allowed to lower quality. We are delighted with the assurances that we have had from exhibitors. It will not be long before we are able to announce our complete plans, and we feel sure that our patrons will find that our structure is quite perfect when our doors are opened."

Realart Announces Promotions

Jay Gove, Ass't Gen'l Mgr.; Bert Adler in Publicity Post

JOHN S. WOODY, general manager of Realart Pictures Corporation, has announced the promotion of Jay A. Gove to the newly created position of assistant general manager.

Mr. Gove's work in connection with Realart advertising has attracted favorable attention, but his promotion also takes into consideration the assistance he has given in the development of the company's sales campaigns, according to the announcement of Mr. Woody.

At the same time, Bert Adler is promoted by John Pond Fritts, director of publicity and advertising, to the post of associate director, succeeding Mr. Gove and merging the duties of that office with those of exploitation manager, which he has successfully handled for the company since September.

"Effective this week," reads the announcement from Mr. Woody's office, "Mr. Jay A. Gove assumes the position of assistant general manager for Realart. I have for some time been searching for a man thoroughly qualified in every respect for this difficult post.

"Mr. Gove's work in handling the advertising of Realart is well known in the trade. This advertising has had unusual distinction, combining artistry with effective sales appeal. The part he has played in promoting Realart sales campaigns has, perhaps, not been given as wide recognition.

"But it was largely as a result of these campaigns that I discovered in Mr. Gove the qualities essential to the man handling the post of assistant general manager. I am sure his promotion will be welcome news for his many friends in the trade in all parts of the country."

Mr. Gove is a native of Illinois, but spent his boyhood in the Puget Sound country. After leaving school he read law for three years at Peoria, Ill., supporting himself by doing newspaper work at night. His interest in reportorial duties gradually supplanted interest in law, and he obtained employment on an afternoon newspaper in Peoria, going from there to Rockford, Ill.; Nashville, Tenn.; St. Louis, Chicago, Buffalo, Newark and New York.

His newspaper and magazine connections have included executive positions with the St. Louis Globe-Democrat, Post-Dispatch, Star, the E. G. Lewis publications and other periodicals.

For two years he was treasurer and general manager of a Chicago concern manufacturing pharmaceutical chemicals, and later, for a similar period, was president of a like concern with headquarters in Buffalo. This latter business was almost exclusively foreign, and the time and financial investments made in it were completely lost through inability to make shipments of goods during the world war.

Several years ago Mr. Gove entered the employ of the Fox Film Corporation publicity department, later becoming director of publicity and advertising. He joined Realart shortly after its organization as associate of Mr. Fritts in the direction of publicity and advertising. He has given particular attention to advertising and to assisting the general manager and general sales manager in carrying on sales campaigns.

Mr. Gove has traveled extensively during his connection with motion picture work and has met many of the first-run exhibitors of the Central and Eastern parts of the country. He also has a wide acquaintance among newspaper and advertising men of the United States.

Mr. Adler has been connected with the Realart publicity department almost since its inception and is a man of wide experience and acquaintance in the motion picture business. He was born in Brooklyn and educated in New York City schools. His early career was spent in the publishing business, and his first experience in the motion picture field was as publicity manager of the old Thanhouser organization and as assistant to Edwin Thanhouser.

Love and Adventure in "Trailed by Three"

An engrossing tale of romance and adventure, thrills and smart-paced action, and a plot whose innocence of the conventional element of mystery characters common to the serial play gives it a place as a novelty, is the promise made for "Trailed by Three," the fifteen-episode picturization of a story by Charles T. Dazey, co-starring Stuart Holmes and Frankie Mann which Pathe Exchange, Inc., will release April 4th.

From a standpoint of production, "Trailed by Three" is also something of a novelty. The action of the story swings from a locale of New York to an island in the South Sea group, and the trail of the precious jewels also transports the characters, plot, thrills and all the paraphernalia of the serial thriller to the Orient.

Newcomer Plays Role Opposite Williams

Gertrude Ellingwood, a newcomer to the screen-world, makes her debut in pictures in one of the principal supporting roles opposite Earle Williams in the Vitagraph production of "The Fortune Hunter." Miss Ellingwood's good showing in small parts opposite Marguerite Clayton and Jack O'Brian in "The Thirteenth Bride" and with Gladys Leslie in "The Midnight Bride" has won her recognition by Vitagraph.

Allen Receives Offers to Return to Screen

Major Jack Allen, the wild animal roper, who is headlining in vaudeville, has received several offers to return to motion pictures and make another series of outdoor nature studies. It is rumored that associates of one of the foremost distributing organizations have outlined production activities which "the nature man" is seriously considering.

Minter Release on April 4

Realart Feature Is Adaptation of Zangwill Play, "Nurse Marjorie"

"NURSE MARJORIE," an adaptation of the stage play by the internationally known playwright, Israel Zangwill, is announced as the forthcoming Mary Miles Minter release by Realart Pictures Corporation. April 4th has been set as the date of release. The picture was viewed recently by Realart officials and evoked enthusiastic praise for the work of the star and of William Desmond Taylor, who directed the production.

"Nurse Marjorie" is by the same author as "The Melting Pot," which enjoyed an enormous popularity in this country on the stage and in published form. "Nurse Marjorie" was first produced in London and later scored a success in the United States, its New York City production having a run of over a year with Elinor Robson as the star.

The adaptation of the story and scenario were made by Julia Crawford Ivers. The picture has an exceptionally strong cast, with Clyde Fillmore, well known as a leading man, playing opposite Miss Minter in the role of John Danbury.

Miss Minter has the role of Lady Marjorie, daughter of a proud and aristocratic Irish family. Mollie MacConnell, who plays the part of the mother of John Danbury, is well known in the theatrical profession through her affiliation with Charles Frohman productions for fourteen years and in repertoire with Richard Mansfield in the United States and England. Frankie Lee, one of the best known child actors in the country, has the role of "Orphan Dick," one of Nurse Marjorie's patients.

Vera Lewis, who has been on the speaking stage for many years with Julia Marlowe, James K. Hackett and Madame Sans Gene, plays Lady Donegal, Nurse Marjorie's mother. Arthur Hoyt and George E. Periolett, well-known character men of the stage, are cast respectively as the Duke of Donegal and Mr. Danbury, Sr.

Fox Star Will Lead Rodeo

Tom Mix Is Invited to Organize Western Pageant in California

TOM MIX, Fox star, has accepted an honor conferred upon him by the Motion Picture Exhibitors of California, and will lead the rodeo to be held by the Raisin Growers Association at Fresno, California, on April 30. Tom Mix was selected as best fitted to organize and lead the great event.

George F. Sharp, manager of the Liberty theatre in Fresno, and chairman of the publicity committee, sending to the Fox star the invitation to attend the rodeo, wrote:

"We would feel honored if you would accept. I can promise you that Tom Mix will be the main attraction, and the whole celebration will be built around the early pioneer days of California with Tom Mix as the leading light. Bring your cowboys with you, and we will have more on hand. The Native Sons of California's stage coach, the oldest in California, will be at our disposal on a special permit from the Grand Lodge of the Native Sons.

"The day's celebration will consist of the big pageant parade in the morning, automobile racing in the afternoon with the most famous of the world's racing drivers competing, and in the evening a grand ball —which we want you to lead as the most typical westerner in the country today."

Tom Mix and his twenty-five cowboys will move into Fresno on April 29th and be ready for the big show on the 30th. The entire outfit from Mixville will go with the Fox star, and the competition at Fresno will be of the keenest in the steer-throwing, roping, bull-dogging and broncho busting contests.

New Educationals Coming

Rothacker Will Make New Series for Greiver Distributing Corp.

BEFORE leaving Chicago for the Coast, Watterson R. Rothacker arranged to produce for the Griever Distributing Corporation a series of educational films, which will be released every other week under the name "Greiver Educational Weekly." Several of the films are now being made.

The scope of the pictures will be broad. They will deal with the high cost of living, relations between employer and workers and other problems of the day. Some of the releases will be on scientific subjects and others will have a strong Historical flavor it is said.

Mr. Rothacker has set a high goal for his production department in the making of these pictures. First, the pictures are to have high educational value, such as will add to the store of knowledge of the movie patrons who view them. At the same time they must be highly entertaining—despite the fact that they are instructive. The production experts must put artistry into the production. In the laboratory they must receive the same skilled workmanship as is given to the film prints of famous stars.

Metro Gets Additions to Scenario Staff

Metro announces the addition of Harvey H. Gates and Percy Heath to its staff of scenario writers at Hollywood, California. The acquisition of these two writers marks another step in Metro's policy of expansion, which enters its most important phase with the resumption of dual production activities in the East and West.

Mr. Gates' screen career he started as a free lance writer. He later went into the publicity field. This led to his becoming a staff scenario writer. Mr. Heath comes to Metro from Universal, where he was screen editor. He is a veteran newspaper man, with wide acquaintance and experience in many cities, because of his long service as a publicity man for Charles Dillingham. He has written a number of scenarios and achieved substantial success.

Campaign For Perret Picture Planned

Pathe Exchange, Inc., announces a special advertising campaign on "Lifting Shadows," starring Emily Wehlen, as the special feature of the Pathe program scheduled for release April 4th. Outside of the regular exploitation aids for exhibitors, the billboards of New York territory will be used to put over this big production in a deserving manner.

"Miss Wehlen is seen in an emotional role which taxes her demonstrated ability to the utmost," says Pathe.

Wyndham Standing is her leading man and Stuart Holmes appears in a villainous role.

Enid Bennett at Work on New Ince Feature

Enid Bennett, Thomas H. Ince star, is this week beginning work upon the production of Marjorie Benton Cooke's popular novel, "The Incubus," which has been scenarized by Agnes Christine Johnston. Elaborate interior sets which have for some weeks been in construction at the Ince Studios will lend color to the picture.

The new drama will be directed by Fred Niblo, photographed by George Barnes, and released under the Ince-Paramount-Artcraft banner.

Company Formed for Robertson-Cole

McGowan Productions, Incorporated, is the most recent unit to begin production on the west coast for Robertson-Cole. J. P. McGowan, who has been identified with the industry as actor and director, for at least ten years, is to be starred in a series of western pictures by this company, the first of which will be "Cold Steel," adapted from the George Shedd story, "In the Shadow of the Hills."

The supporting cast for "Cold Steel" includes Kathleen Clifford as leading woman, Elinor Faire, Stanley Wheatcroft, Hap DePew and Milt Brown, Sherwood MacDonald as director and John Thompson as cameraman. The company is working at the Robert Brunton studio, where all productions will be made.

International Film Issues Denial

International Film Service, Inc., has issued the following statement:

"One or two newspapers have carried stories currently to the effect that we have acquired the Paragon Studios at Fort Lee. We wish to make a denial, as the facts are not true. International Film Service, Inc., has but one studio, which is located at 127th street and Second avenue, New York, where Cosmopolitan Productions are made. This studio has just been completely outfitted and for the present fills our needs."

"Rio Grande" Released Soon

Play from Story of Augustus Thomas Is Picturized

WITH a record of many motion picture plays adapted from stage successes, Pathe Exchange, Inc., will shortly release another stage play made into a motion picture. "Rio Grande" from the pen of Augustus Thomas is the latest production of this character, and, from hundreds of inquiries already received from exhibitors, it is evident that it will be in great demand from the moment of its release, states Pathe.

The Pathe record of successful motion pictures which were originally stage plays is an exceptional one. The success of "The Thirteenth Chair" is rivalling the remarkable stage run of the play, and it is generally known that more than a million dollars was paid in at box office windows during the New York run of Bayard Veiller's success and to the various road companies, according to the Pathe statement.

Among the other big stage successes released as motion pictures by Pathe are "Common Clay," "In Walked Mary," which was staged under the title of "Liza Ann;" "Oh Boy," "The Narrow Path," "The Japanese Nightingale" and "A Woman of Pleasure." All of these productions have established records which augur well for the reception of "Rio Grande."

The widespread interest in the picture is believed to be due to the success of the many road companies which were sent out on the stage production. Not alone as a New York success, but on the road the play was one of the most successful productions of recent years, and it is reported to have grossed over a million dollars at the box offices.

As a stage production, the presentation was, of course, limited to the convenience of the theatre and to the confinement of the set scenes, but, in the moving picture production, the full scope of the story may be seen. The great plains of the Southwest, the cactus levels of the Rio Grande, and the mountains of Mexico form the background of the scenes.

It is described as distinctly an outdoor picture with one, two or three scenes taken indoors; but, in addition, it is said to be filled with dramatic strength and action. The love of a senorita and a cowboy, or rather the alternative love and hate of the senorita is the dominant theme; and an absorbing story of intrigue is built about it, according to Pathe.

"Several scenes of impressive magnitude," announces Pathe Exchanges, "have been staged for the production, notably a great dance in which one hundred couples from Mexico City participate; an a raid scene in which five hundred cowboys and Texas Rangers meet several hundred Mexicans in a cavalry combat. This is said to be one of the most convincing battle scenes staged since the creating of 'The Birth of a Nation.'"

The cast is headed by Rosemary Theby, as the senorita, and Allan Sears in the role of the Irish cowboy. They are supported by many well known screen actors and actresses; and throughout the production the touch of Carewe, at his best is in evidence.

"Sex" Arouses Much Comment

Louise Glaum Picture Startles Critics at Showing

EXCLAMATIONS of surprise and amazement, flat confession of having been startled and some few protests over having been shocked by J. Parker Read, Jr.'s latest Louise Glaum production, "Sex," are the emotional demonstrations that have followed the showing of C. Gardner Sullivan's big story to the critics of the New York papers, according to W. W. Hodkinson, who are distributing this feature.

Miss Glaum's portrayal of Mr. Sullivan's bold and challenging role in "Sex" has brought about, quite unexpectedly, an uproar in the ranks of the critics. Perhaps the whole thing is due to the choice of the title "Sex," but in all events, states the company, the feminine critical units have gone into quivers of excitement over the sudden discovery that there is such a thing as sex and considerable comment is the result.

No critic, it is said, dares to forecast other than a tremendous financial success for Miss Glaum's big new production, and the lavish praise of the beauties and the richness of the production are sustained by an immediate nation-wide demand for the picture to play pre-release engagements in the large cities on April 11.

To Jacob Fabian, the Paterson, N. J., showman and First National franchise holder, falls the honor of having the world premiere of "Sex." The picture opens a week's engagement at Fabian's Garden theatre in Paterson beginning March 29, and Charles Dooley, general manager of the Fabian enterprises, took this chance by rushing his opening after being told there was a possibility that the lithographs and certain accessories could not be definitely guaranteed of delivery in advance of that date. Having seen the picture with J. G. Rohlfs, the Newark manager of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, Mr. Dooley determined that if necessary he would make his own accessories for "Sex" and the date was permitted to stand in keeping with his wishes.

Trade showings of "Sex" are being held this week in the thirty-two cities where the W. W. Hodkinson organization maintains branch managers and sales representation and preliminary inquiries from first run exhibitors reveal that exhibitor demand for the picture will be greater than the demand shown for any previous special production released under the Hodkinson auspices.

Mary Ellen safe home at last in "Mary Ellen Comes to Town," a Paramount-Artcraft production

Picture in Its Third Stage

Has Reached the "Literary Era" of Its Development, Is Assertion

"FROM the standpoint of the man of letters, the motion picture industry stands on the threshold of its third great period of development. With this fact in mind, I spent the greatest portion of my time while in New York in interesting well known playwrights and novelists in the present and future possibilities of the screen."

That's the way William DeMille, on his return to California, summed up his activities during his recent New York visit. Regarding the literary growth of the photoplay, Mr. DeMille has the following convictions:

"The screen story first assumed fictional form. That is to say, the motion picture at a comparatively early date ceased merely to be pictures that moved of Niagara Falls or a railroad train. Stories began to be shown on the screen. Those early efforts were often crude and sketchy, but they marked a distinct advance in the progress of the motion picture as it is.

"The second stage came when these stories assumed dramatic form. The majority of photoplays produced today are in this form. By a process of experimentation, a separate system of dramatic construction was developed for the screen as differentiated from the drama of the stage. This stage has been marked by the entrance of famous men of letters whose works, either in the form of stage plays or novels, have been adapted for the screen.

"Today the screen drama has reached the threshold of its third great stage of development—the literary era. By the phrase 'literary era' I mean that the photoplay is now ready to develop a literature of its own. No longer will it be necessary to adapt novels and stage plays to the needs of the screen. Within the next few years, we will see many of the great writers of the world writing directly for the screen."

New Neilan Release in May

First National Will Distribute Picture, Starring Matt Moore

MARSHALL NEILAN'S second independent release, following "The River's End," which is breaking box-office records everywhere throughout the country, will be released the early part of May via First National, according to an announcement issued last week.

It was stated at the Neilan offices that the picture offers a title and a series of situations that immediately place it in the front ranks as a box-office attraction. The story is said to hold a big surprise in the way of plot and offers exceptional exploitation possibilities.

It is stated that Matt Moore, in the leading role of this film, plays a part that admirably fits his capabilities. In the leading feminine role of this photoplay, Marjorie Daw, who won great added fame as a result of her portrayal in "The River's End," again appears under the direction of Marshall Neilan. The part she plays in her newest film is entirely different from that portrayed in the Curwood subject and is said to be even better fitted for her accomplishments as an actress.

At the Neilan offices in New York, it was stated that to give out all the facts concerning the new production would interfere with various features of the National advertising campaign it will receive. The film is now receiving its final treatment at the Rothacker laboratories in Chicago, and a sample print is expected in New York the end of this month.

Capellani Picture Praised

Robertson-Cole Believes Latest Feature Will Excel All Others

ROBERTSON-COLE describes "The Fortune Teller," which is soon to be released, as the best picture to which it so far has put its name, and makes the further statement that it expects future special productions made by Albert Capellani, director of "The Fortune Teller," will maintain the standard which is set by this picture.

Robertson-Cole expects the French director to make pictures which will reach a standard equalling the very best which it has released. Capellani has just chosen a new story which will form the basis of the third production which he is to make for Robertson-Cole.

Mr. Capellani was born in Paris, France, and there was schooled in the days when the French led the motion picture industry, with the Pathes as pioneers. For sixteen years he was a director in the old Pathe studios, after which he became an independent director, making productions in all parts of Europe, and further preparing himself for independent producing which he took up when he came to America some years later.

Mr. Capellani is now engaged in making his second Robertson-Cole production. It will take several months to complete for the reason that great care and deliberation will enter into the making of each of these productions. At present Mr. Capellani is working in the East.

Promotion Given Approval

Wanda Hawley's Selection as Star Is Endorsed by Former Directors

AMONG the messages which Realart has received this week, following announcement of its intention to star Wanda Hawley, were three from directors under whom the actress has worked during the past several months.

Cecil B. De Mille, director-general of Famous Players-Lasky, is quoted as declaring: "I consider her one of the most promising young actresses in the entire motion picture field, and I heartily concur with your judgment in engaging her for stellar purposes in Realart productions."

Sam Woods declares Miss Hawley's elevation to stardom "one of the most completely deserved promotions in the history of films."

In his letter to President Morris Kohn of Realart, Mr. De Mille wrote as follows:

"Permit me to congratulate you upon the announcement that Miss Hawley is to be starred in pictures produced under the Realart brand.

"I am delighted also at the opportunity given Miss Hawley to star for I feel that she has long since merited a stellar position in the film world.

"In a number of my special productions, notably 'Old Wives For New,' 'We Can't Have Everything,' and 'For Better, For Worse,' Miss Hawley has evinced the possession of more than ordinary talent, and of a whimsical, ingenuous charm which renders her work and her screen presence wholly individual.

"I consider her one of the most promising young actresses in the entire motion picture field and I can only reiterate that I heartily concur with your judgment in engaging her for stellar purposes in Realart productions."

Mr. Crisp has directed eight Paramount-Artcraft pictures in which Miss Hawley has appeared as leading woman. "You can say for me," he wrote to Mr. Kohn, "that Wanda Hawley has won her right to stardom through youth, beauty and an ability to listen to reason."

Organize First-Run Houses

Neighborhood Exhibitors Plan to Make Their Theatres "First-Runs"

STARTING out with the determination to get the best motion pictures without waiting for the larger theatres to play them "first run," eleven Milwaukee exhibitors who own neighborhood houses have organized the Milwaukee Associated First Run Theatres. The combination will pay the first run price for every new picture accepted and will arrange for its presentation almost simultaneously in the several theatres.

The officers of the new organization are: President, Ernest Langemack of the Colonial Theatre; Vice-President, L. Plate, of the Climax; Secretary, Fred. Siegert, of the Regent; Treasurer, M. Rice, of the State. Other members are Earl Rice of the New Riviera; S. Bauer of the Venus and Atlas; Harry Berlowitz of the Climax; A. Dietz of the Savoy; J. H. Silliman, of the Downer and Astor; A. L. Bartlett of the Empire; F. Breummer of the Idle Hour; and Joseph Schwartz, owner of several houses including the Riviera and the Liberty.

In addition to combining for the purchase of the pictures the exhibitors have arranged a joint newspaper and street car advertising campaign to drive home the fact that the public may see the latest motion pictures in the neighborhood houses as well as in the downtown houses. The first picture selected for first-run presentation by the associated exhibitors was the Pathe special "Other Men's Shoes," an Edgar Lewis production.

Educational Release to Get Extensive Runs

Twelve full weeks, including Sundays, of pre-release showings of a two-reel comedy in New York is the new record claimed by Educational Films Corporation for "Four Times Foiled," the first of the new C. L. Chester comedies. Educational has just contracted with Mr. Chester for the production of thirteen of these a year.

This picture was given its first presentation at the Rivoli theatre during the week of February 22, without advance announcement in the trade press or mention in the New York daily newspapers, and was accorded an unusual reception by the audiences. So pleased was Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld that he sent "Four Times Foiled" to the Rialto, where it was shown the week of March 14, scoring an equal success.

In addition to this comes the announcement from Educational that "Four Times Foiled" has been booked for seventy days over the Loew Metropolitan circuit, including every one of the Marcus Loew Broadway theatre.

Fox Buys a Ridgwell Cullum Story

Negotiations have been closed with those handling the literary works of Ridgwell Cullum, whereby William Fox secures the world's motion picture rights to that author's western novel entitled "The Twins of Suffering Creek." William Russell will be star.

Once again after quite an absence Matt Moore will appear on the screen, being cast for the leading role in Marshall Neilan's second independent production for First National Exhibitors' Circuit release

Universal Contest Announced

HARRY M. BERMAN, General Manager of Exchanges for the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, announced this week the working plan of another national sales contest that is to be started next month among the twenty-six Universal Exchanges scattered through the United States.

Mr. Berman has named it the "$7,000 Prize Contest"—that being the amount of prize money involved.

A new idea that will be vastly pleasing to the branch managers is the group idea, as worked out by Mr. Berman. Under this plan, the Exchanges have been partitioned off into five groups and all the competition is within these groups. Thus each exchange, instead of competing against twenty-five other exchanges, will compete only against exchanges of equal possibilities. Explaining this, Mr. Berman said:

"In our sales contests heretofore, we have had a difficult problem, because there was no possibility of starting everyone equally. Conditions in the field make it impossible for every exchange to be absolutely on the same level. We have met this problem by arranging our Exchanges into groups of equal possibilities.

"In the first group, we have placed Salt Lake City, Butte, Portland, Sioux Falls, Charlotte and Spokane. These exchanges are about evenly matched; their possibilities are just about the same and they are capable of a neck race all the way through.

"It is the same with the other groups. Group No. 2 includes Denver, Seattle and Omaha. Group No. 3 has Indianapolis, Milwaukee, Kansas City, San Francisco and Des Moines. Group No. 4 has St. Louis, Chicago, Los Angeles, Oklahoma, Minneapolis and Pittsburgh. Group No. 5 has Cincinnati, Detroit, Buffalo, Toronto, Cleveland and New York.

Henry M. Berman, general manager of Universal Exchanges

"Under this system we have only first prizes. There will be first prize for each winner of each group. In the case of the first two groups the first prize is for $750 each. The prize for the third group is $1,000. The prize for the fourth and fifth group is $1,750 each.

"That makes the prize totals $6,000. The other $1,000 is to be competed for on a national basis; every exchange against the other. The winner gets the $1,000 which is to be divided among employes not on the sales force.

"We have just notified our branch managers of the new $7,000 prize contest and have not had time as yet to learn how they took to it. I am confident, though, that they will like it better than any of the contests that have preceded.

"The plan of determining the winner follows plans of previous contests. The business of April, May and June will be measured against that of January, February and March. The largest ratio of increase determines the successful contestant."

Mr. Berman said that the contest among the exchanges was being launched at the happiest time of the season. It ought to develop into a regular "Spring Drive," he said, now that "The Virgin of Stamboul" is just on the threshold of making a record in the film world.

"The exchange managers have been waiting for something like this," he concluded. Our last prize contest was tremendously successful; but we expect bigger results from the $7,000 Prize Contest."

While the regularly affiliated exchanges are engaging in this contest, Universal's independent exchanges also will enter the prize lists. The Big U Exchange, which handles the New York territory, has started the ball rolling in this regard by setting for itself a lofty standard and agreeing to reach that mark.

Metro Resumes Work in East

STARTING with immediate production of three big special feature pictures enacted by all-star casts, Metro will re-open its New York studios, at No. 3 West Sixty-first street, the first week in April. Announcement to this effect was made officially from the Metro offices.

The trio of stories selected for the initial three productions are "Clothes," the society drama by Avery Hopwood and Channing Pollock, to which Metro recently purchased the screen rights; "The Marriages of Mayfair," by Cecil Raleigh, one of the five Drury Lane melodramas on the Metro production list, and "The Tyranny of Weakness," a novel by Charles Neville Buck, just bought for the screen. These will be special productions, Metro announces.

Preparations, which included a complete renovation and remodelling of the studios as well as actual work on the scenarios for the new special releases, have been under way for several weeks. M. P. Staulcup, formerly supervisor of art interiors at Metro's West Coast plant in Hollywood, Calif., has been in New York since the latter part of February taking charge of the overhauling of the Sixty-first street studios, which have not been used by Metro for more than a year, since the Fuel Administrator's wartime order restricting the use of coal sent the Metro producing organization west.

"Clothes," the Hopwood-Pollock drama, is being rapidly whipped into continuity form by Arthur Zellner. Mr. Zellner and his wife, Lois Zellner, are both members of the Metro scenario staff. Mr. Zellner was brought on to New York from the Pacific Coast to write the scenario of "Clothes," and he will have his script ready for the director of the production as soon as work is definitely under way at the Sixty-first street studios.

"Clothes," it will be recalled, was Avery Hopwood's introduction to the American public as a playwright. His play, written in collaboration with Channing Pollock, had its metropolitan premiere September 11, 1906, at the old Manhattan Theatre, Sixth avenue and Thirty-fourth street, which has since been razed to make place for a department store. The cast presenting "Clothes" included Grace George, Douglas Fairbanks and that sterling leading man, Frank Worthington.

The story of "Clothes" is described as "the portrayal of feminine vanity, extravagance and capriciousness, and the disasters to which such weaknesses may lead." The drama scored an impressive triumph.

"The Tyranny of Weakness," which is to be an S-L Production, distributed by Metro, will be made at the Metro studios and have the benefit of Maxwell Karger's personal supervision. This powerful novel is said to be replete with intensely dramatic situations and deft character drawing that will provide an all-star cast with splendidly contrasted roles.

Eugene Walter is writing the continuity for "The Tyranny of Weakness." This is his first endeavor since joining the Metro staff of eminent authors, which also includes Bayard Veiller and Winchell Smith. Mr. Walter, who, with "Paid in Full" and "The Easiest Way," long ago established his position as one of America's leading dramatists, is enthusiastic over motion pictures and keenly enjoys his task of translating Charles Neville Buck's virile story to the screen. It will be the first of the five specials that Arthur Sawyer and Herbert Lubin recently announced would be made by S-L Pictures, Inc.

"The Marriages of Mayfair" will be given a production of the greatest magnitude, says Metro. This English melodrama is said to have all the punch and swiftness of action that made Drury Lane famous the world over, and as in the case of "The Best of Luck" and "The Hope," the first two of its quintet of Drury Lane plays picturized by Metro, will be interpreted by a strong array of talent.

Big Run for Duncan Serial

Heavy Bookings for "The Silent Avenger" Reported by Vitagraph

Gertrude Ellingwood, a real beauty who has a prominent role opposite Earl Williams in Vitagraph's "The Fortune Hunter"

VITAGRAPH issues the remarkable report this week that its latest super-serial, "The Silent Avenger," of which William Duncan is star, has been booked for a solid week-run or 105-day continuous showing at a big theatre. The Majestic theatre of Hartford, Conn., is the show house which has undertaken this unusual engagement.

Vitagraph further declares that "The Silent Avenger" had reached, in the third week of its booking campaign, double the amount of bookings signed in a similar period for any previous chaptered production.

"The Silent Avenger" announces a statement from the Vitagraph offices, "enters this early success on the crest of a campaign which has been forecasting it for weeks. The serial is the first of the million-dollar group to come from the William Duncan unit of Vitagraph. It is the production on which Vitagraph has staked not only thousands of dollars, but a tremendous new theory, it is stated. Vitagraph declares the picture brings forward for the first time a serial style of action and spectacle which depends mainly upon heart interest.

"The widespread response from exhibitors in behalf of this serial comes at a time when the market is supplied with an unusual number of chaptered subjects. The William Duncan production is declared to have universal appeal from the nature of its story and by reason of the established popularity of its star."

Goldwyn Companies Busy

Cast for "Madame X" Is Chosen; Will Rogers Completes Feature

AN unusually strong cast has been selected, it is said, by Goldwyn to support Pauline Frederick in the elaborate picturization of the celebrated drama "Madame X," started last week by Goldwyn Pictures Corporation at the Culver City Studios under the direction of Frank Lloyd. Little Pat Moore plays the part of Raymond Florlot as a child and Casson Ferguson appears as the young barrister. William Courtleigh is cast as Louis Floriot and others selected for prominent roles are Albert Roscoe, Sydney Ainsworth, Willard Louis and Lionel Belmore.

Will Rogers has just completed "Jes' Call Me Jim." After a short rest he will start work on his next picture under the direction of Clarence Badger. It is understood that much of the action in the story to be used in Rogers' coming production is laid in the west, affording an opportunity for the rope-throwing comedian to introduce a number of his cowboy friends on the screen.

Harry Beaumont is taking the final scenes for Ben Ames Williams' "The Great Accident," starring Tom Moore, and soon will be ready to commence work on Moore's next picture, "Officer 666," adapted from the popular stage farce that ran for more than a year on Broadway under the management of Cohan and Harris. Jack Pickford and his company, under the direction of Al Green, have gone to San Diego to take some big race track scenes that will be a spectacular feature of the production

Reginald Barker, who with his company spent a week at Truckee getting snow scenes for "The Branding Iron," has transferred his players to Sonora, where desert backgrounds will be secured for the same production.

Sidney Olcott has finished Rupert Hughes' "Scratch My Back," and Paul Scardon is busy on "Milestones," the cast for which will be completed this week.

Mary Pickford Busy Again

Starts on "'Op o' Me Thumb," Old Stage Success, for United Artists

CLOSE on the heels of the success that has been scored in every section of the country by Mary Pickford's first production for United Artists Corporation, "Pollyanna," comes the announcement from Hiram Abrams that he has received telegraphic information from Miss Pickford at her Hollywood studios that she has begun work on the picturization of the Maude Adams stage success, "'Op o' Me Thumb."

"'Op o' Me Thumb" created a sensation in London some years ago, and immediately after its success there Charles Frohman acquired the American rights for the production for his leading star, Maude Adams, and it was used by her during her successful engagement in the Empire theatre, New York, and afterwards on her tours throughout the country. "'Op o' Me Thumb' is from the dual pens of two British playwrights, Frederick Fenn and Richard Pryce.

Here again it is believed that Miss Pickford has been successful in obtaining a big story for herself, and one which will give her an excellent opportunity for effective characterization, for it has humor and pathos, and contains real human interest and feeling. It is the type of story that a whole town talks about, with a character that is appealing, effective and triumphant in its simplicity. There are moments in the story of tearful emotion and scenes in which Miss Pickford will be the sweet, charming, beautifully-clothed character of unusual joy and happiness. The central theme of the plot is laid in the slums of London, and Miss Pickford, according to reports, is going to present herself in a character totally unlike anything in which she has heretofore appeared.

Chester Nears End of "Wallingford" Story

A new character in national fiction and films is growing rapidly out at the Vitagraph studio. The company announces this week that George Randolph Chester, collaborating with Mrs. Chester, has completed the twenty-third chapter of his new novel, "The Son of Wallingford."

It is intended that the production which will be made from this story will be under way within a few weeks, and its release will occur at the same time that the novel is running serially in a magazine. "The Son of Wallingford" will be a sequel to the famous stories of "Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford."

Mayo Starts Work Soon on "The Red Lane"

Frank Mayo's next feature for Universal will be "The Red Lane" adapted from the popular novel of that name by Holman Day. It will be put into production in a few days.

The story ran serially in the Popular Magazine several years ago.

Blackton Presents "The Blood Barrier"

Commodore J. Stuart Blackton enters the last half of his first year as a producer of Pathe pictures by issuing "The Blood Barrier," considered the most virile of the five photo-dramas he has released through Pathe.

Issue of "The Blood Barrier," the last story of the late Dr. Cyrus Townsend Brady to be filmed, is set for April 11th, almost six months to a day after "The Moonshine Trail," Blackton's first Pathe attraction, went out to exhibitors. Meanwhile he has produced "Dawn," "My Husband's Other Wife" and "Respectable by Proxy," all of which have been big box office winners.

"The Blood Barrier," said to be different from previous Blackton offerings, is of a melodramatic type and features Sylvia Breamer and Robert Gordon in the leading roles

Doris Kenyon Popular in "Harvest Moon"

Doris Kenyon's popularity attained by the success of her first W. W. Hodkinson release, "The Bandbox" and by her over-night rise to stage stardom in A. H. Woods' "The Girl in the Limousine," is reflected in the volume of contract bookings received on her second Deitrich-Beck production, "The Harvest Moon," adapted from Augustus Thomas' famous stage success.

The cast assembled by Deitrich-Beck, Inc., includes George A. Lessey, Earl Schenck, Wilfred Lytell, Grace Barton, Marie Shotwell and Peter Lang.

William DeMille Back at Lasky Studios

William DeMille, producer of Paramount Artcraft special productions, is back at the Lasky studio, after a brief trip to New York for conferences with the officials of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, and to gather material for his forthcoming picture based upon "Conrad in Quest of His Youth," Leonard Merrick's popular novel.

Adventure Scenics from South

ENTHUSIASTIC over the reports given him of the success which is being won by Adventure Scenics, H. H. Brownell, vice-president of the Los Angeles company whic his making this new series of out-of-door studies, has gone South to begin the shooting of the second ten of the thirty scenics, which are contracted for by Robertson-Cole.

During the week he spent in New York with A. S. Kirkpatrick, vice-president and general manager of the Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation, Mr. Brownell received most flattering word of the warmth with which the scenics, many of which he personally made, are being received. Particularly he was pleased with news of the contract for the showing of Adventure Scenics in the Capitol theatre, the world's largest motion picture house, which recently has been pushing this series of short subjects.

Up to this time Adventure Scenics have been made in the West and Northwest. Now Mr. Brownell is invading the South, where he has in mind a number of picturesque locations about which he will weave interesting stories. These include "The Everglades" which he will enter and "shoot" from the very center of their jungle-like tangles. Mr. Brownell expects to send North the first of these new series within a few weeks.

H. H. Brownelle, maker of Adventure Scenics for Robertson-Cole

"I am very glad to learn," said Mr. Brownell, "of the success which our pictures are meeting. We are devoting the best brains and experience which we possess toward turning out Adventure Scenics different from and superior to anything in their class now on the market. I know the difficulties of this sort of production as I personally have made a great many of the pictures so far released. Both J. G. Sill, Secretary-Treasurer of our company, and myself have added all the originality we possess to the stories and central ideas of these pictures. We combined these elements with intimate knowledge of the Northwest acquired through long connection with other companies producing similar pictures.

"In the next phase of production we are going forward helped by the success of the first portion of the pictures. I have a great many locations in the South in mind and numerous ideas for stories. Our pictures are different from other scenics in that each of these has its own central idea or story.

"While I am in the South, Mr Sill will continue to make pictures in the West. About a dozen of the thirty pictures for which we have contracted with Robertson Cole are now made."

"The Tempest," which is the current Adventure Scenic release is one of the most artistic pictures which has been made in this series. In making it Mr Brownell obtained the unique effect of screening Nature in all her varying moods. This is true in fact and not in phrase because the actual movements of the sea, wind, rain, snow, etc. were made to register all the moods which are known to the human mind, it is stated. The release immediately before this called "Ghosts of Romance" is one of the most interesting Adventure Scenics which has been made, dealing with the relics of the Spanish domination in California several centuries ago.

Expand Brunton Organization

THE Robert Brunton Studios, Incorporated, is to be a five-million dollar corporation, formed under the laws of Delaware, according to plans that have now been perfected. A large New York financing concern is back of this Los Angeles firm, and plans provide for very extensive developments along the line of commercial studios.

The Robert Brunton Studios, Incorporated, came into existence during the production of Paralta Plays and was formed under the California laws and capitalized at $450,000. In the two years this company has been formed it has grown from a very small concern to the biggest of the industry; and at the studios, conducted under the supervision of Robert Brunton, more big feature productions have been made than at any other plant. At the present time no less than sixteen producing units are at work at the Brunton Hollywood studios. The list includes the companies headed by Mary Pickford, Mae Marsh, J. P. McGowan, Bessie Barriscale, J. Warren Kerrigan Bet Compson, Dustin Farnum, Annette Kellerman in addition to the two companies of the B. B. Hampton Great Authors' Productions, the six units making pictures for Selznick organization, three companies of the Mayflower Film Corporation and the Jack Dempsey Pathe serial.

The present Robert Brunton Studio in Hollywood consists of six stages, with all necessary adjoining buildings, requiring administration offices, property rooms, wardrobes, factories and exterior-setting ground. Very recently the company purchased ten acres of ground adjoining the property, and it is the plan to extend operations to this. The largest stage in the world is nearing completion at the Brunton plant, and will be ready for occupancy about May 1. Other improvements now planned provide for installation of a gigantic motor that will furnish direct current separately for each producing company, thus eliminating the possibility of a load on any given line that will in any way reduce the power or light desired. The carpenter shop where practically every article conceivable is manufactured is to be doubled in capacity, and a new condition has been installed which provides for building all settings in the carpenter shop in sections by the day shift and those to be installed and erected on the stage by a night crew, thus eliminating all noise on the stages during the day, when companies are working there.

It is hinted that the Robert Brunton Company will invade the Eastern field, but nothing definite concerning such action was given out at the studio by either Mr. Brunton or vice-president or business manager, Mr. M. C. Levee. Companies, coming to the Coast, have learned to know of the Robert Brunton service, and by producing men it is stated that such service would be greatly appreciated in the East.

"The increases in our capitalization and facilities at the studio," Vice-President Levee said, "are necessary because of the large number of companies using our studios for production. When in New York recently, I made a contract with the Selznick organization to produce here. At that time, it was the plan of that company to have one or two companies working, but at the present time we are caring for six of their producing units."

The financing of the Robert Brunton Studio was taken care of by Blankenhorn, Hunter & Dulin of Los Angeles.

Some of the characters of Robert Louis Stevenson's "Treasure Island," which has been picturized by Maurice Tourneur for Paramount-Artcraft

Publishers to Exploit "Treasure Island"

Famous Players-Lasky Corporation announces that a tie-up has been effected with Charles Scribner and M. A. Donohue of Chicago in the exploitation campaign for the forthcoming production of "Treasure Island," Robert Louis Stevenson's novel. Both these publishing houses issue the standard forms of the famous novel, the picturization of which Paramount-Artcraft will release early next month.

Standard Paramount-Artcraft posters and photographs, both colored and in black and white or sepia rotogravure sheets, will be used to enhance the attractiveness of local bookshop windows in exploiting "Treasure Island."

Buck Jones Returns to Work After Accident

On January 28th Buck Jones, the widely-heralded cowboy made a star by William Fox, suffered a severe injury to one of his feet while at work in "Forbidden Trails" at the Hollywood studios, and has just returned to finish this new picture. The accident occurred while the star, famed for his horsemanship and daring, was attempting a hazardous feat mounted on his big horse, Silver, in one of the scenes of "Forbidden Trails."

Buck Jones returns to work before the camera with the assurance of the medical staff that he is as good as new.

Ross and Mack Form Company in Chicago

Roderick Ross of Ross & Company and Irving Mack have taken over the advertising, printing, engraving and other miscellaneous departments of Willis & Eckels & Mack and will hereafter take care of this service for exhibitors and exchangemen under the firm name of Ross and Mack.

The name of the company is new but both Roderick Ross and Irving Mack are well known among the film men of Chicago. The offices of the new company will be in the Consumers Building, Chicago. The engraving and printing departments will be located at the Ross and Company plant at 448 North Wells street.

Opens Advertising Office

C. J. VerHalen Establishes Bureau in Times Building; Well Qualified

C. J. VER HALEN, who recently resigned as advertising and publicity director of Robertson-Cole, after fifteen months with that organization, has opened up offices as advertising engineer in the Times Building, Room 1114. Mr. VerHalen has already taken over several state right accounts for which he had laid out the entire advertising and publicity campaigns from the press book to the twenty-four sheet.

Mr. VerHalen has established himself as an advertising counsellor, or consulting advertising engineer, giving expert advise and service to any organization contemplating a campaign. This service will be particularly valuable to those organizations who are without a fully equipped advertising staff, but Mr. VerHalen will also be available in a consulting capacity to other companies.

The need of just such an organization as this has long been felt in the industry, according to many of the independent producers and state right men who have consulted Mr. VerHalen. It is the belief of these men that inaccurately directed advertising has cost them many thousands of dollars. It is to remedy this condition the new company with only the highest trained specialists on its staff has been started.

After ten years in the industry directing advertising and sales campaigns, Mr. VerHalen is eminently qualified for the work. During that time he has had experience in every branch of the industry as an executive. He is accredited with the responsibility for many brilliant advertising campaigns.

Russell in A Suitable Role

Comedy and Serious Moments in the Action of "Slam Bang Jim"

WILLIAM RUSSELL is said to be at his best in the American production, "Slam-Bang Jim," adapted from "Snap Judgment," in which he appears as an undisciplined, happy-go-lucky, city chap who wins the admiration of all as he copes with a succession of strenuous complications in an Arizona setting. It is a typical Russell role, with the mixture of comedy which, it is expected, will make "Slam-Bang Jim" particularly popular from the box office point of view. "Considering the popularity of the Russell pictures filmed by the American, and, in this comedy-drama the intermingling of the East and West, giving the high points of both, it is not surprising that heavy first bookings preceded the actual distribution of the prints," says a report from the American Film Company. "Unless it was in 'Six Feet Four,' Russell never had a better opportunity to let himself loose as the hero of humorous escapades and exciting adventures on a large scale.

"The 'Flying A' drama is 'a story of mistaken identity and scrambled love.' The high spots are a bridal scene which fades away in tears, and with maledictions on the absent but hopeful bridegroom; a free-for-all alley fist fight with police assistance; a real Western hold up, three against one hundred; a far Western dance hall in motion; a New York millionaire in a mad chase on muleback, and finally the lovers again planning another wedding."

William Russell is ably supported by Francelia Billington, Harvey Clark, Adda Gleason, Charles Newton, Perry Banks, Clarence Burton, Bull Montana, Ashton Dearholt and the four-year-old Ruth Everdale. Edward Sloman was the director. "Slam-Bang Jim" is being distributed by the Pathe exchanges.

Big House Opens With Goldwyn Pictures

What is claimed to be another triumph for Goldwyn Pictures was scored this week, when two of the current releases were booked as opening attractions for the new Strand theatre in Binghamton, N. Y., a $300,000 house that is classed with the finest modern theatres in the state.

Having made a careful survey of all of the available material on the market, it is said, the manager selected "The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come" for the first half of the opening week, and "The Blooming Angel" for the remaining days. Both of these productions have met with great popular favor at the New York Strand and other leading theatres in the largest cities of the country where they were given pre-release showings.

Franklin Films "Athalie" in Sierras

A wire just received by Isaac Wolper, president of the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation, from Sidney A. Franklin conveys the information that the director has penetrated deep into the Sierra Nevada snow country and is now filming scenes for "Athalie," by Robert W. Chambers, to be Franklin's first Mayflower production.

Mr. Franklin is accompanied by Sylvia Breamer, Conrad Nagle, Rosemary Theby, Robert Cain and Sam De Grasse, the principal players in the "Athalie" cast, and a complete staff of technical experts.

"Better Pay" Contest Awards Third Prize

Miss Lou V. Conover, of Los Angeles, is the winner of this week's prize of $50 in the "Better Pay for Teachers" movement of the Literary Digest's "Topics of the Day." Previous contests were won by Philadelphia and Brooklyn residents.

Miss Conover's topic was as follows: "The childhood of today is the Government of tomorrow. The best possible training today is the only guarantee of the best possible Government tomorrow. Such training cannot be given by teachers harassed by poverty. Let the nation assure its future and for a great work pay a just price."

Tourneur to Travel in Europe and Africa

Maurice Tourneur is planning to leave America this fall for an extended trip through England, France, Spain and Northern Africa. His contract with Famous Players-Lasky will expire in time for him to make several productions for the Associated Producers by the end of the summer months, when he expects to take the first vacation he has had in several years.

Mr. Tourneur emphatically states that it is not his intention to make pictures on the other side, and that this country is not only the ideal place for making pictures, but the only practical place.

Cosmopolitan Production to Have Lavish Sets

The entire "Land of Joy" company of twenty-two Spanish players took part in several scenes taken at the Cosmopolitan Studio, 127th street and Second avenue, New York, last Sunday, by Director Robert G. Vignola for his forthcoming Cosmopolitan production, "The World and His Wife," featuring Alma Rubens. A Spanish period set comprising a whole mansion with sunken gardens, marble pool and other rich man's extravagances was constructed at the studio, and occupied the entire floor space which normally is sufficient to permit four companies to work simultaneously.

Baron de Daue Off for France After Visit

Baron de Daue, who has been in America for the past two months in the interest of the Societe des Films Mercanton of Paris, sailed on Saturday for France after completing arrangements for a closer affiliation with American interests of this foremost of the French motion picture producers.

During his stay here, Baron de Daue completed arrangements for Guy Croswell Smith, Ltd., of New York, to represent the Mercanton interests in this country. He also disposed to an American Syndicate the world picture rights to Knoblach's great play success, "Kismet," which Otis Skinner did on the American stage a few years back.

Bessie Love Has Own Company

FOLLOWING the announcement of negotiations between Bessie Love and Chicago capitalist interests, represented by A. J. Callaghan, comes further confirmation this week that the former Vitagraph star is to be presented in a series of high-grade vehicles adapted from big novels and produced under expert direction without regard for time or money limitations.

The formation of the Bessie Love Producing Company with the youthful star at its head is the result of the determination of a group of Chicago film men to place this star in surroundings which will bring out in a bigger way than ever the undisputed talents which she possesses. Considerable money has already been spent in the new purchase of several novels for screen adaptation, and in the rental of the Bessie Love studio at 6642 Santa Monica Boulevard, Hollywood, California, where the star is already at work.

Andrew J. Callaghan, the Chicago film executive, who is at the head of the Chicago syndicate which is sponsoring Miss Love in her forthcoming independent productions, has retained the services of two of the most notable directors in the industry, Joseph de Grasse and Ida May Park. So confident is Mr. Callaghan of the latent dramatic powers of this young actress that he has created an entirely new departure in production work by securing what is described as the unbeatable directorial combination of a well-known man and woman to bring out the best that is in the charming screen star.

Miss Love, who has often been declared to come the nearest to Mary Pickford in talent and magnetism among the diminutive stars, recently concluded an engagement with the Vitagraph company. Since then three of the largest producing companies in the country have been bidding for her services, it is stated.

The affiliation of Miss Love, as an independent star, with the Callaghan organization follows her own expressed desire, and also the desire of her sponsors to devote much time, thought and money to the adequate handling of a personality discovered by Griffith and popular with millions of fans the country over.

After winning her way to stardom under the Griffith banner, Miss Love joined the Triangle forces, and later she continued to star in Pathe and Vitagraph releases. Now, according to the statement just issued, a corporation has been established around her personality, called the Bessie Love Productions, Inc.

Mr. Callaghan, who is at the head of this organization, declared last week after having seen his new star begin production, that practically no limit was to be placed on the sum to be expended for superior story material for Miss Love, and that available copyrighted books and stories suited to her personality would be purchased.

"After having seen the first results of Miss Love's work under the expert direction of Mr. de Grasse and Miss Park, her directors, I am entirely satisfied to have cast my lot with this remarkable young actress," said Mr. Callaghan in a statement from the Los Angeles studios. "We believe that Miss Love has never yet had her dramatic qualities fully brought out on the screen. For a long time we have had our eye on this charming little lady, who combines with youth and beauty a rare feeling for dramatic expression, and we feel highly elated that she has become our partner.

"It is plain, of course, that Miss Love comes to the Callaghan organization with a substantial financial interest in her future work. With such an incentive, and with the further advantage of big vehicles, first-class direction and all the time she desires, the motion picture industry is due to see a new Bessie Love, a recreated artist with all the charm that has endeared her to the picture fans of the nation placed in entirely new surroundings. This is reason enough for exhibitors of the country to take notice of the final results, for it is their own insistence on better story, better production and better direction which is bringing Miss Love to the front as never before as a film star who merits close watching."

Amplifies Production Plans

Pathe to Announce Acquisitions of Big Films and Popular Beauty

THE plans of Pathe Exchange, Inc., for features and big specials have been amplified so that within a short time an announcement will be made of the acquisition of some very pretentious productions and the listing of a popular beauty of the screen. Pathe's feature business has grown to such an extent that ambitious plans are making to meet future development for such time to come.

Blanche Sweet, it is promised, will be seen in productions even greater than her previous successes on the Pathe program. The coming production of "Sherry," Edgar Lewis' second special, is said to be every bit as strong a feature as "Other Men's Shoes." J. Stuart Blackton characterizes his coming release, "The Blood Barrier," as "a master melodramatic achievement." Included also in the announcement are "Rio Grande," an Edwin Carewe production adapted from Augustus Thomas' great stage play; Frank Keenan in "Dollar for Dollar," and Max Linder in "The Little Cafe," an adaptation from Klaw & Erlanger's theatrical success of the same name.

Paul Brunet, Vice-President and General Manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., laughed when his attention was brought to a rumor that his organization contemplated dispensing with features.

"The very idea of it is absurd," he said, "and especially at the time when the feature business with us has reached such unusual proportions, and is still growing, while thousands of exhibitors look to Pathe as the only really independent distributing organization. Our feature business has passed all expectations.

Territory on "A Dream of Fair Women" Sold

Murray W. Garsson, general manager of the Foundation Film Corporation, announces the sale of several large blocks of territory for "A Dream of Fair Women," a special feature which is being distributed through state right exchanges. Royal Pictures, Inc., bought Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern New Jersey. The Gardiner Syndicate bought all of New York, Albany and Buffalo. M. A. Lightman, of the Criterion Film Service, bought North and South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Tennessee and Kentucky. David P. Howell bought a block of far eastern territory, as well as considerable foreign territory, and the subject is fast becoming, according to Mr. Garsson, one of the most popular in demand today among those buyers who appreciate the love of novelty in the public.

Moranti Completes His First Production

Milburn Moranti, well known funster, who recently organized his own company under the name of the Moranti Comedies, Inc., with a capital stock of $100,000, has shipped his first two-reel production, titled "Barbershop Gossip," to New York for distribution on the state rights market.

Helen Williams has the leading feminine role, while other popular players appear in support of the comedian. Al Moranti, brother of the star, directed. "Lazy Lem" is announced as the title of the company's second production, which started this week at the Balboa studios, Long Beach, Cal.

Radiosoul Issues Statement

Will Distribute the Products of Swedish Biograph Co. in America

IT has now been definitely established that the newly formed Radiosoul Films, Inc., has secured a contract for the exclusive exploitation of the entire product of the Swedish Biograph for the United States and Canada. This means that Victor Seastrom is to become an institution in our film world.

Mr. L. E. Miller, President of the Radiosoul, answering how it is possible that an artist of Victor Seastrom's calibre should be practically unknown in America, which is announced as Seastrom's native country, said that the question of Seastrom's nativity is easily answered by the birth records of the State of Massachusetts. As to Mr. Seastrom's place in art, this has been disposed of by the unanimous verdict of the critics themselves in the press. As to how it happened that Seastrom, a native American, is practically unknown in his country, this, Mr. Miller says, is altogether a too delicate and perplexing matter to be disposed of in general terms. It is enough to recall, says the Radiosoul Films, the fate of many of our greatest singers, painters, and even men of letters.

Although the Radiosoul has been formed for both purposes,—the exploitation of pictures made by Victor Seastrom, and also to make its own pictures, the organization will at present dedicate itself exclusively to the output of the Swedish Biograph product.

"A new film concern," said Mr. Miller, "almost like a new political party considers itself duty bound to present to the exhibitors a platform with a string of stars and names in lieu of planks, and a bunch of promises as a program. We propose to do nothing of the kind. We simply say, we observed some vacancies in the sun and we want to get a place there if we can, and the only promise we can make to the public is that we will try to succeed."

"Democracy" Typifies Americanism

The produced photodrama, "Democracy—The Vision Restored," is the fulfillment of an idea born in the mind of Lee Francis Lybarger during his college days, and it found its first public expression in July, 1905, when he lectured on "Democracy and the Future" at the Miami Valley Chautauqua. For fifteen years, he has expounded this vital theme direct to and with the people of America.

"Democracy has been the underlying thought and keynote of every lecture I have delivered in the course of my fifteen years as a Chautauqua speaker," states Mr. Lybarger. "I have made it my life's work to bring to the minds of the American people, a realization of the true meaning of Democracy. By personal contact with millions of people in forty-six states and territories of our Union, during my public career, I firmly believe that I have gleaned the very essence and fundamental principles which are embodied in that all-powerful theme—Democracy, which typifies Americanism. . . In my ten-reel cinema epic 'Democracy—The Vision Restored' I have embodied this completed theme."

Inter-Ocean to Handle "The Gift Supreme"

"The Gift Supreme," the third of the productions made by the C. R. McCauley's Photoplays, Inc., has been acquired by Inter-Ocean Film Corporation for exclusive foreign distribution, according to an announcement issued during the week from the New York officers of the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation.

"In purchasing this production," states Inter-Ocean, "we were influenced primarily by the humaneness of the story and the fidelity with which this element has been transferred to the screen. The market for attractions of this nature is always large; and we are positive that our clients will consider themselves fortunate in obtaining a territorial franchise for this offering."

Prints of "The Gift Supreme" are now available for immediate screening for resident foreign buyers. Inter-Ocean also announces an elaborate and far-reaching advertising and publicity campaign in behalf of the production.

Kremer Will Distribute "Screen Smiles"

Victor Kremer, president of the Victor Kremer Film Features, Inc., announced this week that negotiations had been completed whereby "Screen Smiles" had been acquired for the United States and Canada.

"Screen Smiles" is a five hundred foot novelty reel said to be the latest thing in the way of topical films. Dealing with current events and fads of the day in humorous style, the various sayings are illustrated with animated cartoons. "Screen Smiles" was originated by Herman Yudkin, creator of the topical sayings idea in slide form several years ago.

Victor Kremer Film Features, Inc., will distribute "Screen Smiles" on the state right market, providing 52 reels a year.

Kremer Off On Extended Business Trip

Victor Kremer, president of the Victor Kremer Film Features, Inc., will leave this week for an extended tour of the various state right exchanges throughout the United States and Canada.

This trip will be made in the interest of the five Chaplin comedies which his organization is distributing together with Skinner's Dress Suit and the recently acquired novelty reel "Screen Smiles." Mr. Kremer's purpose in making this trip is two-fold, as he will not only visit those exchanges now distributing the Chaplin productions, but will also endeavor to dispose of the remaining territory for the Chaplin comedies.

Picture Tie-Up with Corona Typewriter

The window display of the Corona Typewriter sales depot on Forty-second street, between Broadway and Sixth avenue, is to exploit "Empty Arms." Martin Jenter is the creator of the display. The window will present the interior of a picture theatre in miniature. On the screen will appear a still of "Empty Arms," featuring Gail Kane and Thurston Hall. At the right of the orchestra space will be arranged a cut-out of the author, Willard King Bradley, seated before a Corona typewriter, the idea being to suggest that the author is engaged in typing the scene depicted on the screen.

"Illiterate Digest" Now On Market

The first issue of the widely heralded Will Rogers' "Illiterate Digest" is now ready for release, according to Joe Brandt, eastern representative for the Marion H. Kohn Productions, which is filming this novelty.

It is the general belief that this reel is merely a set of screened epigrams, but Brandt wishes to dispel any such ideas. Will Rogers actually appears in the reel in a novel presentation. His sayings concern topics of current interest and each one is dealt with in highly humorous manner. Special permission to film Rogers and the "Illiterate Digest" was secured from Samuel Goldwyn and the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation.

Dana Is Pleased With Market

Independent System Is Well Liked, Says Arrow Manager

P. R. DANA, sales manager of the Arrow Film Corporation, has returned from an extensive western trip, during which he made a first hand study of the independent market, and the independent methods of booking feature productions. He was enthusiastic about the wonderful progress the independent system has made in recent months, and declares that exhibitors everywhere are becoming more and more interested in its mechanics.

"I have talked to some of the most prominent exhibitors in the territories I visited," he said, "and not one of them has a word to say against the independent system. A year or eighteen months ago, there would have been plenty of kicks. That was when independent booking and buying was just getting into stride, and before a large number of exchange men and exhibitors had given it a try."

Mr. Dana said that he had failed to find either an exchangeman or an exhibitor who was not at least interested in the independent system.

"They are beginning to realize the tremendous saving possible in bookng pictures free from the interference of producers," he stated.

"Not only is there a financial saving, but there is also a conservation of energy and trouble. There is a minimum of detail in independent booking, where there is a maximum in other systems."

Mr. Dana declared that the tendency upon the part of individual exhibitors and exchange men to book independently was a natural development, since it had been generally discovered that better pictures, better exploitation and better methods characterized the independent system. Too few exhibitors have realized this until the present condition of the picture market made the fact dawn upon them.

"The watchword of the times is economy," said Mr. Dana. "That is one great reason that independent booking is thriving. Exhibitors and exchangemen have made the illuminating discovery that real pictures can be obtained for much less actual cash than they have been spending in the past, and that their audiences appreciate the pictures with the same appreciation they give other features."

Mr. Dana was particularly interested, during his trip, in the disposition of territory for the series of "Tex, the Elucidator of Mysteries," series. He announced upon his return that while most of the territory in the United States had been disposed of, there were only a few territories which remained available for state rights buyers.

"The 'Tex' series is a response to an unspoken demand upon the part of exhibitors," said Mr. Dana. "In booking the entire series of twelve pictures, the exhibitor gets twelve features, each complete in itself, but with the fascinating thought for his audiences that these same characters will at an early date portray another interesting mystery and its solution. The series has made a distinct hit."

Mr. Dana is now giving his attention to "The Lost Daughter" and "Before the White Man Came," the latest features announced by Arrow.

Christie in the Feature Field

Forces Concentrating at Present on Chic Sale Feature

"THE Christie Film Company will become almost as well-known within twelve months in the field of big feature production as it has been for comedies" was the statement of Charles H. Christie, general manager of the Christie firm, who arrived in Los Angeles today after a short trip through the South and East.

Mr. Christie arrived at his studio after a trip which included many cities in the Southern states and two week's stay in New York, where he was in conference with the officials of the Robertson-Cole company, which is handling the releases of the new Chic Sale feature, "The Smart Aleck" which is now being made at the Christie studio in Los Angeles.

"The production of The Smart Aleck, by Irvin Cobb, with Chic Sale, and a feature cast, marks the entry of the Christie firm into the production of features of greater than two reels in length, and it is only a start in the expansion which comes as a natural growth. We were established in the field of one-reel comedies a year ago when we launched our two-reel special comedies. At the present time we have produced twelve of these and the fact that we are going into productions of greater magnitude does not mean that we shall discontinue our efforts along comedy lines. It is merely a broadening out into bigger and better things," said Christie in answer to a report that the Christie film company was deserting the comedy field entirely.

Scene from "The Lost Daughter," to be released by Arrow Film Corporation. Ora Carewe is the star

"We have already announced the acquisition of the rights to So Long Letty, which contains material for a big special picture backed by its tremendous drawing power since its years of success as a stage play.

"This picture will be only one of a number of big features which we are planning production of which will begin in June of this year. No arrangements have been made for the releases of these features, but the market is assured.

"We believe that there is ample room in the photoplay market for features of the character which we are planning, along the lines of comedy drama, made in big special productions, with no particular emphasis on star parts, although each feature will have an adequate cast of people, whose names are already established in the trade.

"The feature which is now in progress, with Chic Sale, is an example of what we mean in feature casts. It includes, besides Mr. Sale, in vaudeville, such names as Colleen Moore, Bob McKim, Walt Whitman, Lydia Yeamans Titus, J. P. Lockney, Bert Woodruff, Colin Keeny and Tommy O'Brien, a list of names which would do credit to any feature production ever made.

"We are now looking over the entire field on both coasts for a cast for 'So Long Letty' which will be produced under Al Christie's direction. He is now supervising the production of the third of the series of Bringing Up Father comedies which will be released by Pathe in addition to handling the direction of the Chic Sale feature, and has an able corps of directors engaged in the production of Christie Comedies, including such men as Scott Sidney, William Beaudine, Frederic Sullivan, Alec Watt and Reggie Morris, the latter of whom is handling the megaphone on 'Bringing Up Father'."

"Blind Love" Rights Sold

New England Territory to Herman Rifkin and Western to Equity Co.

FOLLOWING carefully planned exploitation and advertising campaigns including two-page spreads in the leading trade publications, a personal canvass of the important state rights' territories and communication with the leading exhibitors throughout the country by means of a personal letter to each, Gerald F. Bacon, producer and Nathan Hirsh, distributor of the six-reel feature, 'Blind Love' starring Lucy Cotton and George LeGuere, announce that the New England territory has been purchased by Herman Rifkin, of Boston, and the California, Nevada and Arizona territory to Equity Film Corporation, of San Francisco, with the Southern territory under consideration. As a result of the letter sent the leading exhibitors, Mr. Hirsh states that the demand by some of these from their exchanges was so insistent that the buyers to protect their own rights communicated with the distributor for territorial rights, with the above results within two weeks."

In addition to disposing of these territories, Mr. Hirsh who is handling the New York and Northern New Jersey bookings on this feature, booked it over the Loew Circuit in Greater New York where it played the Broadway houses recently.

Lucy Cotton, the star of "Blind Love" is a stage as well as a screen celebrity having been seen recently in Cosmopolitan's production, "The Miracle of Love" and on the stage in "Up In Mabel's Room". In support are George Le Guere, James F. Cullen, Frank O'Connor, Eduarde Durant, Bert Leigh and others. Oliver D. Bailey, producer, theatre manager and author, directed "Blind Love."

Price Secures New Release

Billy Rhodes Stars in Five-Reel Comic—Drama, " His Pajama Girl "

C. B. PRICE CO., INC., have secured the latest production of the Southern California Producing Company, a five reel comedy-drama, "His Pajama Girl" in which Billie Rhodes is starred. Mr. Price, who just returned from a trip to the Coast, saw the picture in its final stages and immediately made a deal with the officials of the Southern California Producing Company for the marketing of the picture on the state right plan.

An extensive campaign has been prepared according to Mr. Price, that will not only cover the state right buyers but will also go directly to the exhibitor, thus creating a market for the purchasers of the various territories. The picture, according to reports is rich in possibilities for advertising, and many novel angles have already been conceived that will come to the motion picture trade as something absolutely novel in motion picture exploitation says the C. B. Price Company.

Mr. Price, in talking of the purchase of "His Pajama Girl" was very enthusiastic about the picture. In classifying it, he remarked: "The state right field, and in fact the entire motion picture industry, has developed from time to time different styles in motion pictures. The first sensational effort was, of course, the creation of the vampire film, then came the sex films, later the bathing girls, and now I believe we have hit on the newest vogue that will be widely copied by producers, the Pajama Girl film.

"In addition to having what we consider the greatest box office title that has been seen on a film in some great time, I also believe that we have a subject that lends itself to a broader line of exploitation than any picture ever before put out on the territorial plan."

Bloom Sells Rights on "Vod-a-Vil" Movies

Samuel S. Bloom, of Philadelphia, visited the Commonwealth offices in Chicago last week and while there closed a contract with President Harry Spanuth for twenty-four more "Vod-a-Vil" movies for eastern and western Pennsylvania, West Virginia, Virginia, Maryland, District of Columbia and southern Jersey. Mr. Bloom, acting for Commonwealth, has also sold Ivan Abramson of Graphic Film Corporation, a series of "Vod-a-Vil" movies for New York state and northern New Jersey.

Don Walk Is Made Head of Arrow Publicity

Don Walk, formerly of the Universal Film Manufacturing Co., has taken charge of advertising and publicity for the Arrow Film Corporation, according to an announcement by W. E. Shallenberger, president, this week. P. B. Dana, who has been in charge of that work in the past, has been advanced to the position of sales manager, and will hereafter confine his effort to that branch of the business.

Form Tri-Star Corporation

Prominent Picture Directors Are to Feature Miss Ethel Barrymore

JOSEPH BYRON TOTTEN and Joseph W. Smiley, prominent film directors, who recently formed the Tri-Star Picture Corporation, have leased the Victor studios, Nos. 645-651 West 43d street, for a long term for the making of a series of special productions under the Tri-Star banner.

Ethel Barrymore, star of "Declassee," the dramatic success now running at the Empire theatre, and the first stage and screen luminary to be placed under the Tri-Star management by Totten and Smiley, commences studio work this week, all of her sessions before the camera having been arranged so as to avoid any conflict whatsoever with the matinee or evening performances.

The initial Tri-Star super-production will be a screen version of R. L. Stevenson's story, "The Super-Woman," with the film adaptation and continuity developed by George DuBois. In the opinion of Directors Totten and Smiley, this vehicle is peculiarly fitted for Miss Barrymore's ability and technique. Although an unusual story in itself, the name part of "The Super-Woman" carries with it an exceptionally sympathetic theme which lends itself admirably to the talents of the star, who has endeared herself to patrons of the American stage and screen through her individualistic interpretations of difficult roles.

Miss Leslie Bingham has been appointed studio manager and casting directress for all Tri-Star productions. George B. Chennells will be technical director, supervising that branch of the work, while W. S. Cooper will be chief cameraman in charge of all photographic work.

Preview Of "The Mask" Soon In Los Angeles

The first of the new series of Col. W. N. Selig Productions, an adaptation from the Arthur Hornblow book, "The Mask," is now completed, and private preview to people of the trade will shortly be given in Los Angeles.

A number of the big incidents of this story are laid in the diamond mine country of South Africa, and to properly dress these scenes, buildings, machinery and all necessary properties were built and manufactured in duplicate of photographs especially secured for that purpose.

Arrow Film to Distribute Indian Picture

An unusual photoplay feature has been obtained by the Arrow Film Corporation, according to W. E. Shallenberger, president of the company, for release to independents. The play is called "Before the White Man Came," and the plot is laid in the tribal countries of the Old West before the advent of the pioneers from the eastern settlements. Every character in it is portrayed by an Indian.

Indian Dramas Attract Notice of Educators

C. B. Price declares its series of Indian dramas, starring Mona Darkfeather, which open at the Broadway theatre on March 29th, are attracting especial attention among educators because of their historic and literary value. Mr. Price states:

"Not only in the big Broadway theatres are these Indian dramas finding ready bookings, but the same is true all over the country. Educational institutions are especially interested in these productions, and many exhibitors are taking advantage of this fact by putting on special matinees for school children which are endorsed by the teachers and principals in practically every instance."

Foreign Agencies Opened for Projector

Billy Rhodes Picture Ready

National Film to Put "Nobody's Girl" on State Rights Market

JOE BRANDT, eastern representative for the National Film Corporation of America, announces that the latest National feature picture, "Nobody's Girl," in which Billy Rhodes plays the stellar role, is now ready for release and will be marketed on the state rights plan.

"Nobody's Girl" is said to offer a plot which is different from the ordinary. The plot is laid chiefly at Devil's Island, the home of a band of criminals, smugglers, and thieves. The star is cast in among them and eventually is the means of their extermination. Of course she becomes "somebody's girl" at last.

National claims that this picture will make a decided hit with the younger generation because of Billy Rhodes' captivating acting and mischievious pranks. No expense was spared to make it absolutely perfect from the big production standpoint.

Frances Grandon, who directed Billy Rhodes in "The Lamb and the Lion," is responsible for this production. The star's previous successes were "Hoop La," "In Search of Arcady," "The Love Call," and "The Blue Bonnet." Prominent in her support in "Nobody's Girl" are Melbourne McDowell, who takes the part of Red Gull, and Mary Alden, who plays the role of the Jason woman.

Ready for "Tarzan" Serial

Work Starts April 1st; Jack Hoxie to Star; Real Tropics as Setting

JACK HOXIE, who has become one of the leading serial stars through his work in "Lightning Bryce," the serial produced by the National Film Corporation, which is said to be enjoying great popularity in this country and abroad, is to be starred in a new feature thriller by Natioual.

The screen rights for the last of the Edgar Rice Burroughs books of the Tarzan series, "The Son of Tarzan," has been purchased by National and will serve as the vehicle for Hoxie's new serial. The National Film Corporation screened Burroughs' previous works, "Tarzan of the Apes" and "The Romance of Tarzan" several years ago, and because of the unusual character of the films these two productions are still being exhibited in their original form.

L. V. Jefferson, who is writing the continuity for this serial, has already reduced the original version of "The Son of Tarzan" to ten episodes. Henry M. Rubey, National's president, has stated that every effort will be made to make it the biggest serial of the year and that it will be the costliest picture ever produced by his company.

As the scene of the story is laid in the tropics, to get realism in the picture it was necessary to secure an island in the South Pacific where the serial will be made. Jack Hoxie's entire company will sail immediately and remain in the tropics until the serial is completed. The natives, of course, will be utilized in furnishing the "local color." Included in Hoxie's support is Lucille Rubey and a large cast of principals. Work on the first episode will be started about April 1.

"Lost Daughter" Is Latest Arrow Feature

W. E. Shallenberger, president of the Arrow Film Corporation, has announced the acquisition by his company of another new feature which is ready for release to independent buyers. This is "The Lost Daughter," a special feature production in which charming Ora Carew, star of many productions, portrays the leading role.

The story was written by Cecelia Wheat Curry, author of other screen successes, and is a new style of the mountain girl type of story. The cast includes such players as Arnold Gregg, William Irving, Henry Barrows and others.

Territory Sells Fast for Jans Feature

Herman F. Jans, president of Jans Pictures, Inc., who are producing the series of six Olive Tell features, the first of which is "Love Without Question," sent the following telegram to the home office during his trip through the West: "We have sold seventy-five per cent of the territory in the United States. Exhibitors very enthusiastic over "Love Without Question."

The second of the series is well under way and it is expected it will soon be ready for assembling and titling. Under the arrangement set forth by Jans Pictures, Inc., exhibitors will be able to book the entire series of six pictures.

Directors Engaged for Whitechapel Picture

In connection with its forthcoming production of "Determination," a picture, which has as it background the Whitechapel district of London, the United States Photoplay Corporation states:

"We have Harry McRae Webster under contract to direct the production; John L. McCutcheon, co-director, and Herbert L. Messmore, technical director. These gentlemen will assist Capt. F. F. Stoll in producing this gigantic photoplay."

Commonwealth Acquires "Why Women Sin"

Sam Zierler, president of the Commonwealth Film Corporation, and who has the Equity franchise for New York territory, concluded a deal the early part of this week with Thomas de Vassey, secretary of the Wistaria Productions, Inc., and Jacques Kopfstein, the sales manager, whereby he secures the exclusive exhibitor's rights for New York State and Northern New Jersey of "Why Women Sin."

Ziegfeld Beauty with Wistaria Forces

Mr. Thomas de Vassey, secretary of the Wistaria Company, claims a discovery in the personality of Legotie Hoover, who is described as the "perfect" girl of the Ziegfeld Follies. Miss Hoover was the selection, it is stated, among the three hundred Ziegfeld beauties. She has been engaged for a long period to appear in Wistaria productions and is scheduled for one of the principal roles in the next forthcoming feature produced by this company.

"Parted Curtains" on Way

National Film's New Feature Is Now Getting Finishing Touches

"PARTED CURTAINS," the newest feature production filmed by the National Film Corporation of America, will soon be ready for release. A print of the picture has been received at the New York office and is now being put through the finishing stages.

Henry B. Walthall, who starred in "Confession" and Griffith's masterpiece, "The Birth of a Nation," plays the leading part in this production, taking the role of an outcast who is falsely accused of crime and must fight to regain his place in society.

"Parted Curtains" is from the story of the same name which was written by Franklyn Hall, whose stories have appeared in the leading magazines. It deals with the struggles of a criminal to live down the smirch of the prison stamp. Walthall, in the role of Jenkins, serves a long prison sentence because of a false accusation. When he is realeased, no one believes his story and he is buffeted around from place to place in a vain search for work.

Bertram Bracken, who produced "Confession," "The Eternal Sappho," "East Lynne" and other successful photodramas is also responsible for the direction of "Parted Curtains." Mary Alden tops the all-star supporting cast. Included in the cast is Wm. H. Clifford who played the part of the Canadian in the "Confession." Margaret Landis is cast in the role of Jenkins' sweetheart.

Joe Brandt, eastern representative of the National Film Corporation, has announced that the picture will be sold to state rights buyers and that it will be released in the early part of April.

Many Sales by Inter-Ocean

Rights on Feature Pictures Sold for South American Countries

MANY important sales are reported by Inter-Ocean Film Corporation, an announcement issued this week, informs the trade.

"The Lurking Peril," starring Anne Luther and Charles Hutchinson; "The Mystery Mind" featuring Pauline, the well-known vaudeville hypnotist; and "The Whirlwind" with Charles Hutchinson in the stellar role, three serials were placed this week by Inter-Ocean for physical distribution in Chile, Peru, Bolivia and Ecuador. The deal involves the acquisition of ninety reels together with posters, lobby display and the necessary press material which usually accompanies a serial, by the company which Inter-Ocean Film Corporation represents in the capacity of confidential buying agent.

"An Adventuress," recently acquired by Inter-Ocean Film Corporation for distribution throughout the entire world, exclusive of the United States, was sold last week to one of the largest Mexican film renters for distribution in Mexico.

"Bearcat," an adaptation of the novel by Charles Neville Buck, was disposed of for Porto Rico, Santo Domingo and Venezuela. This sale is said to have been made for a large financial consideration.

"The Transgressor" and "The Burning Question," two productions made by the Catholic Art Association, and for which Inter-Ocean Film Corporation are world distributors, were also disposed of for distribution in Porto Rico, and Santo Domingo.

It may be interesting to note that all of the sales were directely consummated by C. Salazar, who is in charge of film sales for Inter-Ocean Film Corporation in South America and the Spanish-speaking countries.

"Democracy," Ten-Reel Drama, Completed

"Democracy," or "The Vision Restored," a powerful ten-reel screen drama, with a punch and a purpose, has been completed, under the direction of William Nigh, at the Thomas A. Edison studios in New York City, according to the announcement of Lee Francis Lybarger, president of the Democracy Photoplay Company. This fulfills the original plans of the organization as published in December, 1918.

Releasing plans have not been definitely decided upon, for although it is a subject to interest the largest distributing organizations, half a dozen or more companies may be sent out by Mr. Lybarger to present it in the best theatres in the big cities of the United States.

George Wheeler Joins Atlas Educational

George Frederic Wheeler has just arrived in Chicago from the Coast to take up the position of Director with the Atlas Educational Film Company. Mr. Wheeler is widely known in the motion picture world having been with D. W. Griffith, Triangle, and his own producing company. His early work as a writer and lecturer covers a long period of successful entertaining.

SIMPLE SOULS

Chicago and the Mid-West

Covered By L. H. MASON

One of the biggest publicity stunts ever put over in Chicago has been arranged by Universal and Harry Rice, Chicago Publicity Director, is busy getting out copy for the columns of the Chicago Herald & Examiner.

Co-operating with the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, the paper has offered a prize of $10,000 for the most beautiful girl available to pose as the "Spirit of America" on the principal float of the Elk's parade to be held in Chicago, July 7th. In addition to the $10,000 prize, Mr. Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, will give the winner of the contest an opportunity to be featured star in some of his company's productions at a salary of $10,000 for the first year if she shows she is adaptable to picture work. Mr. Laemmle's offer to the winner involves an immediate trip to Universal City with all expenses paid and a guaranteed salary during the period of training necessary.

On Sunday, March 13, the Herald & Examiner came out with a page spread heralding the contest and announcing Mr. Laemmle's offer and this will be followed up by columns of space every day until the contest is decided.

Publicity Director Rice has planned to give the contest added value from an exploitation standpoint by having the various young women desiring to enter the contest, take their photographs to their neighborhood moving picture theatre, which will in turn hand them over to the Herald & Examiner, so that the various contestants will be known as the Woodlawn Girl, the Riviera Girl, the Covenant Garden Girl and etc.

The Acme Theatre at 7251 Vincennes Avenue, has been purchased by D. C. Miller and B. F. Teetzel who will remodel it into a first-class picture house. These partners are said to be looking for other theatres to purchase.

"The Forbidden Woman," the film starring Pauline Fredericks, has just been thoroughly cleaned and renovated by "film doctor" A. Teitel, who says that the job he has done on it is equal to that which won so much praise when he renovated. "The Eyes of Youth."

Broadway and Irving Park Boulevard is to be the site of a new 3,000 seat moving picture house. Otto J. Lorenze has purchased the lot which is 79x151 feet, for a price of $55,000 and proposes to expend $600,000 on the erection of the theatre.

Clyde W. Eckhardt, manager of the Chicago office of the Fox Film Company, is taking a month's vacation at Hot Springs following a long and severe attack of pneumonia. Lewis Levine has come on from the New York office to take charge during Mr. Eckhardt's absence.

The Chicago office of Robertson-Cole have added Morris Goldberg, formerly manager of the Beach Theatre, to its sales staff.

Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Film Company, was in Chicago last week for a few hours for a conference with local officials of the corporation.

May 1st is drawing dangerously near for the film exchanges, which, according to the Chicago Fire Ordinance, must be out of the loop on that date, but one plan after another for new film zuildings have fallen through and there seems to be no immediate prospect of the exchange finding a home together.

Ed. Brichetto is again on the sales staff of the Silee Film Exchange and is going to work the south side of the city. He, for a while, was connected with the Arthur S. Hyman Attractions.

Ralph Proctor, assistant general manager of the United Artists, was in Chicago last week. It was rumored that the United Artists was about to take over a theatre in the Windy City.

Si Greiver has purchased "Husbands and Wives," starring Vivian Martin for Illinois and Indiana. This is the first big picture Mr. Greiver has bought since, "The Birth of a Race," and he declares he intends to give "Husbands and Wives" as intensive exploitation as he did that picture. If he does this it means something big, as the way he put over "The Birth of a Race" is well remembered in local moving picture circles.

Manager Fred Aiken reports that the Rose Theatre will have another Vitagraph Week, beginning April 4th, when "The Sporting Duchess," featuring Alice Joyce and a Larry Seaman comedy will be screened at this popular loop theatre.

H. H. Kyler of Denver, stopped over in Chicago on his way west from New York for a conference with Si Greiver, whose educationals he is handling for Seattle, Salt Lake and Denver territories.

Roderick Ross of Ross & Company, and Irving Mack, have taken over the advertising, printing, engraving and other miscellaneous departments of Willis & Eckels & Mack, and will hereafter take care of this service for exhibitors and exchange men under the name of Ross & Mack. The new firm will inaugurate one service which will be especially appreciated by exhibitors, a twenty-four hour service on throw-aways and heralds so that hurry calls for help along this line will be taken care of promptly, day or night. The name of the company is new, but both partners are well known to film men of Chicago. The offices of the company will be in the Consumers Building and the engraving and printing departments will be located at the Ross & Company plant on Wells Street.

The Master Advertisers is the name of the new company which has opened offices in the Consumers' Building, and will handle publicity and advertising for exhibitors and exchange men. Four progressive young men well known in moving picture circles comprise the firm, they are Sam Gold, S. A. Delson, Al Dezencels and J. Fischer.

The cold-blooded murder of William Mills, manager of the Crawford Theatre, which came as a shock to Chicago moving picture men, among whom he had a wide acquaintance, has been solved through the confession of Edward Brislane, a former inmate of Pontiac Reformatory, who is in the hands of the police. Brislane admits that he and a companion, thinking that the woman cashier was alone in the ticket booth, counting the day's receipts, opened the door, and surprised to find Manager Mills there, shot him down in cold blood and fled.

Paul Gerard Smith of Garetson-Smith is finding time to write many plays and vaudeville acts in addition to his publicity and exploitation work for moving picture men, and is meeting with considerable success. "Author Author" his two act comedy will open at the Little theatre, Los Angeles, March 25-26. He has sold a vaudeville act, "Oh! Grandma," to Hunt & Hunt, and a burlesque moving picture act, which is said to be a real scream, to Schaefer, Jensen and Schaefer, and both at present are in rehearsal.

Paul Busch, Chicago manager for Republic, is reorganizing his sales staff into two separate departments in accordance with the new selling plans of the organization, and adding several men to his staff. One body of salesmen will give their entire attention to selling features, another to short reels and serials and both will be under the immediate supervision of Mr. Busch. The thirteen salesmen will be divided as follows: Five on short reels and serials; five on features; two on special feature men and one salesman booking both features and short reels in smaller towns.

The first picture to be released under the new selling plan is "The Girl Of The Sea," which has been booked at the Band Box in the Chicago loop for two weeks with an option of a further run of two weeks, the admission to be charged being from 50 cents to 75 cents. Mr. Busch regards this as one of the big pictures of the year and is planning special exploitation and advertising for it.

Other early releases, which the squadron of feature salesmen will book, are "Mothers of Men," "The Great Shadow," "Man's Plaything" and "The One Way Trail."

Paul De Outo, formerly with Metro, Tommy Greenwood, who sold for Hadkinson, and Warren Rutter, late of Universal, have already been added to Republic's sales staff in Chicago, and the names of other recruits will be given out in a few days.

Exhibitors crowded the Vitagraph projection room Monday and Tuesday of this week as guests of the Beehive Film Exchange Company to view the first three episodes of the serial, "A Woman In Grey," which was written by S. N. and A. M. Williamson, featuring Arline Pretty, supported by Henry G. Sell. Much favorable comment was heard both on the photography and stirring action in the picture.

Manager Graumont, of Metro's Chicago Exchange, is enthusiastic over the outlook for April releases and is banking on a big success with "Alias Jimmy Valentine," featuring Bert Lytel, following as it does close on the star's big hit, "The Right Of Way." Exhibitors already are displaying marked interest in "Shore Acres," although no viewing of the picture has been had, as yet, in Chicago. According to Mr. Graumont, it appears to be one of those instances where exhibitors sense a big picture even before they know much about it. "Heart Of A Child," which is heralded as a typical Nazimova picture, is another for which heavy bookings are expected in the Chicago territory.

Berry T. Hodge has joined the sales force working out of the United Picture Theatres' Chicago Exchange and will specialize on comedies.

Paul De Outo has resigned from the sales staff of Metro and Harold Gimbel has joined the staff, and will cover eastern Illinois territory.

District Manager Jack O'Toole, of United Picture Theatres, Inc., has appointed S. T. O'Brien, who has been connected with the organization for a year or more as salesman, manager of the Minneapolis Exchange and R. E. Bristow, manager of the Milwaukee Exchange. Mr. Bristow has been assistant manager at Milwaukee for some months following his return from military service overseas. He formerly was connected with Mutual and Metro.

The Chicago office of Special Pictures Corporation, releasing two-reel Comedyart productions, is now permanently located on the 18th floor of the Consumers Building. Physical distribution of films is being handled by the Greater Stars Productions. Release date has been set as March 28th for the loop districts, and April 4th for the outlying houses and country territory.

C. Eddy Eckels, who recently has become manager for Neal Hart, in addition to his duties as general manager to the Capital Film Company and partner in Willis & Eckels, is planning two trips within the next few weeks, one to the west coast to confer with Hart in regard to Mr. Hart's program of five-reel productions for this year, and another to New York where he plans to open a branch office for Eckels and Mack who are the makers and originators of Filmcraft Trailers.

C. Eddy, by the way, recently received the sweetest surprise of his career. It was an entire crate of Creola Pralines, which was shipped to him by Gene Pearce, of New Orleans, immediately after his return to the Crescent City from Chicago, where he attended the convention of independents.

The Ludwig Film Exchange of Minneapolis, have opened a branch in the Toy Building, Milwaukee, for the distribution of the Exhibitors' Mutual Productions in southern Wisconsin.

Joseph Mergener has been appointed manager of the Pathe Exchange, Milwaukee, with Mr. Charles Taylor as assistant. Mr. Mergener takes the place of Wm. Aschman, recently transferred to the management of the Chicago Pathe office. Mr. Mergener is one of the oldest film men in Milwaukee, having been at one time, manager of the local Mutual office.

J. J. Tadysch is having plans prepared for the erection of a new modern 1,500 seat house at Two Rivers, Wisconsin. Building operation will start in spring. He is the owner of the Empire theatre in the same city, a 750 seat house.

M. A. Dodge, president of the Dodge Film Company, a Wisconsin corporation with headquarters in Milwaukee, arrived in Chicago recently from the west coast, bringing with him a six real picture. "Witches Gold," a story of the Texas Oil Fields, which he filmed in the Burk-Burnett district and which is said to portray life in the oil fields with startling fidelity. The first print is finished and it is Mr. Dodge's intention to release the picture on the independent market at an early date. Mr. Dodge is understood to be planning some big pictures in the near future and shortly will return to the coast.

A. F. Ehlers has opened the Paris theatre, Milwaukee, after making extensive alterations and improvements. This house has been dark for several months since it was purchased by a "Wizard of Finance."

Carlton Rigger has reopened the former Paramount theatre, Milwaukee, which he has renamed the Iris. The christening was done with a bottle of wine (Mr. Rigger states it was real too), a young man being selected to break the bottle by throwing it from the stage to the cement floor of the orchestra pit and exclaiming. "I Christen thee Iris." Mr. Rigger states that he is in the market for other Milwaukee houses and is looking for a site to build a downtown theatre. He has opened offices in the Alhambra Theatre Building.

The roads of many film cutters lead to Rothacker's Chicago plant. W. A. Smith, cutter for King Vidor, and Gail S. Carter, of the M. A. Dodge Film Company, became acquainted when their companies occupied stages one and two at the Hollywood Studios. They parted in January. March found them at tables one and two in the cutting room at the Chicago Rothacker Laboratory.

Harry Weiss, whose resignation as one of the managers of First National Exhibitors' Exchange, Chicago, recently was announced in these columns, ended his connection with First National on March 22nd. Mr. Weiss wishes to deny the reports which have been going around that he has become affiliated with Associated Producers, the Celebrated Players Film Corporation or any other concern. He states, however, that he has already perfected new arrangements and will, in a few days, announce his new connection.

Two recent additions to the sales staff of Metro's Chicago office are James Guest, formerly with Triangle and S. R. Moses, recently with Hallmark. They will work the Chicago territory.

Harry W. Willard, manager of Realart's Chicago Exchange, announces that Louis Reichart has been appointed assistant manager.

M. J. Mintz, one of Chicago's best known and most popular exchange executives, has been appointed Director of Territorial Expansion for Celebrated Players Film Corporation. His appointment was effective Monday, March 22, and already he is at work disposing of territorial rights to the subjects which are controlled by Celebrated.

The appointment of Mr. Mintz to this position is the fruition of a long and close friendship with Joe Friedman, and the mutual admiration in which each held the others business ability. For several years the two came in daily contact while Mr. Mintz was general manager of Unity Photoplays Company, and Mr. Friedman was building up the agressive and progressive Celebrated organization.

Mr. Friedman feels he has succeeded in making a most valuable addition to his staff of executives and that Mr. Mintz's department will be in able hands.

Mr. Mintz resigned as district manger for the Republic Film Corporation to accept the new post and will have an interest in the business.

The only speaker at the recent auto show luncheon of the San Francisco Advertising Club, held in the Golden Gate City, who was not a motor or tire company official, an advertising man, or a racing driver, was Bert Lytell. The Metro star had a brief vacation after the completion of "Alias Jimmy Valentine," which he spent in San Francisco. The first Pacific Coast showing of "The Right of Way," his current release, also took place at the Rivoli Opera House, while he was in town, and he attended the showing.

Edward Dillon has been engaged by Metro to direct Viola Dana in "Parlor, Bedroom and Bath." Mr. Dillon left New York especially to direct this production, after completing "The Amateur Wife," starring Irene Castle. Eugene Pallett will be Miss Dana's leading man.

May Allison has completed "The Cheater," and is now looking about for the "Fine Feathers" which will be the title of her next picture, as well as the things she wears, and she has been promised a vacation of two weeks to look up the latter, while H. Thompson Rich puts the finishing touches on his part, the continuity. Miss Allison made three trips to Santa Barbara before the desired location scenes were obtained for "The Cheater."

DETROIT

Robert Churchill and William Haynes, of Equity pictures, holders of the Michigan franchise, will both attend the Equity convention in Chicago, the week of April 3.

J. O. Brooks, for some time on the local Pathe force, has been promoted to feature sales manager in the Detroit territory by George W. Sampson, exchange manager. Art Hoganson will take charge of feature sales in the city.

"On With the Dance" at the Broadway Strand, played to more money for this period, according to Manager Phil Gelichman than either "The Miracle Man" or "Male and Female."

Several changes are scheduled among Detroit film exchanges April 1. in the Film building. The Goldwyn exchange will take quarters at present held by Republic, who will take part of the Select offices. Equity will occupy the rooms held by Goldwyn. Minter-United and other independent exchanges also say they will take additional space.

Out at the Alhambra theatre Charles Darrell, the manager, styles his community sign "Passing Songs." Frank Bessinger puts on the song numbers every Wednesday night.

OKLAHOMA

Film magnates, it seems, have also become determined to "magnate" in the oil industry as well as in the picture field. Cecil DeMille, director-general of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, and H. C. Brice, manager of the Strand theatre have purchased some oil interests.

Attendants upon the Utilities Association, several hundred in number, enjoyed a performance at the Liberty theatre recently, occupying a whole section of the big playhouse. All present seemed to be having the time of their lives.

A $100,000 theatre is being erected by local capitalists at Pawhuska, Okla. A $50,000 moving picture theatre is being erected at Vinita, Okla. An Airdome theatre is being erected at Holdenville, Okla., which will be completed in time for the spring season, it is expected.

John E. Giessing, manager of the opera house, at Flat River, Mo., will erect a moving picture theatre at that place in the near future.

A. C. Newing has leased a block of ground at Bonne Terre, Mo., and will build an Airdome theatre at that place.

The Fraternal Opera House at Poplar Bluffs, Mo., has been completely renovated and made over and will play vaudeville and pict . .

News Notes from the West Coast

By J. C. JESSEN

UNIVERSAL

UNIVERSAL CITY is without a general manager since the departure of Tarkington Baker, who departed for New York last week after tendering his resignation. The condition is expected to continue until the arrival of President Carl Laemmle, who is scheduled to arrive in Los Angeles March 20th. W. K. Howard has been serving as general manager following his work of assistant or field manager to Tarkington Baker. During the past week there were many rumors that Isadore Bernstein had been appointed to fill the vacancy, but this could not be confirmed at Universal City.

In the meantime production is going along as per the program made by Mr. Baker. Doris Schroeder is completing the film version of the Edgar Franklin story "Dood - His Diary". This is to be filmed by Harry Franklin and Edith Roberts will be the featured player. Walter Richardson has been selected as leading man. This will be his first recent appearance in films, following a number of years in stock companies.

Mary Charleson has been selected as the lead for "Crossed Claims", now being made by Reeves Eason and starring Harry Carey. Fontaine LaRue will play the feminine heavy in this production. Miss LaRue has played in a number of recent West Coast feature productions.

Cable advice from Henry McRae received at Universal City states that the Universal Company, headed by Marie Walcamp, filming "The Dragon's Net" in oriental countries and islands, is now on its way from the Philippines to the Hawaiian islands, and the company will sail for home within a month.

Universal this week has director, cameraman and three players at Yuma, Arizona, where scenes will be made of a big engineering feat, in which a portion of a mountain charged with dynamite will be blown up. This will be utilized in an early Universal western drama.

Lucien Hubbard has arrived at Universal City to assume the position of scenario editor, succeeding Percy Heath, who has gone to Metro Studios. J. C. Brownell, New York Scenario Editor for Universal, who is at the Coast, plans to return to the New York office within the next few days.

George Pyper, who has been identified with the Jesse B. Hampton productions, Louis B. Mayer and Ben Wilson, have been added to the Universal scenario staff and will write the continuity for the final episode of the Eddy Polo serial, "The Vanishing Dagger". The early chapters for this were written by Hope Loring, who has been placed in charge for the serial and western dramatic company.

"Hoot" Gibson is working in a western short subject, entitled "Pardners" with Thelma Percy as his lead. Two serial companies are also at work, those of Eddy Polo in "The Vanishing Dagger" directed by Edward Kull and "The Moon Riders" featuring Art Acord under the direction of Albert Russell.

Early completion of the editing of a number of Universal productions is announced. Included in this list is "Virginia" under the direction of Philip Rosen with Anne Cornwell in the leading role; "Everything but the Truth" featuring Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran, and "The Tokio Siren" starring Tsuru Aoki, the last scenes for which were made in Catalina Islands by Director Norman Dawn last week.

METRO

FROM the Metro Hollywood studios comes the announcement that William H. Crane has finally been induced to play before the camera and will make his screen debut in the forthcoming Winchell Smith screen version of "The Henrietta." Crane was lead in the original stage production of this name thirty years ago and several years later played lead in "The New Henrietta." He will take the role of Nickolas Van Olstuin. Buster Keaton, who has been with Roscoe Arbuckle for the past three years, has been "borrowed" to play the part of Bertie Van Olstuin, the role originally played by Douglas Fairbanks in the speaking stage production. Herbert Blache is to direct this picture and filming will be started next week.

Another subject ready for filming is "The Temple of Dawn," which will star Bert Lytell. Seena Owens, who has been seen in a number of recent Goldwyn releases, will play opposite Lytell, and one of the most important roles will be taken by Cleo Madison. Landers Stevens, a San Francisco stock actor, has been engaged for another important part and Edward Cecil will be seen in the cast. Dallas Fitzgerald will be director.

The last scenes for the Drury Lane melodrama, "The Best of Luck," were taken at Santa Barbara this week when Katherine Adams, Frederick Malatesta, Jack Holt and others made a trip to the millionaire city for a few feet of film.

Rapid progress is being made by the technical staff at Metro studios preparing for the filming of a number of Metro subjects and announcement is made that all of these will be in production within the next ten days.

Joseph Strauss, who served as studio manager of the Hollywood Metro studios while the plant was under the director-generalship of Maxwell Karger, has been transferred to the New York Metro studios where he will serve in a like capacity. Amos Myers will succeed Strauss at the Hollywood plant.

The third big inclosed stage at Metro studios is all completed with the exception of adding electrical equipment and this will be in readiness for the filming of the new series of pictures to be started within a few days.

The C. E. Shurtleff Inc., company producing "Burning Daylight," is still at Truckee working on the snow scenes for this initial Jack London story production which will star Mitchell Lewis.

Albert S. Levino is now preparing second scenario for the Shurtleff organization which will be an adaptation from the London story, "The Mutiny of ElSinore."

INCE

PRODUCTION work was started this week on the coming Enid Bennett production titled "The Incubus," scenario for which was written by Agnes Christine Johnston. Roland Lee, who played with Miss Bennett in "The Woman in the Suitcase," has been placed under contract by the Ince organization and will play opposite Miss Bennett in this subject. Tom Chatterton takes another leading role and Mae Busch has a prominent role. The direction is in charge of Fred Niblo.

A number of Civil War veterans played in an Ince production, titled "Wheelbarrow Webster," being made with Lloyd Hughes. Scenes for this section of the film were taken at the Soldiers' Home at Sawtelle, California.

The Thomas H. Ince Studio will make a two-reel propaganda film for the government at the request of Captain H. C. Billings, representative of the western district of the Service and Information Bureau. These films are to be a part of the government plan to impress ex-service men with the movement now in effect to insure their future against any hardship which may have resulted from participation in the war.

The technical department of the Thomas H. Ince Studio is to be materially enlarged by the addition of a machine shop, which will be in charge of R. H. Weller. So complete will be the equipment of this department that any kind of a metal device can be made for camera projection machines or other equipment necessary at the studios. The department when completed will employ more than twenty people.

BRUNTON

COMPLETE cast for the Mary Pickford subject is announced this week and includes Albert Austin, Harold Goodwin and Rosa Dione. The Pickford company this week began the filming of "'Op o' Me Thumb," which is being directed by Jack Dillon from the screen version prepared by Waldemar Young. The Frederick Senn and Richard Price story was used for this continuity.

THE BUFFUM PROCESS Of Art Title Making

J. H. Buffum, Director of Art Title production at Universal City

The Bessie Barriscale organization has completed "The Notorious Mrs. Sands," which was made under the direction of William Christy Cabanne from an original story and scenario by May Havey. Forrest Stanley is leading man in this production. After a vacation of two weeks, Miss Barriscale will resume work.

The J. Warren Kerrigan unit under the direction of Ernest Warde is well into production of "The House of Whispers," which is a high class mystery story with the melodramatic situations usually prominent in such stories almost entirely missing. Director Warde has a very unusual cast which includes Joseph Dowling, Claire DuBrey, Margery Wilson and Fritzi Brunette as leading woman. At present it is planned that Kerrigan's next picture will have foreign locale atmosphere.

The Annette Kellerman company is back from San Francisco and is now working on diving scenes made in the big Brunton Studio's tank.

The Dempsey serial company has returned from securing mountain and desert scenes in the vicinity of Tehachapi, California and are now working at the Brunton studios on the interiors for the fourteenth chapter. In this chapter Dempsey is stranded in a small western town and for the sake of eating fights a local slugger. A big ring set was built for these scenes and about 300 people saw the fight which was between Dempsey and a boxer whom he formerly fought. Director W. S. Van Dyke is in charge of production and Jack Cunningham is writing the continuity. The serial is to be completed by April 1.

Some men are born lucky. "Smiling Bill" Jones got paid for doing this while filming "The Blow that Killed Father," the Marion H. Kohn production

NATIONAL

THE National Film Corporation this week announced the title for the forthcoming serial which will star Jack Hoxie, who was featured in "Lightning Brice," the serial to be titled "The Son of Tarzan," and adapted from the Edgar Rice Burroughs stories of the Tarzan series. National filmed "Tarzan of the Apes," and the sequel "The Romance of Tarzan." The screen version for the first ten episodes has been put in continuity form by L. V. Jefferson and filming of the serial will be started by April 1. The location crew of the National have been searching for a location suitable for this film and a great portion of the series of releases will be made on an island in the Pacific.

The first of the new National comedies Buddy Post series has been completed and is titled "Love and Loot." Post is supported in these by Helen Howard who was recently seen in American productions. Mark Goldaine is the director.

President Harry M. Rubey of the National issued a denial to the rumors that Isadore Bernstein is to leave National where he has served as General Manager. Bernstein is to remain with National according to Rubey's statement. Marion H. Kohn has returned to Los Angeles to give his personal attention to the making of the three series of Marion H. Kohn productions. This week Mr. Kohn engaged Harry Wolsey to write the continuity for the comedies being made and also engaged Bert Glennon to have charge of the photography of Kohn productions.

Marion Kohn announced that he has completed arrangements for distribution of the Will Roger's "The Illiterate Digest." World rights have been secured for this epigramic review and the first National release will be made April 4. The sale of these films will be handled by Joe Brandt, 1600 Broadway, New York.

GOLDWYN

TWELVE subjects are in production at Goldwyn Culver City Studios, the number being divided equally between star and all star subjects.

Clarence Badger is making the final scenes for "Jes' Call Me Jim," with Will Rogers, and is to direct the next Rogers picture, which will be an adaptation from the Eleanor Gates story, "Alec Lloyd." The story is of a semi-western character and will give Rogers and his ropers an opportunity to work before the camera.

Upon the completion of the Tom Moore subject, "The Great Accident," work will be started under the direction of Harry Beaumont upon the making of the well known stage comedy "Officer 666."

Reginald Barker has a few more scenes to make for the "Branding Iron," adapted from the Burt story of the same name, and he is then to make a screen version of the stage success, "Bunty Pulls the Strings," from the play by Graham Moffett. Basil King arrived at the Goldwyn Studios to look over many of the scenes made by T. Hayes Hunter for an all star cast for the King story, "Earth Bound." Many of the interiors for this are to be made, including that of an Episcopal church, which occupies all of stage six at the Goldwyn plant. This is the largest stage of the studio and the entire depth and width is needed for this setting. The columns used are eight feet in diameter and a crucifix which hangs over the altar is seventeen and a half feet long. Author King will remain at the Goldwyn plant until the completion of this film.

It has been decided that Hunter shall next direct the film version of Hall Caine's story and play, "The Christian," which will probably not be put in production for a number of weeks. Wallace Worsley is making the final scenes for "The Penalty," from the Morris story, and is next to direct "Yellow Men and Gold."

Complete cast for Pauline Frederick production of "Madame X" has been selected, and besides the leads including Casson Ferguson and William Courtleigh, previously announced, will include Pat Moore, Maude Louis, Hardee Kirkland, Albert Roscoe, Sidney Ainsworth, Willard Louis and Lionel Belmore.

Besides Alice Hollister and Lewis Stone, who are to play leads in "Milestones" under the direction of Paul Scardon, the cast will consist of Harvey Clark, Gerald Pring, Gertrude Norman, Carol Fleming and Lionel Belmore.

Sidney Alcott has completed all scenes for the Rupert Hughes production, "Scratch My Back," and Victor Schertzinger has the last of the Mabel Normand scenes made for "The Slim Princess.""

Vice-President Abraham Lehr this week returned from a stay of several days in New York and assumed his duties as general manager of the Goldwyn plant.

F. P. LASKY

A MORE complete producing schedule than has been given out previously was announced this week by Jesse L. Lasky, in charge of production of the Famous Players-Lasky Studio. According to the statement made by Mr. Lasky the West Coast producing plants are to be busier during the coming months than at any previous time, and the producing schedule now prepared provides for some of the biggest film subjects undertaken by this organization.

One of the most important features is the announcement that two additions have been made to the writing staff. Mrs. William Vaughan Moody, widow of the late author of "The Great Divide" and other plays, including "The Faith Healer" is now on her way to the coast to work with the scenario department of the Famous Players-Lasky studio, in the preparation of the working script for a screen play of Mr. Moody's drama, "The Faith Healer." This is to be made by Director George Melford and will constitute the fourth of this special productions.

Frank Condon, the well known Saturday Evening Post writer, has also been added to this staff to prepare a portion of the continuity for the Sir Gilbert Parker story, "The Translation of a Savage," now being filmed by Director Melford. After the completion of this, Mr. Condon will write the continuity for "The Shulamite," which is to be from the play of the same name by Edward Knoblauch. Director Melford is now working on the Parker story and with a group of players is now in the high Sierras making a number of the exteriors. In the present subject being produced by Melford, as well as the next two to be filmed by him, Mabel Julienne Scott will play the leads. Milton Sills will appear in all of these productions, and will play the lead in probably all of them.

Paul Powell, whose most recent work was the direction of "Pollyanna" starring Mary Pickford, has been engaged by Famous Players-Lasky to direct the next Ethel Clayton Picture, "All in a Night," adapted from the Samuel Merwin play of the same name. The cast selected to support Miss Clayton includes Jack Holt, Clyde Fillmore, Winter Hall, Clarence Geldart, Josephine Crowell and Fanny Midgley. The scenario for this play was prepared by Edith Kennedy and many of the scenes will be laid in China, giving Miss Clayton colorful Chinese costumes, instead of the society atmosphere which she has had in many of her plays.

When Byron Morgan wrote the story entitled, "The Hippopotamus Parade," which is serving as the present Wallace Reed production, he wrote it around traffic conditions in Los Angeles, and this week Reed and company filmed several days at the traffic center of Los Angeles, Seventh Street and Broadway. Making these scenes when traffic was the heaviest caused considerable delay in the moving of vehicles, all of which will appear in the subject, which will be released under the title of "Too Much Speed."

Permanent title has been selected for the Robert Warwick comedy-drama being filmed by Joseph Henabery. This will be known as "The Trouble Hunter" and is an adaptation from the play, "The Man from Blankley's." Warwick takes the role of a Scotchman and in many of the scenes wears kilts.

As soon as Tom Meighan completes work in "Civilian Clothes," which is being made at the Famous Players-Lasky Studio in the east, he will return to the coast to play in the William C. DeMille production, "Conrad in Quest of His Youth." All is now in readiness for the filming of this subject and work will be started as soon as Meighan arrives. Kathlyn Williams and Margaret Loomis are the other principals for this play.

Chas. Maigne is directing Mary Miles Minter in her next Realart production, which will be an adaptation from the John Fox, Jr., Kentucky mountain story, "The Mountain Europa." No plans have been announced regarding the production of Wanda Hawley subjects, which are to be released through Artcraft.

FOX

DIRECTOR JACQUES JACCARD and the Tom Mix Company are home from Sonora and Columbia, California, where they went to secure exteriors for the California western, "No Limit Carson." These locations were found to be ideal for they represent the California gold fields after the gold rush days. Columbia was at one time a town of 15,000, but now scarcely more than 400 inhabitants.

William Russell and company are still in the north making exteriors for "Big Jim O'Kane." Howard M. Mitchell is on the production of "His Harvest," starring Shirley Mason, and Director Scott Dunlap is filming the Buck Jones picture, "Forbidden Trails." Dunlap is author of the scenario, an adaptation from the story of the same name by Charles Alden Seltzer.

Edward J. LeSaint has completed the filming of "The Rose of Nome," starring Gladys Brockwell and Madlaine Traverse is working in "The Spirit of Good" under the direction of Denison Clift, who is author of this story. This is a western with a present day atmosphere.

Winifred Westover has been engaged as leading woman for the Buck Jones Company, and other principals of this cast are Stanton Heck, William Elmer and Harry Dunkinson.

HERE AND THERE

THE Burston Studio has been leased by Wade productions for the making of a series of two reel comedies featuring Jack Purzes. Hollis M. Wade is the head of this company and Warren Milain is director. Mary Eline is playing the feminine lead.

N. W. Aronson is on the way to New York representing several producers respecting the purchase of stories. Mr. Aronson has just sold "Big Happiness," the Pan story, to Dustin Farnum and it will serve as this star's initial Robertson-Cole release.

Victor Potel, the elongated comedian known to fame as "Slippery Slim," of Essanay, "Snakeville" rural comedies and who has been supporting such stars as Emmy Wehlen, Mary Pickford, Nazimova and others in special features, is to head his own organization in the production of two reel situation comedies from original and magazine stories. The comedies will be produced under the supervision of Edward J. Atkinson, well known in the film world as a business and production manager. Production will be started immediately on the completion of Mr. Potel's work in Nazimova's present feature.

Our Motto: All the News, If it's News, When it's News

Some rain—some sun.

Maude George is learning to talk Spanish.

Rowland Lee has put his name to an Ince contract.

Frank Keenan was seen on our streets this week.

Betty Blythe is to be Lew Cody's leading woman.

Cassy Ferguson is entertaining his mother from Denver.

Teddy Sampson is back from New York with a lot of talk.

Naom Childers writes poetry. Some has been published.

Fred C. Quimby left our village flat to go back to New York.

C. M. A. Lehr of Goldwyn is back from zero weather of the east.

Leah Baird and friend husband, Arthur Beck, have come to our town.

Pauline Frederick has purchased a $75,000 home in Beverly Hills.

The Willis & Inglis publicity green sheet now carries "by Gus Inglis."

Chic Sales was seen on Broadway eating a radish and then the band played.

Louise Glaum is home from New Yawk with a lot of new things to wear.

C. Gardiner Sullivan started to gallivant around the world this week.

E. Mason Hopper broiled a chicken that his troupe ate. Brave Thespians.

Anita Stewart has a brother named George and he's in the films, too.

There is an eight and a half pound girl at the Joseph Henabery home.

Society news—Harold Lloyd called on Douglas MacLean and Doris May this week.

When Will Russell gets home from Fort Bragg he ought to make a good publicity writer.

"Victor Potel Comedies," is to be on a shingle hung up in Hollywood shortly.

Watty Rothbacker is back in this village to look after his new and growing laboratory.

Grace Darmond writes her own stories and directs her own comedy dramas. Nothing to do.

"Bernie" Bernstein wires that he is not going to accept the management of Universal City.

Ed Solman refused to use fake snow so Mitch Lewis' Burning Daylight Company had to go to Truckee.

Hob Bosworth has another tragedy in front of him, "The Black Pall," writ by Ben Aimes Williams.

Rumors have the Associate Producers tied up with every distributing organization. Who's a liar?

Bill Keefe is reported to have been elected to membership of the International Purity League.

Our readers may be pleased to know that J. Hokum is a Los Angeles plumber but not related to this publication.

Roscoe Arbuckle claims his hobby is to wear a bathing suit while he washes his automobile. You notice he claims.

Ray Gallagher plays the name role in a Supreme Comedy entitled, "Her Beloved Burglar." He is. (You can sue us for any amount.)

William H. Crane has joined our colony and thereby becomes a student of the screen at the ripe old age of—no we won't say.

Helen Ferguson, so P. A. writes, is in the market for a bungalow with fruit trees n'everything. The real estateds will get you, Helen.

Mabel Normand has a rubber suit she wears in "The Slim Princess" which takes the air. Mabel is stout in some scenes. Yaas rather.

Dorothy Churchill who took voice culture in Paris has come into the silent drama and will be seen in a series of National comedies.

Bill Mong at Truckee received a telegram. "Four arrived yesterday three living and doing nicely. Congratlations. Steve." Bill has a hog ranch.

Enid Bennett's dressing room was in mourning this week. An inquiry brought the information that Buddha had died. Buddha was a handsome chow.

Lon Chaney wears a harness that holds his legs up out of sight, he now being engaged to play the legless role in "Scratch My Back."

Our business has expanded so that Tom Ince has found it necessary to put in a factory that will make anything from a pin to a thrashing machine.

Hal Roach has moved into his new studio at Culver City and has so much room he don't know what to do so he ordered an increase in the size of sets.

Robert Brunton and M. C. Levee walked across the Alexandria rug the other week and now its Robert Brunton Studio, Incorporated, capital —5,000,000.

Mitch Lewis says his hobby is work. Give him the air. Once he was a stage hand and is now a member of good standing of Local No. 9, I. A. T. S. E.

We again hear mention of Wall Street financing the movies with respect to a recent merger of Bulls Eye and Interstate with Realcraft Pictures Corporation.

Many of our citizens have spoken in ungentlemanly terms concerning a firm named Eastman and its one cent raise per foot on raw film stock. Many mean things have been said.

Marion H. Kohn is in our midst again to look after Marion H. Kohn productions. (Double charge on all Kohn advertising because we have to mention his name twice to identify him.)

Julian Josephson was refused admittance to the Ince studio because the guard didn't know he belonged, which is another evidence that a scenario writer's life is a hard one and that sometimes they are forced to go to the studio.

Julius Furthman or Stephen Fox or both did not make an income tax return in figures. Instead this scenario writer filled in the blank and then attached this statement. "In the year 1919 I received certain monies as an inventor of fiction and stories and had forms of literary statements purchased at various times from me by the producers of motion pictures. I am advised that the monies so received are not income within meaning of the income tax laws and for this reason do not make report of the same." Julius Stephen Furthman Fox claims that writing of a scenario is inventing and inventors do not bow to or otherwise recognize income tax collectors.

The Rise of Frank Borzage

From Stage-Manager to Director Via "Stock and Rep," He Climbed

FRANK BORZAGE, director of Fannie Hurst's "Humoresque," featuring Alma Rubens, his first picture for Cosmopolitan Productions, is a Salt Lake boy. While his first blink at God's sunlight came to him in the Mormon capital he never exhibited any signs of the matrimonial attitude for which it has been libeled and slandered, and his wives are "one and fluently ample." By this you will know he is happily married.

Like a few others of the histrionic clan, Borzage was born with the love of the theatre in his heart. Various obstacles conspired to keep him away from the stage, however, and it wasn't until his thirteenth year on earth that he made his first appearance. Borzage doesn't talk much about his initial effort behind the footlights, but he stuck to the stage, notwithstanding, and shortly afterwards, he became assistant stage manager. This new job gave him ample opportunities not only to study the theatre but also to give circulation to his ambition to act, and he played "bits."

Eight long, hard, and sometimes lean, years of this "stock and rep" life, and then Frank Borzage became a full-fledged stage director and character actor.

Now comes the paradox of it. All these years Borzage had played character parts because in the opinion of his friends and himself he wasn't cut out for anything else.

Frank Borzage, who is directing Alma Rubens, : being featured in Fannie Hurst's story, "Humoresque," a Cosmopolitan production

But Thomas H. Ince grabbed him for the screen and made him a juvenile lead.

"But I've always played characters," protested Borzage.

"You'll play juvenile leads with me," said Ince firmly, and thereafter Borzage appeared conspicuously in the final close-up.

EXPERT WORK BY EXPERT PEOPLE

W. Pigott Karl R. Coolidge Dorothy Rochfort

Personal and Otherwise

June Elvidge accepted an invitation of the Social Welfare League last week, to act as sales person in one of the local department stores, under an arrangement whereby ten percent of her sales went to various charities selected by the League. Miss Elvidge, it seems, chose a certain millinery department, and as soon as it was discovered that she was playing the role of sales girl, business increased so rapidly that the buyer is reported to have sent out a hurry call for more stock. Miss Elvidge's most recent picture, Charles Miller's production of "The Law of the Yukon," will be released shortly.

Artclass Pictures are worried about their contracted player, Walter Miller, and wondering just how they can exert a strong parental arm across the continent to bring him back East. Mr. Miller played one of the strong roles in "The Return of Tarzan" for Numa Pictures, upon completion of which he was loaned to Selznick for "The Invisible Divorce," and he is now playing opposite to Betty Compson in that player's first production in her own corporation. Artclass are expecting him in New York within a month, however, to commence work on one of their productions for Robertson-Cole release.

Accompanying the completed print of "The Return of Tarzan," which recently reached New York, was Mrs. Walter Beckwith, who chaperoned the 18 lions under contract to Messrs. Weiss, and now housed at their Yonkers studio.

Billie Burke and Percy Marmont are at work in Sixteenth Century costumes at the Amsterdam Opera House, where a scene of that period is being interposed by Director John Robertson into "Away Goes Prudence."

James Vincent, President of the Motion Picture Directors' Association, has been engaged by the American Cinema Corp. to produce their next picture.

Gladden James, who has just completed the leading role in "A Good Woman," a Whiteside-Parke production, has been engaged to play with Norma Talmadge in "Yes or No," under the direction of R. William Neill. Mr. James was seen with Miss Talmadge some time ago in "The Social Secretary," "The Safety Curtain" and "The Heart of Wetona."

Estelle Taylor left recently for Lake Saranac, where she is to start work on the Fox superfeature "Milady's Dress," in which she is to play he leading role under the direction of Charles Brabin.

Leon Gendron makes his screen debut in "The World and His Wife," a picture that Robert G. Vignola is making for International, with an all-star cast that includes Alma Rubens, Montagu Love, Pedro de Cordoba and Charles Gerrard. Mr. Vignola is said to be very enthusiastic about this new juvenile, and to consider him one of the screen "finds" of the year.

Announcement has been made by the U. S. Photoplay Corp., owner of "Determination," of the leasing of the Lincoln Studios at Grantwood for two years, where picture production is scheduled to begin June 1st. Contracts are said to have been signed with Richard Travers, who will be starred, and William A. Turner, Leslie Stowe, Leslie Hunt, Corinne Uzzell and Irene Tams. Henry McRae Webster will assume charge as supervising director, with John L. McCutcheon as co-director and Herbert Messmore as technical director. "Determination," which was written and directed by Captain Frederick F. Stoll, will be released during the coming summer.

Owen Moore is expected East again to work at the Selznick Studios here. He has been at their West Coast studios for several weeks playing in "His Word of Honor."

Burton George is now directing "The Prince of Pines" for Selznick, in which there are six leading parts. The scenario was written by Willard Mack, who expects to appear in a spoken version of the play.

Mildred Harris Chaplin Contest Nears Close

The Mildred Harris Chaplin contest around the question as to "Which is the inferior sex?" will close April 30th, 1920. The contest is part of the exploitation campaign connected with Mrs. Chaplin's first Mayer-made First National release, "The Inferior Sex," and has aroused a great deal of interest throughout the country it is stated.

Absent Two Years, Miss Hollister Returns

After an absence from the screen of two years, on account of illness, Alice Hollister has returned to motion pictures in the Goldwyn production of the famous stage play "Milestones," by Edward Knoblock and Arnold Bennett. Miss Hollister will have the leading feminine role in the picture, which will be started at Culver City this week.

Jottings from The Studios

June Elvidge, who has been practically snowbound in the Adirondacks for three months, while at work on "The Law of the Yukon," under Charles Miller's direction, returned to America's fashion centre, Fifth avenue, recently, to find that the beautiful gowns which had lain packed away in her wardrobe trunks while she braved the cold in moleskins and boots, had been entirely discarded in fashion's latest decrees. So instead of indulging in social gaieties, Miss Elvidge set about collecting another array of frocks and frills, and her only hope is that they will work harmoniously with her next picture.

Charles Maigne, whose recent successes have included "The Firing Line" and "The Invisible Bond" starring Irene Castle, and the Paramount-Artcraft specials "The Fighting Chance" and "The Copperhead," is now engaged to direct Mary Miles Minter.

Enid Bennett is said to have given material assistance in the capacity of Art Director for her latest Thomas Ince production "Hairpins," as she is well acquainted with the architecture of European cities, some of which was reproduced for various scenes in the picture.

Julian Josephson has been assigned the task of preparing a series of special features for Lloyd Hughes, the first of which will be entitled "Wheelbarrow Webster." Mr. Josephson for his rural and small-town comedy dramas, which include "Greased Lightning," "String Beans," "The Hired Man," "The Egg-Crate Wallop," "Playing the Game," "Hay-Foot, Straw-Foot," "Bill Henry," "Red Hot Dollars," "Crooked Straight" and "Paris Green," all starring Charles Ray. He is also the author of "Shakespeare Clancy," featuring Douglas MacLean and Doris May.

Irma Harrison, who was last seen as leading woman for Gareth Hughes in "The Red Viper," and opposite Johnny Dooley in the first of the series of Dooley Comedies, returned this week from Georgia, where she finished exteriors for the starring role of the Buffalo Film Company's third picture "The Daughter of Devil Dan." Miss Harrison is supported by Kempton Greene in the leading role.

Hugh Ford, with a company of Paramount-Artcraft players, headed by Thomas Meighan, has gone to Cuba to make a series of scenes for a forthcoming production. In the party are Martha Mansfield, Frank Losee, Alfred Hickman, Warren Cook, Marie Shotwell, Maude Turner Gordon, and Albert Gram, all members of the cast, also the scenario writer, cameraman and assistant director. They will remain about ten days in Cuba, and will go to one of the large Army camps in the South for more exteriors before returning to New York.

Practical Wisdom

The chief functions of the commercial film Laboratory are to make "Quality Prints" and render "Prompt Service." Any Laboratory which cannot supply both is not functioning.

The Republic policy is for Quality, our physical and financial resources are for Service. The use of modern machinery—the finest raw material and chemicals obtainable plus our expert human element insure Quality. Our desire and willingness to please insure Service.

If you are not now getting "Quality Prints" plus "Prompt Service" you had better let us know and we will immediately transform these words into deeds.

New Three Thousand Seat House Opens on Upper Broadway

Picker's Rio Designed to Attract High-Class Patronage

UNACCOMPANIED by the pre-announcements and blare of triumpets that customarily herald the opening of a new Broadway motion picture theatre, David V. Picker's "Rio" on that thoroughfare at 159th Street, commenced life inauspiciously a few days ago.

The idea should not be gained from the foregoing that the house would not have merited a greater degree of publicity, for such is far from the real fact.

As a large community theatre the "Rio" will more than hold it's own with any similar sized house in the country. From lobby to screen the owners have spent money lavishly to produce a place of amusement fully in keeping with the community in which the theatre is hoped to be the center of attraction.

The theatre itself occupies an entire city block, has a seating capacity of approximately 3,000 and cost $500,000 to build and equip.

Entrance is gained from the Broadway side, through a lobby decorated in imitation marble. The dimensions of the lobby being about twenty-five by forty, with a box office placed in one corner.

From the lobby a set of double doors permits an entrance into the foyer from which stairs lead up to the balcony, loges, boxes, and retiring rooms. A heavy carpeting is placed over all walking areas and on the staircases.

The decorations throughout the house were planned and executed by the Wm. Eckhart Studios, and as a result are fully up to the standard expected. A color scheme of Gold and Blue was selected as the basis on which all color work and hangings were worked out. The fluted columns are of gold as is also much of the exposed decorative plasters, while the blue has been expressed by the tapestries, back drop and the upholstery of chairs and divans. A peculiar gold, brown and blue mottled effect has been carried out on all the wall surfaces of any great area. This gives a richness to the otherwise bare walls and panels.

There are about 1,750 seats on the auditorium floor, served by two center and two outside aisles. The balcony seats another 800, and in addition to these there are 250 box and loge seats located as usual at the front of the balcony.

The staircases leading from the foyer to the balcony enters the latter place at both ends of a balcony foyer or mezzanine. This foyer is made comfortable by a number of blue upholstered divans, comfortable chairs and potted plants.

From one side of the mezzanine foyer ramps lead off to the balcony cross over; on the other side to rest rooms and smoking rooms. The latter are finished in peacock blue and gold.

SPECIFICATIONS
Name	Rio
Owner	David V. Picker
Manager	Francis A. Mangin
Seating Capacity	3000
Cost	$500,000
Ventilation	Typhoon
Decoration	Eckhart Studios
Projectors	Simplex
Motor Generators	Westinghouse
Organ	Hall
Elec. Installation	Edwards Elec. Cons. Co.

An exceptionally fine stage has been provided for special acts and features. In size it is 30 x 40 and is equipped with all necessary devices. There are eighteen dressing rooms for the use of artists when vaudeville is shown. Directly in front of the stage apron is the sunken orchestra pit where the console of the Hall Organ has been placed.

Lighting Fixtures

An excellent selection of chandeliers to match the remainder of the house was made. One large fixture drops from the grand dome and illuminates by indirect lighting the orchestra floor and the loge seats. Further back four smaller fixtures of a similar design furnish light for the balcony. Around the side walls are 20 wall lights properly shaded to protect the eyes of the audience during the showing of the pictures at the same time giving off enough illumination indirectly to make it safe for patrons to walk to their seats.

Ventilation

An adequate supply of fresh clean air is assured patrons of the Rio. Up on the roof of the theatre huge Typhoon fans draw in great quantities of air from above the street level and force it down through lattice work in front of the proscenium arch. During the summer months if desired these fans may be reversed in order to withdraw the hot fetid air from the top of the auditorium.

Projection

The projection room is located at the back of the balcony, 148 feet from the stage and is reached by a short iron ladder. In reality the projection room consists of three rooms, one for the rewinding and making of repairs, one for the motor generator sets and switchboard and the third for the two Simplex machines and the stereopticon.

The machine room measures 8 x 10 and contains two, 96 ampere Westinghouse motor generator sets, two auto starters and a switchboard. The projector room is 8 x 12 and the rewind room 8 x 9. From the projection room the picture is thrown 148 feet to the Gardiner Velvet Gold Fibre screen. A complete system of intercommunicating phones connects projection room with stage, ticket office and manager's desk.

When the whole layout is considered, the decorations, scenic effects, and equipment, there is every reason to believe that the Rio under the able direction of Francis A. Mangin, who is well known throughout the Metropolitan district as a Manager of more than usual talent, will be a huge success. The theatre is worthy of the patronage of the neighborhood where, it is in operation.

Springfield, Mass., House to be Entirely Remodelled During Coming Summer

Bullard and Bullard Are Drawing Plans to Bring Princess Theatre Up-to-Date

THE Princess theatre, which W. W. Watts recently secured, will be thoroughly remodeled during the coming summer. Bullard and Bullard, architects, have prepared plans which will greatly alter the size and appearance of the playhouse.

The main floor will be extended 30 feet and dropped 32 inches, which will permit the installation of about 400 new seats on the ground floor. The entire second floor of the building will be taken out and a balcony and mezzanine floor put in, which will allow about 500 new seats to be added. This will make the Princess the largest theatre in the city in number of seats.

The new lobby will occupy part of the present lobby and also the entire room occupied at present by the Metcalf Company. It will be decorated and finished in the latest style and will be a promenade second to none. The box-office will be on the Fifth street side, making it convenient for ticket purchasers.

The interior of the house will be done over and Watts expects to make it the most beautiful in central Illinois. The best ideas in use in the leading theatres in the country will be utilized in the finishing of the playhouse.

A beautiful new canopy will be added to the front of the building, which will not only be an ornament but also a beneficial addition to the theatre. A handsome electric sign will also be conspicuous when the theatre is finished.

Watts will also take possession of the Lyric theatre about the first of July and extensive improvements will be made on it. The Gaiety will also be gone over, enlarged and redecorated, and many new seats installed.

Watts expects to make the Gaiety, Princess and Lyric theatres second to none in the state when all plans are finished.

Michigan's Capital City to Have Modern and Beautiful Theatre

New Blackstone in Lansing Will Soon Be Under Construction

THE theatre census taken by the Motion Picture News last December, showing Lansing, Michigan, to be far behind other cities in the state in theatre construction, set a half dozen local motion picture theatre pioneers to thinking. The result of their deliberations has been the announcement within the past few days of a new $200,000 theatre building.

The census showed Grand Rapids to have a theatre for every 3,000 population; Flint, one for every 4,500; Detroit, one for every 5,200; Lansing, one for every 9,000.

A 50-year lease has been taken on property just west of the Elks' home and south of the Bijou theatre. "The Blackstone," with a seating capacity of 1,700, is to be built on the site. The building will be fireproof, of reinforced concrete, steel and brick. The front will be terra cotta with colored relief panels in the recesses. The roof and balcony will be supported by steel trusses which will eliminate obstructions to the view from any part of the house.

Those behind the Blackstone project are Roy Brown, former owner of the Orpheum theatre; E. C. Jarvis, present owner of the Orpheum and Garden theatres. John S. Wilson, a few years ago in charge of the principal amusement park near this city; J. C. McCullough; Frank A. Wall, who had the Vaudette theatre some years ago; William T. Britton, alderman of the city, and William R. Towne.

These men have been founders of the motion picture business in Lansing and will give their range of experience to the building and operation of the new house.

The company has been incorporated under the Delaware incorporation laws and the Michigan utilities commission will pass upon the sale of their stock, a limited amount of which will be passed outside the directorate, early in March.

S. D. Butterworth, of Lansing, prepared the plans for the Blackstone.

The building is 66 by 134 feet, facing Allegan street. The seating capacity of 1,700 will be divided between orchestra and balcony floors. Two stores are planned on each side of the theatre entrance. The commercial feature of the building is taking on new importance since work was started on the plan and now includes the addition of six stories to the front of the building to be used exclusively as office suites for physicians and dentists. The tentative plan will give the city another large cafeteria in the basement.

Particular attention has been paid to ventilation. The system will be of the washed air type. Fresh air is taken from the outside 40 above the ground and drawn through a water spray to cleanse it thoroughly. After being washed the air finds its way to the heating chamber and finally into the auditorium by way of underneath the seats. Foul air is carried through roof ducts.

For cooling in summer, a refrigerating plant will be installed and the air cooled and sent to the auditorium through the same air ducts under the seats. The frigid air system in summer eliminates the use of fans, the noise of which is irritable to sensative persons. The Blackstone will be equipped with the very latest word in modernity.

Six New Houses for Finkelstein-Ruben Circuit

SIX new theatres, representing an outlay of about $3,300,000, with a total seating capacity of 13,100, are to be completed in Minneapolis and St. Paul this year by Finkelstein & Ruben.

Two of the structures, one in each of the twin cities, will be known as the New Capitol, and will at least rival the Capitol theatre in New York in architectural beauty if not in size.

The New Capitol in St. Paul, located at Seventh and St. Peter streets, will take the place of what is known in St. Paul as "the Mannheimer site," an unsightly steel structure that has been an eyesore for a number of years. This one, alone, will cost about $1,500,000, and will seat 3,100 and its owners declare it will be the finest theatre building in the West, barring none. Plans call for the official opening June 1.

Four months later the New Capitol theatre in Minneopolis will be opened at Eighth and Hennepin. While this will have a seating capacity of 3,300, the cost will be less, totaling between $750,000 and $1,000,000. T. B. Walker, owner of one of the biggest and costliest art galleries in the country has offered the use of a number of his best paintings in the foyer.

A block away from the New Capitol two other theatres are going up. One, the Blue Mouse, seating 1,500, to cost $200,000, will be opened May 1, while ground for the second, the New Colonial, with a seating capacity of 1,800, costing $350,000, to be ready December 1, will be broken in a few days.

The fourth new Minneapolis theatre is now under course of construction at 14th and Nicollet. It has not been named, but will seat 1,600 and will cost $250,000. It is expected this one will be ready June 1,

The New Aster, now being built in St. Paul, will be completed May 1. This is to cost $250,000 and will accommodate about 1,800 persons.

Head of Stella Laboratories Police Chief at 21

Charlie Hirliman Has Made Good Record as Officer and Organizer

"BY the jumping grasshopper, Charlie! how many cars do you own anyway?" one of us asked as Hirliman opened the door of his Rolls-Royce and bade us enter.

"Oh! only a couple or so more," he replied, as he hopped into his seat and opened her up wide. Before we had a chance to comment on his apparent superfluity of motive accessories, the R.R. was traveling at 40 per, and just getting warmed up to the road. Finally, when our lungs had overcome the first rush of air, we managed to yell out, "Good for you. You've got to have it handed to you for keeping up with the Jones,' in these days of the High Cost of Living." Which comment seemed a brave one, when you consider that neither one of us owned even as much as a Henry.

By this time the speedometer was registering around 60, and Charlie Hirliman had settled back as if the hardest part of the job was over and all that had to be done from then on was to enjoy the scenery. But not so, us.

"Just a minute, there, Hirliman. You know, we're not in such a hurry as all this." 'Twas said bravely as though the excuse was genuine, but he must have known because he smiled rather wanly and lifted pressure off his accelerator. He slowed his English steed down to 25 and proceeded to lose interest in the road ahead, giving all his attention to us and our conversation. As our real reason—Charlie would have put it "raison d'etre"—for being where we were was to pry loose from Hirliman some intimate facts about his life, we started off with the usual question: "How did you start in this business?" Perhaps, though, we should tell our readers who live far, far away from New York, that Charles Hirliman is at the present time Treasurer and General Manager of the Stella Film Laboratories of New Jersey.

"Well," said Charlie, "I used to grind a projection machine back in 1909, down at Pathe's on 14th Street. It was mighty good experience for a youngster, and I learned a lot of things that have helped me since then. But after awhile I figured I could tackle a more responsible job. When the Eclair Film Co. offered me the position of assistant manager, I accepted and held the job from 1910 to 1913.

"The desire to own my own business took hold of me, and it was not long before I organized the Life Photo Film Co., and the Commercial M. P. Co. Later on, after closing out my interests in these firms, I organized the Eclipse Film Co., where I was General Manager. I continued on there for quite a time and was doing a good business. A little later I became President and General Manager of the Craftsman Film Co., which I organized."

"Seems to me you are some little organizer," I said.

"Perhaps I am," he replied. "I enjoy making money for others as well as for myself. For instance, the Craftsman Film Laboratories was organized by me and was a very successful and growing concern, when it became necessary to sell it on account of my enlisting in the Army."

At this point Hirliman's face brightened and it was evident that mention of the Army brought back happy recollections. We passengers realized it especially. For, immediately, Charlie stepped on the accelerator as if he held a personal grudge against it and intended to push it through the bottom of the car. First we were going at 25—a second later at 65. There were no immediate stops or gradations.

"I enlisted as a private," he said out of the corner of his mouth, "and a little later was given a commission of Lieutenant. After passing another examination I was made a Captain. A portion of my service was spent in Washington, where I was officer in charge of the Government's Laboratory for Motion Pictures. Major Tom Evans was commanding officer.

"I was particularly interested in aeroplanes, and after passing still more tests in the aviation branch, was awarded the 'spread wings' of a pilot. And some day, take it from me,' he remarked, 'I'm going to own a plane."

Now we knew why he chastised that accelerator in the way he did. His imagination was carrying him away to the time when he was piloting "ships," and by that comparison our speed on terra firma seemed excessively low. He looked back at us and noticed our uneasy expressions.

"Yeh, I do like to travel fast—and to work fast, too," he added.

But an instant later it seemed as if we were going to be supplied with an unlooked for ending to our interviewing tour. A man clothed in the authority of the law stepped forth from the sidewalk and waved an official hand at us. Hirliman slowed down and stopped. We expected a summons to follow. But no! Hirliman and the officer were shaking hands in as cordial a manner as ever seen. Something about it looked funny to us, and as soon as we were out of sight of the "arm of the law" we asked Charlie how he worked it.

"Oh, I used to be Chief of Police for 6 years. At the time I believe I happened to be the youngest Chief in the country. I was 21 then. That's 7 years ago. When I come to think about it, I was kind of young for the job, but nobody seemed to kick over the way I handled things."

By this time we were entering the ferry slip and the ride and cross examination

TYPHOON COOLING SYSTEM

Prepare to start the summer season early. Advertise your TYPHOON SYSTEM—play it up big—feature it in your lobby, and before you realize it people will be crowding into your house on the hottest days to get away from the heat—to cool off. This is the reason why such people as Saenger—Lynch—Loew—Signal Crandall—and many other big theatre owners use TYPHOONS.

Summer will soon be with us and unless your theatre is cool and comfortable you are bound to experience a big falling off in receipts. Your rush hour crowd will be about as big as that shown in the sketch at the right. Don't depend upon pictures and music alone to fill a hot stuffy theatre—it can't be done.

A Log Cabin Theatre

Perhaps the most unique theatre in the country is that nearing completion at Pine Knot, California, built by Frank H. Johnson, of Los Angeles, and to be known as the Grizzly theatre. The Grizzly is to furnish amusement afternoon and evening for the visitors of Big Bear Valley's summer resort. Bear Valley is in the San Bernardino Mountains, 150 miles northeast of Los Angeles. The several hotels there are open from May 1st to October 1st, and for the past several years have been crowded with guests. The Grizzly will be operated the same period each year by the builder. The theatre is built of logs, and has a seating capacity of 500. It has its own electric plant and fire protection, an expensive organ has been installed. J. Slipper and Company, of Los Angeles, have fitted the booth with two Simplex projectors.

The exterior of the theatre has the appearance of a log cabin in front, while the side walls are of clap boards. The interior decoration gives the impression of the audience being seated in a forest of oaks. A small stage with all necessary equipment for vaudeville has been made a part of the theatre.

Typhoon Fan Increases Capital Stock

At a special meeting of the directors of the Typhoon Fan Company held in New York City recently, it was decided to increase the capital stock of the company $100,000.

This increase in the capital stock is made necessary by the big improvements being made in the construction and the equipment of the new Typhoon factory, while considerable portion of the money will be used for the establishment and equipment of Typhoon Company offices being opened in several of the larger cities throughout the country.

Back to Work Again

J. Smith, Corning, N. Y.

You will no doubt be surprised to hear from me, but one can never tell what will happen.

It has been a long time since I have written you so will try and make up for lost time. I have not been operating for some time owing to trouble with my eyes, but that I would take another chance at one of the machines, strange what drawing power the booth has on one who has served some time in one.

I am back at the same old stand the Bijou, where I worked when I joined your wonderful league.

I have not seen the News in months, so don't know what progress the little old league has made, but I surely intend to subscribe for the News, so if you will be kind enough to send me a blank I would be very thankful to you.

I wish the League and the News the greatest success this year.

Equipment Operating Projection Questions Answered

Practical Electricity—V
Study Lessons for the Projectionist

IN the practice of electricity we speak of different materials as conductors and insulators.

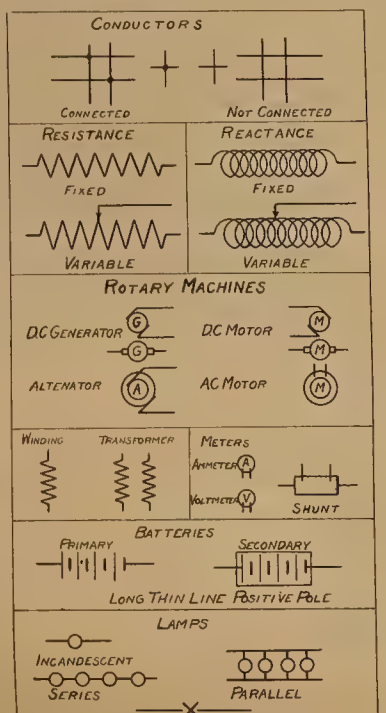
Conductors are materials which readily allow the flow of electricity, those materials which conduct heat readily being good conductors of electricity. Metals are the best conductors, while carbon and moist substances are fair conductors for the flow of electric current. Insulators are those substances which hinder the flow of electricity, and while there are no materials which are absolutely non-conductors, yet many substances, such as slate, wax, glass, etc., offer a high resistance to the flow of electric current.

Good conductors of electricity are metals and alloys, some of which are silver, copper, aluminum, brass, iron, lead and tin. Fair conductors are carbon, acid solutions, sea water, moist earth and living vegetable substances, such as trees, plants, etc. Pure water is a very poor conductor, while dry woods and cotton material have high resistance properties. Materials which act as insulators, or as often called non-conductors, are slate, oils, silk, wax, mica glass and dry air.

The accompanying table gives a list of conductors and insulators, those materials having the best properties for conducting and resisting lectricity being given at the top of the list.

A wire covered with an insulating material or suspended on insulating material is said to be insulated, although its ends may be connected to a source of electromotive force. The earth is a good conductor of electricity and is often used as a means of completing an electric circuit. Much difficulty is experienced in such cases by wires making contact with substance which will conduct the electricity to the earth this occurence being known as grounding.

When the insulating properties of a material have been destroyed we say that the insulation has broken down, for example the insulating covering of a wire may be cut or broken so that the flow of electricity is not held to the desired path. Also on a transmission line where the wires are strung on porcelain insulators, should one of these insulators become cracked or broken and the flow of electricity go to the ground or other wires when the insulation of that wire is broken down.



Since heat is generated when current passes through a conductor it is quite necessary that proper insulation be chosen for particular cases. Where there is excessive heat as in a projection room it is unadvisable to use a rubber covered wire as the rubber is liable to deteriorate and the insulating properties be destroyed. In such cases an asbestos or "slow burning insulation" as it is known should be used.

Since water is a partial conductor of electricity it is necessary when wires are led through damp places where moisture will collect that the insulation be impregnated, that is treated with some compound so that moisture will not be absorbed. In places which are very damp or where water is liable to come in contact with the wires a lead sheathed wire should be used. This wire has a lead covering outside of the insulation so that the wires are entirely protected.

Wires placed in locations which are subject to injury should be protected by pipe conduit, Greenfield armored conduit, or B X cable. In no case, however, should wires which make up two different circuits be placed in the same conduit, that is D. C. and A. C. circuits should not be placed together.

For the above reasons when an electric circuit is installed great care must be taken that the proper wire and method of installation is chosen for the particular location.

In a system in which several conductors are necessary, as in an intercommunicating telephone system, these conductors, insulated from one another are placed within the same outside insulation. This cable is known by the number of conductors of which it is made up, as twin conductor, 3-conductor, etc.

When large conductors are necessary for current carrying capacity, a stranded cable is usually used, made up of a number of smaller wires twisted together forming one conductor. This is done for flexibility. In making connection to stranded cable it is necessary that lugs or clips be fastened or soldered to the ends of the conductor in order to insure a good connection and provide against a high contact resistance.

In order to understand a problem relating to the flow of current in a circuit it is illustrated by drawing the circuit including the apparatus and paths through which the current flows. In drawing such circuits certain signs and symbols are used to express the different pieces of apparatus.

These symbols have been devised as the need for them arose and in most cases have been chosen to indicate the apparatus closely enough to enable identification by the observer.

Some of the most common symbols are shown by the accompanying cuts.

Circuits crossing one another are shown by straight lines, and points at which a connection is made are indicated by large dots.

A resistance or reactance is shown to be either fixed or variable, depending on whether or not an arrow is shown to be connected to some portion of it.

Rotary machines are shown by circles with the connecting leads and are distinguished by a letter placed inside the circle.

Meters are also shown as a circle, but are distinguished by the manner of showing meter leads and the distinguishing letters.

Field windings are usually shown similar to a resistance but are distinguished by the accompanying connections.

The remainder of symbols shown are self explanatory.

Answer and Return These Questions for Corrections

9. Explain the action of a fuse in protecting a circuit.
10. How would you judge the proper size of fuse to use in a circuit?
11. Where should the smaller fuse be used, at the mains or in the booth? Why?
12. What size of wire would you use for leads to your machine? Why? (In answering state kind of machine used.)
13. How would you determine by means of a wire gauge the current carrying capacity of a stranded wire?

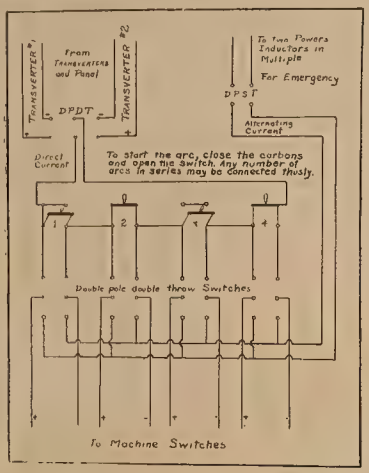
Equipment and Layout of Projection Room at the New Allen Theatre in Winnipeg

By J. F. Reney, Chief of Projection



THE projection room of the new Allen Theatre in Winnipeg is 21 feet in length, 9 feet in width and 12 feet in height. The throw is 110 feet with an 18 foot picture. Adequate ventilation of the room is secured by an 18-inch fan exhausting through a 24-inch opening directly in the center of the room.

Entrance to the projection room is gained through a vestibule 8 feet long by 5 feet wide where the film cabinet is located. In the vestibule are also found a lavatory with hot and cold water, a work bench with a hand rewind mounted upon it.

The projection equipment consists of three Powers 6B machines, one stereopticon with dissolver, one spot light, one Fulco motor driven rewind. Port holes for projection and observation are of ample dimensions as shown on one of the drawings accompanying this description. An adjustable shutter with an opening 8" by 8" allows any person to have a clear view of the screen from any position. These adjustable shutters do not interfere with the fire shutters. The latter may all be released from their lock instantly from any place in the room by simply pressing any of the five red push buttons mounted on the wall near every port hole and beside the door leading from vestibule to projection room.

Change-overs are carried out in a simple and practical manner. This applies to any of the three projectors and the stereopticon. All that is necessary is to open the dowser of the light to project a new picture or slide and the other is automatically closed. By working this slow or fast any effect may be obtained. Although there is nothing new in this change-over it is the best to date and has been in use for some time. Its primary principle is a master cord to which may be connected any number of dowsers.

The "juice" is provided by two Transverters (used one at a time) and two Powers Inductors wired in single units for the stereo and in multiple for the projectors when the other current supply is discontinued. The Transverters are of the "double 75" type.

I am enclosing a drawing of the switchboard showing a very simple and practical connection for any number of arcs in series. In my own case there are three arcs and a spot-light. S. P. S. T. switches may be used instead of D. P. D. T. but I do not recommend them. All switches including machine switches are of 100 amp. capacity. All wiring from Transverters to lamps is done in No. 2 B. S.

In order to use the arc with this wiring scheme the switch must be open. Closing the switch will put out the arc. If all switches are closed the generator is in short circuit but nothing happens. It simply stops generating. (Ed. note: The reason for this is given in the article on the Transverter, January 3, 10 and 17.)

The control of lighting for the whole house is made from the projection room through a row of 15 dimmers. It is possible to pass slowly from very dim light to full brilliancy.

An elaborate double switchboard has been made in this way. An ordinary switchboard on which were mounted all individual and master switches has been set up in the motor generator room and one foot from the partition between the M. G. room and projection room another slate panel has been set flush with the wall on the projection room side of the wall. Through this last mentioned panel and through the wall, a number of levers pass. Only the handles of the levers are therefore in the projection room, the actual make and break of the switches being carried out in the machine room by means of the levers extending through the wall. There is therefore no live parts in the projection room. The switchboard there is entirely dead. As far as the writer knows this is the best idea for a projection room switchboard that has as yet been brought forward.

Projection at the Allen is in charge of J. F. Reney assisted by A. Dennison and G. Strogas, all members of Local 299.

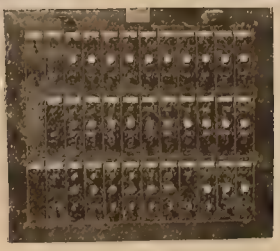
Wm. Salto, Geneseo, Ill.:

I thought while I have a little time I would write you another letter. I wrote you a month ago and was looking in the NEWS for the answer, but I was very much disappointed for not seeing it. I am enclosing my application blank for the N. A. M. L. I always turn my films out better than I get in as we run about all Paramount pictures. We have very little trouble; they are all in A-1 condition, but a few nights ago we had some pictures that I had to fix "cut outs" and patch, which took me a very long time. The fellow operator that ran this picture before me sure was no N. A. M. L. member. I am applying for membership. I am no union operator. I have been operating six years, nearly all my time on Powers 6A machines, which I think is far better in projection than any other machine. I get what other machine projector fails to get—that is something.

In my next letter to you I'll state a few new points which I have just found on. "Lubricants and the Movement." I, in fact, have not much time this time but next time will write on matters regarding "Powers" machines in full detail. I have been reading up in the NEWS for a long, long time and enjoy the Projection Department. Why do you cut this important part out? Please send me labels together with membership button to N. A. M. L., as I am waiting to "do my bit." thanking you.



In your New Theatre or the remodeling of the old good lighting effects are essential

For the large theatre, auditorium or small picture house, there is a Major Switchboard that will do the work more efficiently and with more saving of electrical current than any switchboard on the market.

With the Major Switchboard any individual switch unit or combination of units or even the entire board may be controlled from any part of the theatre—it is the only switchboard allowing the setting up of lighting changes ahead without interference with the lighting effects in operation at the time.

Ask for Bulletin Number 68

No lighting change is so complicated that it cannot be made instantly on the Major Switchboard—BY THE OPERATION OF A SINGLE LEVER.

Freak Shutter

Myron E. York sends in a sketch with this letter:

You ask what I claim for my freak shutter; well, I claim that it eliminates the flicker on the screen. I haven't tried it on any machine except the Motiograph. I suppose it would work on any machine.

The carbon set may be unusual, but I can get as good a light with it on A. C. as any one can with D. C., altho I never did use D. C.

I have changed my mind about placing all the blame on the city operators for using punch marks; I believe that the small town operator is as much to blame.

I showed "The Blue Bandanna" Dec. 26 & 27, it hadn't been run thru a machine but twice, there was about five feet on both ends of each reel which was covered with Exchange marks and the punchmark artists' mark. Why can't the Exchanges find some other way to mark their film?

What causes the grinding noise at the take up sprocket? About the first five minutes on each reel it makes the grinding noise then stops; it don't hurt the film any, but it gives me the jim jams to hear it. Am running a motiograph.

Myron E. York.

Reply:

Perhaps some of the experimentally inclined will give your freak shutter a try-out. We wonder if you couldn't gain further by cutting down your whole shutter blade to the inside dimensions of the vignetting. In other words, are you absolutely sure that your blades were correctly designed before you put the saw teeth on them.

We will send a copy of your letter to the Enterprise Optical Co., for their comment on your take-up trouble, and you may hear from them direct.

Rutledge & Company Expands

EXPANSION is the order of the day for all industries connected with the moving picture business in Chicago and the latest concern to seek greatly changed quarters is Rutledge & Company, whose business has far outgrown its present facilities. President Rutledge announces that he has secured a factory building at 41st and Ellis Avenue which he hopes to have in operation shortly after May 1st.

He will be able to increase the otuput of the well known Project-A-Lite products, as well as manufacture several new lines, including slide stereopticons, cotinuous film stereopticons which will be capable of handling an entire reel of film in place of slides, and be equipped with both hand and power drives, a small projector for standard film of which he recently secured the patents and a reversible projector for both slides and films. He will also manufacture a motion picture camera which has certain new features of great interest to the trade which will be described later in the columns of the Motion Picture News.

Rutledge & Company have also taken a ten-year contract to distribute the entire product of the Zenith Safety Projector Company in the non-theatrical field.

Another new departure is the installation of a film information service department through which clergymen and others can be told where to get pictures necessary to give the psychological background for any sermon, or suitable for church or school entertainments.

Many Typhoon Installations Reported

THE Typhoon Fan Company of New York, report the continued sale of many Typhoon equipments throughout the country. During the past week sales of the Typhoon Cooling and Ventilating System are reported for the following theatres:

Lincoln Square Theatre, Decatur, Ill.; Oasis Theatre, Wilson, N. C.; Rialto Theatre, Rochester N. Y.; Strand Theatre, Rochester, N. Y.; Victory Theatre, Salisbury, N. C.; Hippodrome Theatre, Herrin, Ill.; Victory Theatre, Tampa, Fla.; Bijou Theatre, Springfield, Mass.; Suffolk Theatre, Holyoke, Mass.

According to reports, the Typhoon Cooling System is becoming very popular among theatre owners in Cuba and the West Indies. Orders have been received for Typhoon installations from the Rialto Theatre, San Juan, Porto Rico; Havana Theatre, Havana, Cuba.

American Projection Society Sees Demonstration of New Projector

A PRACTICAL demonstration of the mechanical principles embodied in the Master Projector, recently acquired by Inter-Ocean Film Corporation for exclusive foreign distribution, was given last Thursday evening before the members of the American Projection Society, assembled at Inter-Ocean Film Building, New York.

The members were the guests of Mr. Eugene H. Kaufman, manager of the Accessory Department of Inter-Ocean Film Corporation, who is personally supervising the sales and physical distribution of Master Projectors in foreign territories.

The demonstration was especially arranged for the benefit of the members of the American Projection Society, who were desirous of obtaining a first-hand knowledge of the new projector, which is the handiwork of an organization that already enjoys a notable reputation in the mechanical and technical branches of the motion picture industry.

A program in which prominent mechanical engineers participated was arranged for the occasion, ond for the edification of the appetites of those present good cigars and cigarettes were in evidence during the evening.

Mr. Kaufman started the ball arolling with a warm address of welcome to the members of the American Projection Society. He dwelt at some length upon the benefits of such an organization to the industry in general and after presenting a glowing tribute to the society introduced Mr. Farrell, vice-president of the Master Machine Tool Company, manufacturers of the Master Projector.

Mr. Farrell spoke of the men and the organization behind the Master Projector, and told of the enthusiasm that had characterized the company's efforts in introducing the new machine. He mentioned among other things the fact that leading cinema engineers had directed the design and construction of the new projector and hoped that their efforts would in time prove a boon for the industry as a whole.

Mr. Phelps, assistant to Mr. Kaufman, then made a few pertinent remarks, in which he pointed out the big possibilities of the Master Projector. He was succeeded by Mr. Baum, of the B. & B. Company, New York, distributors of the new projector, who spoke of the plans which his organization had in preparation for the introduction of the Master Projector in New York State.

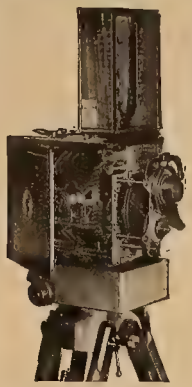
Mr. Brautigam, of the Master Machine Tool Company, followed Mr. Baum with a practical demonstration of the machine. He described in detail the component parts of the Master Projector, emphasizing the different units of equipment. Mr. Brautigam pointed out the technical superiority of the design, construction and the ease of operation which characterized the new machine. He also laid stress on the economical advantages of the Master Projector, wherein he proved that the drives on the new machine were distinctively positive, thereby affecting its operation with an absolute minimum of wear and insuring a durable life to the entire mechanism.

After the demonstration a vote of thanks was given to Inter-Ocean Film Corporation by the president of the American Projection Society, who furthermore declared that the society was in sympathy with any new product which meant for the improvement of motion picture projection.

Safety Film Container

This new type film container resembling an adding machine stand was designed by Major Wellstood White, Manager of the Graphoscope Development Company, for use with the Graphoscope Junior machine.

The reels of film are placed in the container with a spring hinged door and this container is located as close as possible to the projector so that it is very easy to transfer the reels of film from the projector to the container, or vice versa. This does away with the open container on the floor of the room or nearby bench or table, and makes it possible for the operator to change the reels without moving from his position. The handling of film in the open is therefore reduced to a minimum and of course the factor of safety naturally rises.



Graphoscope film container

A holder is also provided for the transformer or rheostat which is so located and designed that a reel of film cannot rest on same, nor is there sufficient room on the top of this stand when the projector is in use, for a reel to rest.

Fire and insurance officials have highly recommended same and regard it as having reduced the so-called danger of handling film to a minimum.

Mounted on rollers, or polished steel balls, and even with the projector on same, it can be readily moved from place to place and presents a very pleasing appearance.

MACHINE PARTS

Some exhibitors evidently think that parts for Edison machines are no longer obtainable. To correct this impression we beg to advise that some time ago we purchased the entire Edison motion picture machine business and have in stock a line of parts for all models. As the demand for some articles is limited, we will not manufacture any more of them so beg to suggest that owners of Edison machines anticipate their requirements and order sufficient repair parts to keep their machines in good condition for a long time to come, as when our present stock is exhausted it will be impossible to obtain such parts.

We also carry repair parts for all models of Power machines and a line of theatre supplies. The above articles may be obtained from any dealer in the United States.

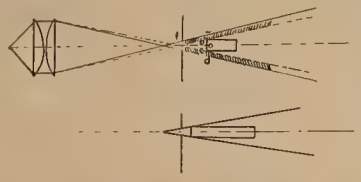
Three-Combination Lens Given Thorough Test Under Actual Projecting Conditions



Report by Prof. Weinrich of Columbia Indicates Success of New Design

INTERMITTENTLY during the last few years there has been talk of a new objective which differed from the common ones by the fact that it consisted of three lens elements. For this reason it was known to many as "the three-combination lens." Just what the reason was for the non-appearance of this lens on the market was never quite clear. Various expressions of opinion were advanced but no authoritative report was made public.

But since then this same lens has been revived, improved in some ways, named the "Keenalite" and made ready for the market. In fact a number are now available and a few are in actual use.

Before giving the results of the tests it will be well to review the reasons for the third combination in a projection lens. Suppose we take a common lens of 5" e.f. This lens will have a back-focus or working distance of approximately 4¼". Under these conditions the usual line-up of the projector is shown by the sketch.

All the light in the directions ab and cd is wasted light due to the fact that the distance from f to o is so great that the spreading beam of light is not intercepted by the first surface of the objective. This condition is caused in the first place by the custom and need of so focussing the source image just behind the aperture plate that the image of the source instead of being formed on the plate is formed before the plate is reached. This means that the beam is diverging after striking the stencil or film. With a lens of comparatively long working distance this loss of light may reach a surprising percentage. Besides reducing the illumination of the screen as a whole it is also apt to affect the definition particularly around the edges of the screen.

Upper diagram shows optical system with ordinary lens. Lower view shows same system with three combination lens. Shaded portion is light lost

The solution to the problem presented by the facts just outlined could have taken one of two forms. Either a lens of larger working diameter could be used or a lens of a shorter working distance or back focus. In an attempt to solve the trouble by working from the first named possibility the manufacturers have turned out a very satisfactory lens of 2¼ and 2½" diameters, and many of these are now in daily use.

Other optical engineers and lens designers accepted the second possibility as the one to pursue. The Keenalite lens is the result of this search.

The reader will remember that in the beginning of this article it was mentioned that the back focus of a 5" lens was about 4¼". This means that a distance of 4¼" separated the first glass surface of the lens from the aperture plate.

With a Keenalite lens of 5" equivalent focus, the working distance is 2½ inches, thereby cutting down the distance by 50 per cent. Furthermore, this working distance is the same for lenses of any focal length. The working disaance or back focus is always the same.

With the idea in mind of having an expert make an exhaustive test of the lens the makers, the Independent Movie Supply Co., sent a stock sample to Prof. Weinrich of Columbia University. The report just received credits the lens with more than even its admirers had counted on.

In making the test a Keenalite lens was tried out in the same projector mechanism that another two element objective of standard make. The same light source was used and all other variable factors were kept constant. Both lenses were of 6¾" e.f. Photometer readings were taken in the center of the screen, halfway to the corner on a diagonal and at the corner. In the center the Keenalite showed a gain of 12.6%, at the corner a gain of 63.2% and halfway between an increase of

White Light for Motion Picture Photography*

By Wm. Roy Mott, Research Laboratory, National Carbon Company

I—Introduction

1—Relation of Motion Picture Industry to Light.

THE famous psychologist, Professor Musterberg, wrote a few years ago a book on motion pictures, and he there asserted that the production of motion pictures by the best companies had graduated as an Art to rank co-equal with painting, sculpture and music. By attention to mode and variation, many new psychological appeals can be made, including the portraying of the though images in the minds of the characters of the play in a way that cannot be duplicated on the theatre stage. Besides being one of the fine arts, the motion picture art has become the greatest educational institution in the world. Very special lighting is needed for scientific films, for ultra rapid motion picture work, and for the several new color processes in motion picture production. Not only is the moving picture industry the greatest educational institution, but it is also one of the foremost industries. Since Edison's and Jenkin's invention of motion picture devices of only a score or so years ago, the industry has leaped to fourth place in the United States. There is spent annually three to four hundred million dollars by the people of the United States for the privilege of attending the motion picture theatres. The daily attendance is said to average between ten and twenty millions of people. Of the fifty thousand motion picture theatres in the world there are about twenty thousand in the United States, and as a producing center, the United States is the greatest in the world. The sunshine of California has built up a major producing center in and near Los Angeles. (In this center, over $12,000,000 are annually spent for motion picture production, and this gives employment to about 25,000 people.) Again the importance of light in relation to expense of production may be judged from the following statement made by Mr. G. McL. Baynes (of the English Hepworth Mfg. Co., see Moving Picture World, page 2334, December 25, 1915). "As to photographic difficulties encountered in outdoor work in England it is ridiculous to say that they cannot make pictures there. It is true production is more expensive, perhaps twice as much because we have to wait for the sunshine." Thus in foggy England, the difficulties are much greater on account of poor light than in the West or East of the United States. The invention of the high amperage white flame arc lamps and carbons and of other artificial light sources such as the daylight gas filled tungsten lamps and the mercury arc lamps, have eliminated these expensive waits for sunshine. The home-center of the motion picture industry in the East is again building up rapidly. These new studios are especially to be found in or near New York City and to a lesser degree near other large centers of population, as for example, Chicago, Philadelphia, Cleveland, etc. Scenic interest such as at Ithaca and Florida, is another industrial factor in the location of motion picture plants. The increase in artificial light facilities has been an important economic factor in this Eastern movement which is being accelerated by the continual increase in the extraordinary salaries which are paid the motion picture artists. The cost of production of an average negative of one reel is said to be about $1,000 and of this it is certainly economy to spend one or two per cent on securing the best lighting.

1-B—Lighting Differences Between Theatre Stage and Motion Picture Stage.

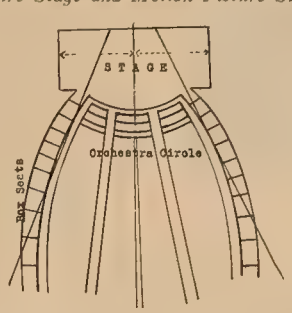

Fig. 1—Theatre stage compared with Motion Picture Stage

The lighting differences between the theatre stage and motion picture stage are illustrated by Fig. 1, which shows that the theatre stage has a broad front line, below which comes the footlights, and then a very shallow back-ground because the essential action of the stage must be visible to everyone in the audience on both sides of the auditorium. On the other hand, the motion picture photographer can select any point of view, and this necessarily has an enlarging background in the usual case of real scenery. The camera lines in the ground view (Fig. 1) represent limits outside which the lighting units must be placed, except for trick flame lamp used to imitate lanterns and house lamps. In the vertical plane exactly the same rule must be followed in regard to increasing height of overhead lamps for the background. The excellent results from footlights has not yet been appreciated by the motion picture artists.

1-C—Artistic Relation of Light.

Motion pictures only became commercially successful for entertainments when it became possible to select a subject, stage it with all the startling realism of the spoken drama, and give its photography those qualities perhaps best conoted by the term "Portraiture." For portraiture effects—Rembrandt, line lighting, etc., control of the position, direction and diffusion of light is necessary. Some lighting forming an oblique angle on the face to the camera gives increased reflection, and aids in preventing flatness. For artistic results, the white flame arc is distinctly superior for securing modelling, atmosphere, definition, half-tone and fine photographic quality in the negatives. Mr. Max Mayers, in his valuable paper on "Artificial Light in the Motion Picture Studio," given at the Rochester meeting of our Society says, "Back lighting, is a splendid way of obtaining pleasing and natural results. This is effected by placing the lights well back and directing them toward, but not at the camera, masking the direct rays at the lamp, and preferably using a shielding tube with perfectly dull black interior over the lens barrel, to prevent halation. Thus the figure and objects in the set will be silhouetted, and by the proper front arrangement of reflecting surfaces and well diffused lights at a fair distance, the features and details may be perfectly modelled in shadow, with pleasing highlight relief effected by the rear lights." Later sections will treat further of artistic possibilities with the new lighting means.

1-D—Importance of Great Intensity of Light.

A large amount of light is required in motion picture work, because of the short exposures (1/30—1/30 sec.) and need for definition. The pictures are only 1" x ¾" in size on the celluloid film. These are magnified over 10,000 times in area on the screen and therefore need to be taken with great sharpness. There are sixteen pictures per foot and these sixteen are moved through the camera or projecting machine in about one second. (A thousand feet or 16,000 pictures are called a reel and take about fifteen to twenty minutes to run through the machine.) Each picture is brought into exact position with a closed shutter. This shutter is then opened for about 1/30 of a second and the exposure is made. (In case of projection, the eye in this period receives the full impression of the picture and by persistance of vision retains the image perfectly for the next 1/20 of a second during which the shutter is closed and the screen black and the next picture is placed.) In the interest of definition and depth of focus, it is highly desirable to work at small lens opening. For instance with the white flame are lights F 5.6 is often used in motion picture studios whereas F 4.5 and even F 3.5 have been recommended with other sources of artificial light. Some of the flame lamps, with their reflectors and diffusing screens, can be used to give a light intensity of 10,000 and more candles per square foot, so that even daylight is surpassed if so desired. We will now consider daylight.

On Shade and Sunshine in Photography

"MOST people know how to make a good photograph when they are out of doors, and the sun is shining brightly," states Roger W. Fowler of Fowler Films. "With a little reasoning, you should be able to fathom that good pictures in the shade simple require a little longer exposure. But, if you have ever tried to make a good picture of near shade and sunlight combined, I think you will tell me that your results are always so contrasting that you can neither find detail in the shadows nor the sunlight portions. The truth is that the sunlight portions are very much over-exposed and the shadow portions are very much under-exposed.

"Before you tell me that it is impossible to make any other kind of a picture than a contrasted one, if photographing from under the shadow of a tree out into the bright sunlight, I am going to contradict you. In truth, the larger the opening of the diaphragm behind the lens is, the less contrast you will have in the photograph. Therefore, you should open wide your lens, and speed up the shutter action to reduce the light proportionately. You will probably be surprised to find that it is just as easy to photograph near shadows against sunlight as it is to simply photograph sunlight objects themselves.

"Plan your exposure to amply photograph the detail of the shadows. If you can not open the lens diaphragm because your camera is an index pensive one, it is possible to accomplish the same effect by placing a piece of clouded glass close to the lens and doubling your length of exposure."

Three Combination Lens

32.6%. Integrating these readings over the entire screen it is readily seen that the lens transmits 31% more light flux than the competitor.

It would not be fair to end the article without a few words about the loss of light to be expected from the two additional air-glass surfaces. Assuming that this loss is 15% total the three-combination lens to be an improvement must collect more than 15% of the wasted diverging ray. In the case of the lens under test this was measured and it was found that the lens with short working distance was gathering in 52% more light than the one with the long back focus.

At the present time the Keenalite lens is permanently installed at the Capitol theatre in New York, the Rivoli, Rialto, also in New York, and in several others about the country. Wherever it has been placed it has given good satisfaction. It looks very much as if the three-combination lens has come into its own.

Cue Sheets Latest Hits — Music — Musical Equipment

Timing Music for Pictures

PRACTICALLY every film company issues carefully timed musical suggestions or music scores, for each film. The preparation of these musical suggestions or scores, is, to a certain extent monopolized by several gentlemen who specialize in this particular field. They are all able musicians with years of experience, and to my knowledge are always trying to deliver "the goods" in the most efficient manner. But, in spite of this, constant complaints reach the various film companies, because of wrongly timed music scores and cues. This, of course, is an unpleasant state of affairs for all parties concerned. Where is the remedy? The Filmusic Company of Los Angeles, California, has recently issued a time table to serve as a guide to house managers, operators, and musicians in setting up their programs. The Filmusic Co.

FOOTAGE AND TIME TABLE

Feet		Sec.	Feet		Min.	Sec.
10	Equals	8½	80	Equals	1	8
20	"	17	90	"	1	16½
30	"	25½	100	"	1	25
40	"	34	200	"	2	50
50	"	42½	300	"	4	15
60	"	51	400	"	5	40
70	"	59½	500	"	7	5

use the schedule, which herewith follows, for the preparation of their music scores.

The above was prepared to serve as a time table, with the point in view, to establish a standard speed for the projection of motion picture films. We fully appreciate the well-meant efforts of the Filmusic Co., but the question is, will they receive the necessary cooperation from the exhibitor. I daresay, No.

I have seen films projected at a speed limit of eleven and twelve minutes per thousand feet. Why? Because most exhibitors want a certain amount of shows each day, and have their programs planned, for so-and-so-many reels, and so-and-so-many subjects. Should one of the subjects happen to be 500 feet longer, Johnny or Mike, the operator, has to "speed it up." The consequence is that the carefully selected musical program, compiled by the musical director, is useless.

It is really high time that such concerns as the Filmusic Company together with the hard-working men, preparing the various cue sheets, receive the cooperation of the exhibitor.

The acme of perfection of Motion Picture Exhibition, can be attained through united efforts only.

THE EDITOR.

Paper on "Continuous Projectors"

MR. L. C. PORTER, Chairman of the Committee on Papers of the S. M. P. E., announces that Mr. C. Francis Jenkins will deliver a paper on the subject of "Continuous Motion Picture Projectors" at the coming Montreal meeting. The synopsis reads, "Following a review of the handicaps of continuous projectors and a brief review of the history of continuous mechanisms the author will describe and demonstrate by a model a design in which there is continuous motion only, not only of the film but of every part of the mechanism."

It is understood that officials of the Bureau of Standards and Navy experts have been assisting in the development of the machine, the former because of the new optical principle involved and the new shape of glass incorporated and the latter because there is need of such an instrument in their work.

At the same Montreal meeting Mr. B. F. Norrish of the Department of Trade and Commerce, Exhibit and Publicity Bureau, Ottawa, Canada, will have a paper on "Educational Possibilities in Motion Pictures."

The paper points out how the moving picture is the simplest and easiest way of inparting knowledge and information in both an interesting and entertaining form. It is shown that the motion picture speaks in a universal language and that by the proper selection of films and associating them with previous sensations practically any desired thing may be recalled to mind.

It is pointed out that seven-eighths of all knowledge is acquired and understood only after there has been a mental picture of it formed, and the motion picture provides a very quick means of doing this. In describing the industries of a country, for example, the motion picture gives the student a much clearer perception than could possibly be obtained through any text.

Cassard Made Honorary Member

S. S. Cassard, Sales Manager of the Nicholas Power Company, Inc., has recently been made an Honorary Member of the Moving Picture & Projecting Machine Operators Union, Local 169, I. A. T. S. E. and presented with a gold card case. As Mr. Cassard was also made an Honorary Member of the San Francisco Local a short time ago, it is evident he must be popular with the Unions on the Coast.

Cassard who left New York during the early part of January and has been traveling thru the West for his firm, will return home in about ten days. He reports a very successful trip.

The Complete Plan Book

Everything the Showman Needs on Every Picture Released

"Edgar and Teacher's Pet"

(First of Goldwyn's Edgar Series, by Booth Tarkington)

GOLDWYN'S first comedy from the Booth Tarkington's "The Adventures and Emotions of Edgar Pomeroy" series is "Edgar and the Teacher's Pet," with Johnny Jones as "Edgar," and it registers with a bang.

Most of the cast are children and they play children with a skill which a lot of veterans in screen acting may emulate without doing harm to their art.

Hardly a scene but that is highly amusing, and there is many a hearty laugh in some of the sequences. There isn't much of any attempt at a story and we hope there won't be in the future releases. The production shows Edgar, at school, at home and in his next door neighbor's back yard, and what happened during just one day in a honest to God boy's life with some fade outs to show what Edgar's emotions were when the teacher kept him after school and when his "best girl" gave him the mitten for the time being.

Master Jones is a wonder and the whole cast of children is great. The grown-ups employed in support of the children are good types and good actors. It would seem as if this series, if they are all as good as the initial offering, are destined to a success seldom accorded comedies. They will appeal to men because they will take each male back to his own boyhood days. They will go with the women because of their humaness and the cleverness with which the children perform and certainly they will be a hit with "kids."

Book them before your competitor beats you to it.—J. S. DICKERSON.

"Thru Eyes of Men"

(Five Part Drama—Radin)

FRANK MAYO makes his appearance again in a drama, "Thru Eyes of Men," distributed by Radin Pictures. This picture does not put across anything big either in direction, story or sets, and it can be labeled as an average picture with a hackneyed plot, good action and poor acting.

The star is not really starred and Prudence Lyle, who plays the leading feminine role, outshines him. The story is laid in California and we get plenty of circus scenes thrown in. In an effort to create interest an air of mystery is thrown about the leading lady—the circus equestrian. A hidden secret of her past life is hinted at throughout the picture and in the last reel we learn all. She is a runaway princess from one of those musical comedy principalities of Central Europe. This time it is "Historia" and the lady is the "Princess Titania."

Little Ben Alexander spots of emotional appeal as are in the production, although he does not equal his appearance in "Hearts of the World." The fight between the two men in the water might be good if we were given a close-up of it. Your patrons may like the action that is in it, but most fans outgrew this sort of production many moons past. Lenth, 5 reels. MATTHEW TAYLOR.

"Trailed by Three"

(Fifteen Episode Serial—Arthur F. Beck —Pathe)

STRAIGHT from the house that has made the serial a medium of screen entertainment comes "Trailed by Three," the newest of the photoplays "to be continued next week." Arthur F. Beck is responsible for this one which Pathe is releasing. Charles T. Dazey, who knows a thing or two about melodramatic action, has kept in mind that it must be moving constantly, and though he hasn't hit upon any new idea, at least he deserves credit for not incorporating such factors as Iron Claws, Hooded Terrrors and what not. He is so old-fashioned here that the picture can be termed a novelty since the usual procedure is to write the action around some horrible freak who pursues the good people relentlessly.

It is a relief to look upon the central idea as nothing but a chase for the jewels with the wits of a trio of international crooks pitted against those of a resourceful girl and the upright figure who brings in the romance when he is not helping her in the melodramatic touches. One flaw this serial has and it is found in the plot, which is given away to the spectator in the second episode, so that the element of mystery is somewhat eliminated. Still, on the other hand, there is such an elaborate amount of action and it is brought out in such a fast and furious manner that the above-mentioned weakness will undoubtedly go by unnoticed. One is too busy watching the heroine get out of danger to be bothered over any plot construction.

What if the jewels are taken by the girl from some place in the South Sea Islands and trailed by the henchmen of a tyrannical ruler—what if all this seems far-fetched, and the other points, too? Such reasoning is away from the issue. The fact is a serial differs considerably from other forms of screen entertainment. One doesn't expect truth, and so doesn't look for it. What one does look for is unadulterated action spelled with the capitals U and A, and thrills and suspense spelled with the capitals T and S. "Truth and reality can go hang. I'm looking at a serial now," the spectator might be heard to say. So "Trailed by Three" can be callled a rattling good show if the first three episodes are any criterion.—LAURENCE REID.

"Ship Ahoy"

(Warner—Al St. John Comedy—Released by Paramount)

THERE is little "rhyme or reason" in this slap stick concoction starring the elongated Al St. John, it being a burlesque of a melodramatic story of the nice little girl dancing in a "hell hole," with much smashing of furniture, chasing, burlesque fights, mostly in the saloon set, with St. John doing the "shimmy" clad in a burlesque "Salome" gown, in a way which will incite considerable amusement for some and probably makes some others disgusted, all of which is what the average slap stick comedy looks like when reduced to a review.

Some of the business used is reasonably new, much of it is of the "reliable" brand and some of it is just action. In this latter connection it may be said that the picture does not drag. The incident provided may not be termed funny but at least there is incident in every scene with standing around and "mugging" the camera noticeably absent.

The production is good for some laughs and considerable mild amusement. Length, 2 reels.—J. S. DICKERSON.

"Raider Moewe Sinkings"

(Exploits of German Raider Released as Part of International News, Nos. 13, 14 and 15)

VIEWS of sinkings perpetrated by the German raider Moewe, remarkable for their realism and the fact that they can really thrill, despite the war-weariness of a world, have been secured from the archives of the German Government by the International Film Service to be shown in releases 13, 14 and 15 of the International News Weekly.

Sinkings by bomb, gunfire and torpedo are depicted by camera from the deck of the raider. The pictures for the most part were taken at close range, and apart from the thrill imparted as vessel after vessel is seen sinking under the waves, amaze by their clearness. The boarding of vessels stopped in mid-sea by parties from the Moewe, the removal of prisoners, and the destruction of the prizes, are caught by the camera at close range.

The film shows the sinking of the British steamers Yarrowdale, Duchess of Cornwall, S. S. Theodore and others.

The triumphant return of the Moewe to Wilhelmshaven—one of three such successful blockade runnings—is also shown, together with the Admiral in command of the port congratulating Captain and crew of the raider.

These views are bound to attract in every section of the country.—GEORGE D. GOULD.

Index to Complete Plan Book and EXHIBITORS BOX OFFICE REPORTS

EDITOR'S NOTE—Exhibitors will find here a complete list of all feature pictures for last twenty weeks arranged alphabetically as an index to The Complete Plan Book for this period, naming the picture, the producer, the star, the release date, and designating the issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS which contained the original review.

The following also contains our reviewer's opinion encompassed in a brief single line and gives the comments of exhibitors who have shown the picture and forwarded their opinions. And we also publish a final line fairly summarizing a consensus of all opinions received on each picture. As many of the exhibitors do not comment on every picture (merely checking it Big, Average or Poor), we arrive at the consensus not only by the actual comments made and published, but are also guided by the reports from exhibitors who have made no actual comments, but have merely checked the box office value of the picture.

All the pictures mentioned are five-reel features, unless marked otherwise. Serials are reviewed also. At the conclusion of this department will be found the "Flash-Backs," being comments on films released prior to November 15, 1919.

SHORE ACRES

(Metro—Screen Classics)

Famous New England Drama, Well Adapted

It is possible that James A. Herne, were he alive, might not recognize "Shore Acres" in picture form, and also might resent that which has happened to his New England drama in its transition from stage to screen, but the result achieved as a photoplay promises excellent entertainment for audiences, offers exploitation possibilities which are not to be despised and can be hailed as one of the most intelligent adaptations of the season.

As a picture it is not the story which makes "Shore Acres" pleasing, but rather the opposite. Good acting by a correct cast of types, human and appropriate incident suitable to the locale of the picture and a fine piece of screen craft in the shape of a shipwreck make up for the shortcomings of a plot which has to do with the "mortgage," the rich villain desiring the innocent heroine, the accusing of the hero of being a thief, and such like familiar screen material, some from the stage play and some added by the adapters.

Ostensibly Alice Lake is starred, but in the picture as it stands, and justly so, as in the stage play, the role of "Uncle Nat," played by Edward Connelly, is dominant. The simple, kindly, lovable, self-sacrificing old bachelor lighthouse keeper has come to the screen with small loss in value, except in the taking from him the quaint, humorous lines of the play, which was, of course, unavoidable. It is this fact which lifts "Shore Acres" out of the commonplace class and gives it true greatness.

Direction, continuity and staging is of the best. A picture suitable for any theatre and for any class of audience.—Length, 6 reels.—J. S. Dickerson.

THE CAST

Helen Berry ..... Alice Lake
Sam Warren ..... Robert Walker
Uncle Nat Berry ..... Edward Connelly
Martin Berry ..... Frank Brownlee
Josiah Blake ..... Joseph Kilgour
Anna Berry ..... Margaret McWade
Milly Berry ..... Nancy Caswell
Captain Ben ..... Franklyn Garland
Young Nat Berry ..... Burwell Hamrick
Richard Berry ..... Richard Hedrick
Carol Berry ..... Carol Jackson
Tim ..... John P. Morse

Adapted from James A. Hearne's play by Arthur J. Zellner.
Directed by Rex Ingram.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"Shore Acres," the famous old stage play which James A. Herne wrote and in which he starred so many years as "Uncle Nat," has been adapted to the screen by Metro with Alice Lake as "Helen" and Edward Connelly in the role originated by Mr. Herne and will be the attraction at the ——— theatre for a ——— days' engagement, beginning ———.

Those who have sometimes been disappointed in the transition of a play to a picture are assured that none of "Shore Acres'" sweetness, humanity and charm is lost in the picture version.

The play was ideal photoplay material, having a great deal of real incident in it originally and presenting the opportunity of adding much that could not be produced on the stage. In this connection is the wreck of the schooner, one of the features of the stage production and an integral part of the telling of the story. No stage could present such realism as the picture version does. Perhaps no better shipwreck has ever been filmed than this one for "Shore Acres." It is the height of the photoplay art and a thrilling, exciting scene showing the schooner actually foundering on the rocks, her masts breaking as she turns on her side as the waves cast her about. However, for the most part the picture is not a spectacle nor melodrama, but a human, well-told story of New England life on the Atlantic Coast where for generations the "Blakes" had kept burning the lamps in the lighthouse.

PROGRAM READER

James A. Herne and "Shore Acres," his famous old play of the "Blakes," Martin and Nathaniel, who operated the lighthouse on a rocky New England Atlantic shore are names to bring back memories of the great plays of a generation past. How it played over and over to record breaking audiences is history. Now it has been made into a motion picture which according to the opinion of all overtops the stage play in entertainment and dramatic values and bids fair to again play every city and village in the country to universal satisfaction and added prestige to itself. We have booked this picture for a ——— day engagement, beginning ———.

The featured player is Alice Lake, who plays the role of "Helen," but the big role is still that which Mr. Herne made famous on the stage, "Uncle Nat." To Edward Connelly, famous character actor of many a great picture has been intrusted this part, and the choice was one of wisdom. Mr. Connelly imbues the screen image with all the fineness, and greatness in his simple, gentle way, which made the stage character so loved and remembered. It is seldom that we recommend a picture as having a universal appeal but we do believe that "Shore Acres" reaches this almost impossible goal.

CATCH LINES

Immortal "Shore Acres," with all its appeal of the stage, comes to motion pictures with an added interest since much that was talked about and necessarily tricked in the play is actually enacted in the photoplay. Without doubt the masterpiece of its kind destined to a career in its new form as great as has been its success on the stage.

Great in characterization, abundant in its heart interest, wonderful in its realism, splendidly melodramatic its enactment of the shipwreck scene is the photoplay adapted from this grand old play of the rock-bound Maine Coast which made fortunes and fame for James A. Herne and which keeps him alive in the memory of all theatregoers. Not just a motion picture but an epoch in the art of the industry.

"EXCUSE MY DUST"

(Famous Players-Lasky)

None Better When It Comes to Entertaining

RARELY is a sequel to anything equal to the initial offering, but no excuses need to be made for "Excuse My Dust" in comparison with "The Roaring Road" or with any picture of the season designed for entertainment purposes only.

The production possesses everything necessary to establish it as one of the hits of the season; a well developed, interesting, and logical story, action, incident, thrills, suspense, a good cast, splendid direction, fine titles and a great continuity. It builds from its first scenes steadily and without laboring to the automobile race and the attendant wreck and then in a few sequences its small love interest is satisfactorily adjusted, the villains are defeated at their own game and the picture is over. Few scenes could be left out without injuring the story. None are needed as additions to aid in developing the plot. We do not see how it can fail to please any audience and it should break box office records for Wally Reid pictures.

Mr. Reid is of course starred, but he divides honors with Theodore Roberts as "J. D." Tully Marshall makes the most of a small role. Ann Little is a satisfactory "Mrs. Toodles." The balance of the cast is adequate.

Incidentally here is a picture where the love interest enters into the basic plot only as aid in logically developing that plot and not with everything subordinate to whether or not the hero and heroine are to "live happy ever after." It is a welcome change from the usual. Length, 5 reels.—J. S. Dickerson.

PRESS NOTICE STORY

"Excuse My Dust," with Wallace Reid featured, will hold the place of honor on the bill of the ——— theatre for the week beginning ———. The style of picture comedy that this Paramount-Artcraft star has been offering in his past releases has won him a firm place in the hearts of local fans. The story of this picture offers him the opportunity of appearing in another high-speed comedy—one similar to a previous release, "The Roaring Road." The present tale originally appeared in the Saturday Evening Post and presents Mr. Reid in the role of "Toodles" Walden, the manager of the Darco automobile agency and son-in-law of J. D. Ward, president of the concern and commonly called "The Bear."

The Darco car is a marvel for speed and power and a rival concern is determined to secure a sketch of its motor. This incident furnishes the melodramatic action since "Toodles" is arrested. The Fargot people have bought some of the rival models and the hero buys one and enters it in the race. J. D. learns that the Fargot drivers plan to wreck the young man's car so he starts out in one of the new Darco's in pursuit. "Toodles" finds trouble ahead but he manages to finish second to his employer. The picture gets off to an excellent start and finishes with a burst of speed. It goes without saying that it is the best racing car story ever written. The climax is electrifying and keeps the spectator in terrific suspense. Mr. Reid is thoroughly at home in the part of "Toodles." Others who render capable aid are Theodore Roberts, Tully Marshall and Ann Little.—Lawrence Reid.

PROGRAM READER

Do you remember "The Roaring Road," the high-speed picture which was shown at this theatre some months ago with Wallace Reid as the star? Well this dashing young actor of the Paramount-Artcraft forces has another picture cut from the same cloth in "Excuse My Dust." The story offers him another opportunity to display his humorous talent in the role of the daring driver who won't take anybody's dust. A rival concern of the house which employs him is determined to secure a sketch of the Darco engine. And in carrying out their project our hero is arrested. But he gets out and starts in the race. And what a race it is. Down the road they come with Wallace at the wheel, the throttle wide open. Nearer, nearer they come. Then something happens. What it is takes up a part of the electrifying climax. "Excuse My Dust" will make you feel like becoming a speed king yourself. See it at this theatre next ———.

SUGGESTIONS

First off you have a title that will attract attention in this feature. Advertise it prominently. It will immediately get the eye owing to its slangy familiarity. Play up the fact that it is a story of a road race with motor cars. Tell that the star has another picture of the same high calibre as "The Roaring Road" here. And by the same author. Make mention that the story once appeared in the pages of the Saturday Evening Post. You can engage an artist to paint or draw the hero flying over the road in a high-powered car. Brought out in flaming colors and it is bound to attract attention. The picture can be exploited through stunts with a high-powered car sailing through the streets with streamers attached capitalizing the words "Excuse My Dust." Touch the high spot of the picture, which is the race itself, in all your copy. Use catch lines liberally. Play it up as an exciting comedy of business, love and auto-racing.

CATCH LINES

He entered the road race with his racer and his motto was "excuse my dust." What happened? See Wallace Reid in the speedy comedy, "Excuse My Dust."

Don't you thrill at the sight of an auto race? Your opportunity has arrived to see one in the exciting comedy, "Excuse My Dust," starring Wallace Reid. Next ——— at this theatre.

"NURSE MARJORIE"
(Realart)

Old English Atmosphere Pleases

REALART has chosen an English story in this one for Mary Miles Minter. Whether it will amuse an American audience with its "lord and lady, duke and duchess," atmosphere remains to be seen. But we will say this for it and for the benefit of those who do not understand these well written English classical stories, it is one of the best of its kind ever produced, being written by Israel Zangwill, a skilled portrayer of English life.

There's one great fault with pictures of this kind, however, and it is the same in stage productions, they're liable to be a bit slow and draggy, caused no doubt on account of the characters, whose life and surroundings are given more to quietness and dignity than to activity. Still, we have seen American audiences, especially of the elite class, sit through and enjoy pictures of this type profoundly. This feature offsets the monotony by the introduction of two characters whose love affair adds plenty of action and interest to the production.

The picture might be a little draggy in the hospital scenes but makes up for this in the many comedy situations introduced between the lovers and again in the last two reels between the hero and Marjorie's supposed mother, who does not hesitate to smoke a pipe and offer another to the dejected lover.

All told it is a classical story, well written, with a pretty star, who plays her part well and a supporting cast which could not have been selected with better judgment. It should interest, especially among the elite.—Length, 5 reels.—Frank Leonard.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Mary Miles Minter will appear at the ———— theatre in her latest Realart picture, "Nurse Marjorie," on ———— of next week.

The story was written by Israel Zangwill and pictures English life in a way that could only be told by this great author. Miss Minter is given a part that calls for the finer and bigger qualities of portrayal and it is remarkable how a girl of her years can carry it through and not miss the mark once during the whole performance.

As Nurse Marjorie she enters a hospital to care for the sick. But in reality she is the daughter of the Duke and Duchess of Donegal, who tiring of the quiet life of the nobility decides to become self-supporting. While there two patients are assigned to her care, one a young child who is suffering from a broken leg and the other John Danbury, a member of the House of Commons, who has become temporarily blind. He falls in love with her and becomes incensed because he believes she is devoting too much time to the care of the other patient whom he believes is a "grown-up." These scenes develop some really funny situations. But it is not until Marjorie professes to be the daughter of a fish dealer that the real fun starts. She invites her lover to her supposed parents' home and her "proxy" mother proceeds to act in the roughest manner possible in order to try to discourage him, even going so far as to smoke a pipe in his presence and to offer him another. He refuses to be foiled, however, and his earnestness so impresses Marjorie that she tells who she really is. This news obviously worries our hero, but obstacles are removed and the young couple are united.

PROGRAM READER

Mary Miles Minter's latest feature, "Nurse Marjorie," should interest those who have the opportunity of witnessing this uncommon picture. And it is uncommon, for the story was written by Israel Zangwill, who is known as one of our greatest writers. It pictures English life in a way that for love interest and suspense, joined together by exceedingly funny comedy situations, could not be beaten.

And let us say that Miss Minter has not been given up to date a better vehicle in which to display her charms and acting ability. You may have seen her in many light comedy parts in the past which have shown her off to good advantage but in this feature she has a very difficult role to portray for it is a combination of light and shade that calls for ability and experience in this direction.

As "Nurse Marjorie," the only daughter of the Duke and Duchess of Donegal, who secures a position in a hospital in order to become self-supporting and at the same time to relieve the dull monotony of her life, she is superb. But it is not until we see the way she handles the difficult comedy situations between her lover who is in the hospital because he has become temporarily blind and the young boy whom our hero believes is his rival, that we see Miss Minter's true worth. In the last two reels some really hilarious scenes are developed between our hero and his supposed mother-in-law who is a fish dealer. When our heroine discovers that her lover cannot be discouraged by these rough tactics she confesses her true identity to him with the usual results following.

SUGGESTIONS

This feature has many exploitation angles which should be played up to good advantage. It was written by Israel Zangwill, who is known as one of the best English playwrights. He has given Miss Minter a good vehicle in this one, to display her talents. Of course, the story is of the English variety and of the upper classes. For this reason, it may not have a strong appeal to those who do not care for this type of entertainment. And then again there are many who would enjoy just this kind of story.

Mary Miles Minter should come in for most of your boosting. Tell your patrons that the picture gives her new opportunities in which to display her talents both in love making and in comedy situations.

"YOUNG MRS. WINTHROP"
(Paramount-Artcraft)

Moth-eaten Story Furnishes Artificial Picture

DOMESTIC triangle stories as a rule make entertaining pictures if they are reasonably lifelike and carry enough sound plot and character drawing to point a wealth of conflict. If they are not thus fortified they fail to interest. And that is just what ails "Young Mrs. Winthrop," Ethel Clayton's newest photoplay. This subject is woefully artificial, but this fault might pass unnoticed were it not for the fact that the plot is decidedly frail. It expends itself early so that the onlooker is reminded of its obviousness. And to keep it going to feature length the director has resorted to considerable padding which is best expressed in a costume ball.

The business-loving husband, the pleasure-loving wife and the little child that should bind them, but doesn't, and the other woman those are the characters who supply the main action in this moss-covered plot. If the last mentioned figure had been drawn more truthfully the story would have had a better chance. But the subject matter is so weak that one cannot blame the principals for attempting to put life into it by overacting. Miss Clayton is a sincere actress and she tries to appear as natural as the part permits. There is really no sound motive brought out for the lack of harmony in the home. The wife, believing that her husband has broken his promise to forget his business after five o'clock, runs off to the dance. When she returns home the child is dead. And so they drift until an old family friend engineers a reunion.

Action? Indeed, the picture carries none at all, the characters are caught standing in groups, or dancing, or sitting around a table. Whatever merit the play may have had in its original version is lost here, because physical action cannot take the place of pointed dialogue. Harrison Ford as the husband doesn't exactly fit the picture, and such a good character actor as Raymond Hatton is buried in a spineless part. There may be a moral in the subject, but it is lost in the artificial arrangement of scenes.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Ethel Clayton, the beautiful Paramount-Artcraft star, will be seen at the ———— theatre beginning ———— in her latest picture entitled "Young Mrs. Winthrop," an adaptation by Edith Kennedy of Bronson Howard's play of the same name. The subject may be called a dramatic slice of real life since it treats of one of the most absorbing topics of the day—the problems of young married life; the pleasure-loving wife and business-loving husband. The Winthrops have been drifting apart but their child, Rosie, is the only tie that binds them. A day comes when they decide to make up. Douglas is to devote more time to his family and Constance to abandon her frivolous tendencies. The husband's determination to become a family man arouses Mrs. Dunbar, a woman of shady reputation. She plans revenge on Mrs. Winthrop for a fancied snubbing.

Overhearing Constance phoning her regrets for a party, the widow fakes a call to Winthrop, pretending she is his wife and telling him not to come home as she has changed her mind. Douglas is deeply hurt and in his anger accepts Mrs. Dunbar's invitation to call. Naturally Constance learns of the adventure and rushes off to the party. This drives husband and wife further apart. They are on the verge of a separation when an old friend plays skilfully upon their feelings and brings them together. This is an absorbing photodrama which builds up to intense dramatic situations and climaxes. Miss Clayton's sincere emotional work shows to splendid advantage throughout the many difficult scenes of "Young Mrs. Winthrop."

PROGRAM READER

The Winthrops were drifting apart. Douglas was a business-loving husband while Constance was a pleasure-loving wife. And even their pretty child, Rosie, did not provide the tie that binds. Then one day they decided to become a family couple. The husband would come home and be attentive to his wife while she would give up her social calls. Of course this excited the envy of another woman who professed a certain admiration for Douglas, and through revenge she succeeded in making the young couple drift further apart. How they were brought together again is told in a climax of tremendous appeal—a climax which brings a satisfactory conclusion to a drama of intense situations. The picture abounds in the elements of pathos and sentiment and is capably interpreted by the beautiful and talented Ethel Clayton. See "Young Mrs. Winthrop" at this theatre next ————.

The dramatic tale of a beautiful wife who drifted away from her husband. See Ethel Clayton in her finest picture, "Young Mrs. Winthrop."

A slice of life that is enacted in a million homes. That is "Young Mrs. Winthrop," the intensely dramatic and human picture which shows here———— with Ethel Clayton.

"BLACK SHADOWS"

(Fox)

Story of Self-Sacrifice Has Interesting Moments

HERE is a melodrama of crooks and stolen jewels that gets away from the familiar groove so often followed, because the characterization reveals a note of novelty. The idea may be far-fetched and unreasonable, but there is no denying that it carries a deal of dramatic force. Think of a society girl who is so susceptible to hypnotic influence that she becomes a kleptomaniac—then think of her chaperone assuming the blame to protect her good name. There you have the plot in a nutshell. There is really no motive for the villain using his tactics. But that is beside the point. What is important is the fact that the author has hit upon a new idea for screen expression and if robberies can be committed by a girl who is unconscious of her thefts and presented in an interesting way, the spectator would be critical indeed if he searched for flaws.

The picture moves against a background of fashionable society and suspicion rests upon the head of the chaperone through the machinations of the villain. No member of the group suspects the kleptomaniac, since her social position is secure, but a time comes when the guilty parties forget to cover their tracks. And so the complications are straightened out, bringing to light the fact that the chaperone acted in a spirit of genuine self-sacrifice. The romance is not neglected either and it helps to soften the heavy moments.

"Black Shadows" is brought out in scenes which compose a good continuity and the suspense is admirable, considering the fact that a good deal of the action is obvious. It is not a misstatement to say that the picture is about the best thing that Peggy Hyland has had in a long while. It takes her away from the maudlin sentimental roles in which she has too often appeared and provides her with opportunities to show a deeper emotion.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"Black Shadows," the new Fox photoplay in which charming Peggy Hyland stars, will open an engagement at the ———— theatre on ———— of ———— week. It is a picture which fascinates, thrills and satisfies and affords the star a role which is entirely adaptable for her personality. She plays the part of Marjorie Langdon, a dainty Quaker maid who is falsely accused of theft, and who, to save from disgrace the family of the man she loves, keeps silent when the finger of suspicion points to her. The locale of the story is Washington and it pictures the activities of the smart set.

Marjorie Langdon secures a position as "official chaperon" to the daughter of wealthy parents whose aim is to have her mount the social ladder with credit and make a brilliant marriage. Marjorie proves herself quite capable of foiling the plans of a designing villain. She takes upon herself the blame of thefts to shield the girl. The thief is being sheltered in the bosom of society. Mysterious jewel robberies are occurring week after week and suspicion points to the chaperon. The mystery is worked out in an adroit manner and romance triumphs in the end. Miss Hyland handles the dramatic situations in the play with rare histrionic ability. The supporting cast includes Correan Kirkham, Estella Evans, Cora Drew and Albert Roscoe. Howard M. Mitchell as the director has brought out all the values of the story with exceeding cleverness.

PROGRAM READER

"Black Shadows," a charming photoplay featuring piquant Peggy Hyland, will be presented at the ———— theatre in the near future. The offering is an ideal subject for the star and she makes the most of her rare talent in the role of the chaperon of a wealthy girl of Washington society. The play affords a very interesting study of the power one human mind may have over another. It shows also that circumstantial evidence cannot always be relied upon. It is a play which makes people think and sends them away satisfied. The mystery of many jewel robberies which have stirred members of the exclusive set is explained in a rather remarkable way. Light comedy and tender sentiment are seasoned with a touch of melodrama. How the chaperon solves the mystery is told in a fascinating manner. Watch for further announcements.

SUGGESTIONS

The exhibitor booking this feature should exploit through a poster campaign. Compelling posters can be obtained from the nearest Fox exchange and these present the tense moments of the drama. Another angle is the letter campaign to patrons. The exhibitor can emphasize the fact that the dainty Peggy Hyland appears in a charming play of mystery and that she portrays the character of a girl whose unselfish love impels her to assume responsibility for the crime of another in order to save from disgrace the family of the man she loves. The title is attractive and the exhibitor can feature it with many angles. He can mention that the play is a society drama which unfolds a deal of light comedy and tender sentiment. He can tell that the action is laid against the background of Washington society. The name of Peggy Hyland should also be exploited.

CATCH LINES

The hypnotist used his sinister power to compel an innocent girl to become a kleptomaniac. What happened? See Peggy Hyland in "Black Shadows."

See "Black Shadows," a picture of the subtle power of hypnotism—a picture of intrigue, scandal and love in Washington society.

Would you be willing to endure having the finger of suspicion pointed at you and keep silent when you knew the identity of the thief for whose misdeeds you suffered? See how Peggy Hyland takes care of herself in "Black Shadows."

"MARY ELLEN COMES TO TOWN"

(Paramount-Artcraft)

Dorothy Gish Scores in a Homespun Role

THERE'S quite a wide gap between Dorothy Gish's newest picture, "Mary Ellen Comes to Town," and "I'll Get Him Yet," a previous release, when it comes to analyzing the separate ideas and the comedy values derived from them. The latter piece was built from genuinely humorous material—so humorous in fact that it became outrageously farcical. And the sequences flowed along spontaneously, furnishing the star with plentiful opportunities to feature her peculiar brand of comedy. "Mary Ellen Comes to Town" falters, because it gets away from its humorous angle and becomes melodramatic. Which naturally puts quite a burden upon Dorothy Gish, because she is a comedienne and not an emotional ingenue.

Still she manages to bring forth a number of uproarious laughs in the heavier moments and her work is intelligent enough to carry the offering by as an acceptable offering. The old story of the country girl who longs for a career upon the stage furnishes the idea and in working out it the star and her director, Elmer Clifton, have not neglected to supply the necessary touches. The heroine realizes that the little hamlet is too slow for her, but the city can only provide a job in a cheap cabaret. Here it is that the melodrama comes in. The proprietor would use her as a baby vampire to unloosen the purse strings of a wealthy admirer.

A flaw in the story is the fact that he comes from the same town and would surely be known to her by reputation at least. The girl is framed, but she proves her mettle and the gratitude of the suitor is shown when he takes her back to the village on their honeymoon. Her life in the country store, her homespun antics in the hamlet and in the cabaret these are the incidents which lift the story and destroy some of its overstretched plot. Charles Gerrard scores again as the villainous proprietor and plays the part with his customary skill. Mr. Clifton's atmosphere is excellent.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Dorothy Gish, the star without an equal or imitators, comes to the ———— theatre for a week's engagement beginning ———— in her latest Paramount-Artcraft photoplay, "Mary Ellen Comes to Town." This is the amusing story of a country girl who, longing for the bright lights, journeys to New York and finding that a hall-bedroom life does not encourage a happy smile returns disillusioned to the little rural village. In the start of the picture Mary Ellen is a dispenser of ice cream sodas in the village drug store and this situation offers Miss Gish wonderful opportunities to display her inimitable comedy. Tired of being a comedienne in the little town she has the ambition to try her talents on the stage.

But she doesn't progress in her dramatic career further than a job as singer in a cheap cabaret. Her employer is a crook and plans to fleece a young man of his wealth by using Mary Ellen as a baby vampire. The stage is set for action but the girl finds her courage failing. Why? Because she has fallen in love with her victim. And both being heartily sick of the city they decide to spend their honeymoon in the little town. And somehow the place looks different colored as it is with romance. Miss Gish capitalizes her inexhaustible energy and unbounded humor and she is ably supported by Ralph Graves, Charles Gerrard and others. The picture was produced under the direction of Elmer Clifton, the same man responsible for her previous successes. He has handled the material in expert style and has piloted the picture to a most satisfying conclusion.—Laurence Reid.

PROGRAM READER

Mary Ellen had tired of her little country village. She had grown weary of amusing the yokels with whom she played checkers and served sodas from the drug store fountain. Someone had said that she had talent and straightway she journeyed to the Big Town where the bright lights are ever burning. But Mary Ellen only found employment in a third-rate cabaret, and considerably disillusioned she returned to the little town. But it had changed for her. The monotony had ended for she had found romance in the city even though she failed to find a position on the stage. How this story is worked out must be kept a surprise. Suffice to say that Dorothy Gish has another highly satisfying picture—one which presents her as her own inimitable self.

SUGGESTIONS

Paramount offers you another Dorothy Gish picture here and since this star has earned a big following it would be advisable to play up her name to the limit. Among the stills you should be able to find many of the star in typical poses. She has a distinct personality—one quite different from any other actress on the screen. Feature the title—it smacks of an old-fashioned girl. Tell that the picture is a rollicking comedy which is punctuated with flashes of fine sentiment and romance. Use the catch line angle and the teaser campaign and build your copy around the fact that it is a typical Gish picture. They will know that it is packed with swift-moving comedy and unbroken laughs. Feature it as a story which presents a rural maiden who journeys to the city and finds romance even though she fails as an actress. You can exploit the star as the feminine Charles Ray. Treat your copy in a humorous fashion and it will suggest the "pep" that the star puts into her work.

CATCH LINES

She was tired of serving sodas to the country yokels. She wanted to be a live pebble in a big town instead of staying in a sleepy town and watching the trains go by. See "Mary Ellen Comes to Town."

"THE WOMAN WHO UNDERSTOOD"
(Robertson-Cole)

Domestic Story Is Obvious But Entertaining

THE character of the neglected, home-loving wife has become as synonymous with Bessie Barriscale's name as the figure of the bashful boy is with the name of Charles Ray. Being equipped by nature and experience to enact such a type, she could go on indefinitely without bringing to mind that she is a one-part actress. Why? Because with each representation Miss Barriscale adds a little more finesse so that it appears to be a perfect study of its kind. As a play "The Woman Who Understood" is just average entertainment since it carries no outstanding dramatic points.

The plot travels straight to its obvious climax of repentance on the part of the husband and forgiveness on the part of the wife, and in the telling of it too much stress is laid upon the characterization to make it always compelling. There are moments when it doesn't convince because the figures are moved about in an arbitrary fashion. And too much latitude has been given the children to make the action entirely compact. It also seems at times that too much attention has been paid to painting shadows instead of sunshine, because the characters seldom smile.

In fact, Forrest Stanley, as the husband, carries a woebegone expression throughout the five reels, and this isn't in harmony with the conception of the character. He doesn't really go astray and indulges in very little scolding, so his playing is somewhat out of character. When the big moment comes it is his wife who shows her mettle and remains steadfast. This realized, he is easily reconciled to the fact that the other woman is unworthy. Result? Union forever. The picture carries a good deal of heart appeal. The sympathetic note would have been brought out better if there was some real estrangement between the husband and wife. Still it manages to entertain, thanks to Miss Barriscale's acting and the director's human touches.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Bessie Barriscale, the talented actress, whose previous pictures have always impressed the spectator through their dramatic pretention, comes forward again as the star of "A Woman Who Understood," a photoplay based upon a home-loving wife who saves her husband's career. The picture will be presented at the ——— theatre on ——— and ——— of ——— week. In the domestic part of the wife the star appears at her best. William Parke directed the offering, which was written by Isabelle Johnson. Miss Barriscale appears as Madge Graham who marries Robert Knight, a young musician, and whom she has difficulty in holding because of the arts of a meddling woman, Mrs. Alden.

After a rapid sketch of the pre-marriage days of Madge, the story passes to its main phase, which tells how the happiness of the central character is threatened by the foolish attentions of a wealthy trifler. This second woman thinks her husband is a little too practical to understand her so-called artistic soul and assures Knight that his wife is the same way. In other words they are soul-mates and should fly to each other's arms to find real happiness. This goes very well until the musician suffers a big misfortune and the future use of his hands is threatened. Then the question of saving him is put up to the two women, and it is his wife who comes to the rescue. The picture is intensely dramatic and affords the patrons plenty of action and suspense. The elements of sympathy and pathos are well capitalized. Miss Barriscale does a remarkable piece of acting as the wife who suffered but who understood. Her support includes Forrest Stanley, Thomas Holding and others.

PROGRAM READER

The fight of a wife to maintain the honor of her husband and who comes to his rescue when he fails to find sympathy during his misfortune with another woman is expressed in the Robertson-Cole picture, "A Woman Who Understood," which comes to this theatre next ——— with Bessie Barriscale as the star. The young married couple are residents of Greenwich Village and a wealthy woman attempts to intrigue the husband. For a time she is successful but when an occasion is offered her to show her love for him she falters and it is the home-loving wife who comes to the rescue. So he is able to appreciate the fine qualities in the character of his wife. This is a picture which sends out a deal of sympathy for the central character and it embodies a full quota of absorbing situations. "The Woman Who Understood" is one of Bessie Barriscale's finest pictures.

SUGGESTIONS

In advertising this picture to your patrons center your arguments and pictures around the central situation in the play, i. e., the wife who refuses to give up her husband even though she realizes that he is drifting away from her. While this situation is not altogether unusual in pictures it is certainly striking and arguments built around it should attract considerable attention. The final situation also affords another opportunity for special appeal to the public. Not only use these two situations in your newspaper advertising but make them the center of any special paintings or drawings you may have done for additional lobby display. The cards should be placed in frames on either side of the lobby to good effect. Play up the star's name since it carries with it the significance of real acting ability. Feature the title and the atmosphere which presents a slice of New York's artistic quarter—Greenwich Village.

CATCH LINES

She married a man with an artistic soul but when she found him drifting away from her what did she do? See Bessie Barriscale in "The Woman Who Understood."

"THE IDOL DANCER"
(First National)

Feature Entertains, But Will Not Impress

IT is a different Griffith that comes forward as the sponsor for "The Idol Dancer." Being tired, perhaps, of producing the type of picture which has made him famous, he has turned to a fantastic design for expression. Indeed many directors could produce it quite as well. The impression that he attempts to convey that we are brothers and sisters "under the skin" no matter whether we dwell in civilized communities or among a group of savages, does not convince.

Mr. Griffith might be said to have in some degree missed his mark in this production. It is, however, of such a texture as to assure entertainment to practically any audience. The Griffith artistry tries hard to overcome weakness—in fact palpable lack, of theme and characterization.

Take away the background, and the Griffith touch, and little remains. To those expecting to find a super-Griffith-picture, or to those who will compare it with many others of this producer, there seems bound to come a disappointment.

The test of all drama is its power to interest and while the offering attracts from a pictorial angle it fails to do so with its ingredients. Imagine a missionary and his wife; a beachcomber, who is tossed up by the tide; a passionate idol dancer, and the reverend's sickly nephew as the only white inhabitants of a tiny island of blacks, then visualize a love triangle between the young people and you have it.

Mr. Griffith's attempt to show that love can blossom in any clime is all right enough, but his efforts to present colorful action are somewhat faulty. There isn't a note of sincerity anywhere visible except in the acting of Richard Barthelmess as the beachcomber, and Creighton Hale as the sickly youth. Blacks from a neighboring island furnish the hectic flush in the plot and they loot and pillage when the native sons are away. The only suspense is the return of these men in a huge canoe. Will they arrive in time? They do. And so the beachcomber regains his self-respect when he realizes that the dancer loves him. This character is played by Clarine Seymour in the customary hula-hula manner. —Length, 6 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE STORY

D. W. Griffith, the master director, has gone to a new locale for his latest picture, "The Idol Dancer," an island in the South Seas, and there produced a story which will further add to his fame and give the screen another film of realism and dramatic beauty. "The Idol Dancer" has been secured by the ——— theatre for a ——— days' engagement beginning ———.

The picture filmed among the beautiful Bahama Islands unfolds a dramatic love conflict fanned by the mysterious dancing beauty on a South Sea island, daughter of a French father and Javanese mother. One of the lovers is a beach comber, who has been cast off a passing vessel because he will not work and desires only to imbibe all the gin he can secure. The other is a sickly young American who comes to the island where resides his uncle, a missionary, in the hope of regaining his health. Here it is that the conflict for the love of the wild beauty is fought out, ending with the reformation of the beach comber for the sake of the girl he loves and who finally loves him.

It is a savage and weird screen picture in many ways and might have been common and cheap produced by a lesser director than the master. In his hands one of the big human dramas of the year has been evolved. Richard Barthelmess is the beach comber, Creighton Hale the youth who is ill, and Claire Seymour the dancing girl of the island.

SUGGESTIONS

Play up the fact that this is a personally directed Griffith picture, and the one that while filming Mr. Griffith and his company nearly lost their lives when shipwrecked some months ago, news stories concerning which occupied big space in the papers for days. Pay attention to the cast, especially Barthelmess and Hale. Use scene stills showing Claire Seymour with "shredded wheat" clothes and mention the hula-hula dancing. Make much of the "brotherly love" idea expressed in the picture and ask questions as to what inspires such a love and if it is the only true love, that of man for man. For a lobby display idea you have the South Sea hut easy of construction, with the hiring of negroes to pose as native blacks. The ukelele and Hawaiian music lends itself naturally to advertising the picture, especially in the matter of prologues. A dancer dressed as the "idol dancer" and performing the more refined of the Hawaiian dances should interest.

CATCH LINES

They don't wear dresses in the South Sea Islands because they "smell missionary." Instead they don "shredded wheat clothes."

A weird tale of two kinds of love, that of man for a woman, pure and undefiled, and that of a man for a man, even deeper and more wonderful.

Out of the land of mystery and romance the master producer of the screen's best drama comes with a story as colorful and strong and as great in characterization and fine in contrasting values as any of his other successes. It is a story of love—two kinds of love—one of man for a woman—the other of a man for a man. It is real drama gripping in its tense moments, beautiful in its romance, and infectious in its high lights of comedy that the producer of the "Birth of a Nation" now gives the world.

"LIFTING SHADOWS"
(Perret-Pathe)

Propagandists Run Riot in This One

HERE'S a propaganda picture that for thrills and excitement beats any serial we have seen in a long time.

Leonce Perret's aim, no doubt, was to accomplish this object, but there is a question in our mind whether an audience will take him seriously. The strong dramatic moments, the killings, the bombs and Russians are all there, but the picture seems to revert back to the ones we used to see three and four years ago and which were rather popular at that time with certain audiences.

The story is no different than the usual run of its kind, taking Russia and America for its locale.

At the present time, there seems to be little demand for this type of picture unless it is among the smaller houses or ones where the foreign element is predominant.

Director Perret has kept the tempo of his scenes at high pitch throughout, which results in too much action, for when the "villains" are not pursued, they are pursuing, with death as their object.

And throughout all this, the heroine has a very stormy time of it. When she is not surrounded by Bolsheviki in Russia, she is trying to evade them in America. The story also reminds us of the old melodramatic days, for the heroine receives the same old anonymous letters, signed in the same old way, only this time the signature reads "The Ring of Death."

Now if your patrons like this type of picture, here's one that will surely interest them.—Length, 6 reels.—Frank Leonard.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"Lifting Shadows," a Pathe production featuring Emmy Wehlen, will play this theatre on ——— of next ———.

In this picture Miss Wehlen is offered splendid opportunity to display her dramatic talents, for this feature is highly seasoned with dramatic moments throughout.

As Vania, the daughter of a Russian who is a member of "The Circle of Death," she has a very stormy time of it in her native land. Coming to America she marries a drug-ridden man whose actions become so repulsive to her that she decides to divorce him. But she does not accomplish her object, however, for in a wild scene between the two she shoots and believes she has killed him. During all this time she is pursued by three men who are known as "The Ring of Death," and who demand that she turn over to them the papers her father had entrusted to her. She refuses to give them up, however, thinking that they might breed revolution.

A young American now comes into her life and proposes marriage but she tells him to wait. "The Ring of Death" again becomes active and one of its members enters her house and is about to kill her when he discovers that our heroine is living with his mother. He leaves the house but is shot by a guard. Before he dies, he confesses that Vania's shot had entered her husband's leg and that it was he who had killed him in a scuffle which took place afterwards. Many thrilling scenes now occur but the final ending shows hero and heroine in each other's arms.

PROGRAM READER

Emmy Wehlen will be seen in her latest Pathe offering at this theatre on ——— of next ———. This picture is filled with thrills which will interest and hold an audience throughout. It relates the life of Vania, a young Russian girl who lives in an atmosphere of revolution in her native land. Coming to America she is pursued by a band of assassins who demand that she give up certain papers which her father had entrusted to her, he being a member of the outlaws. Unhappiness still pursues her in the "land of the free," for she marries a drug-ridden man whose actions become so repugnant to her that divorce seems the only way out. He still pursues her in his sensuous manner, which results in a highly dramatic moment, in which she shoots and believes she has killed him.

Vania is tried for murder but is acquitted. Love comes to her in the form of the young lawyer who has been instrumental in her acquittal. He proposes marriage but she tells him to wait. After many thrilling and exciting scenes in which our hero and heroine overcome all obstacles the final close-up shows them in each other's arms with marriage as the outcome.

SUGGESTIONS

This picture may and may not interest your audience. If you care to give them a thrill of the old melodramatic kind, this is your picture. But above all, before showing it let them know that it is a propaganda picture with nothing new in story or action. If you do not do this you may have many disappointed patrons.

There are many dramatic moments in the story which you might play up but you should exploit them in a melodramatic vein.

Of course, the star has a reputation which should be played on and ought to take the "big" place in your exploitation. Then again the cast is a good one, is well selected and gives a good account of itself. Above all be cautious in your advertising if you play this feature and feel in doubt as to your patrons accepting it.

CATCH LINES

Girls, what would you do if you had a husband who was a drug-ridden shell of a man? See what Emmy Wehlen does in "Lifting Shadows."

Why did she refuse to be his wife when she knew he loved her? Emmy Wehlen will tell you in "Lifting Shadows."

She believed she had killed her husband. How did she find out that she had not? See Emmy Wehlen in "Lifting Shadows."

"THE INNER VOICE"
(American-Pathe)

Should Satisfy Any Audience Anywhere

HERE'S a picture that can play any house and give splendid satisfaction, for it contains the necessary ingredients to make it entertaining. Although the story is not new, it unfolds so well and holds the interest so strongly, that you cannot help but enjoy it. And it also points a lesson to producers who claim that unless a story is composed of many new twists, it is old and should not be done.

Now here's a story which tells of the innocent prospector who is swindled out of his money by the cunning "stock promoter," and as a result falls to the lowest depths. Fortune smiles on him again, however, and we see him a successful man in Wall Street, accomplishing his aim "vengeance upon his enemies." Nothing new to it and you naturally ask why this film is so interesting. The reason is this, the story is told in the proper way. Plenty of time is taken to land its points, which are never jumbled and when a big scene comes along which requires plenty of action, the action is there, then all is "peace and quiet" until the time arrives for the planting of another big scene, thus giving the picture the right amount of balance.

E. K. Lincoln is a splendid type for this kind of production, where the dress suit alternates with the rough character clothes. If given a fairly good story of this kind and a good cast, he'll put it over any day in the week.

And let us not forget to mention the director R. William Neill and the cast, for their combined efforts are responsible for two-thirds of the feature's success.—Length, 6 reels.—Frank Leonard.

THE CAST

Mark Reid.....E. K. Lincoln
The Good Samaritan.....Fuller Mellish
Mike O'Hara.....Riley Hatch
George P. Morrison.....Walter Greene
Barbara.....Agnes Ayres
Gilbert Dawson.....Edward Keppler

Scenario by Elaine Sterne.
Directed by R. William Neill.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

E. K. Lincoln in the Pathe production, "The Inner Voice," will play this theatre on ——— of next ———.

This picture for its kind is one of the best produced in a long time. It contains the necessary ingredients which go to make a feature well worth witnessing. They are story, direction and cast, which could not be better judging from present day standards. Mr. Lincoln, who is an artist in the line of work called for in this picture, has never been given a better vehicle in which to display his talents.

Mark Reid, a young prospector, discovers gold in the foothills of the Sierra Manager ——— announces that "The Inner Voice," a Pathe release starring E. K. Lincoln, will play this house on ——— of next ———. Nevadas. While he is away registering his claim another prospector happens along and seeing no one around takes possession and soon discovers that he has a very valuable property. Upon Reid's return, a mighty struggle takes place betwen the two giants. Our hero is gradually being overcome when an Indian slips a dagger into his hand. The fight is again renewed and Reid is about to plunge the knife into his adversary's breast when a "Good Samaritan" appears on the scene and stops the fight. Reid now accepts his antagonist as his partner and things seem to come their way when a crafty schemer appears upon the scene with his niece and succeeds in getting hold of the property. Our hero falls in love with the beautiful girl and is about to marry her when he discovers that her uncle has fleeced him out of all his money. Becoming discouraged he leaves the vicinity and becomes a wanderer. But fortune smiles upon him again and we next see him as a successful man in the stock market, whose shrewdness helps him to "break" his enemies and accomplish his one object—revenge. But when he gains his end he sees what a shallow thing it is. His life is made happier, however, by the entrance of his former sweetheart who understands this changed man and who believes she can make him happy by marriage.

PROGRAM READER

If you want to see a picture without a dull moment in it, be sure and witness this one, for it contains all the necessary ingredients that go to make an interesting feature. It has thrills, a good love story and enough action to make you grip your seats and hold your breaths. E. K. Lincoln, the star, who is an artist in the line of work called for in this picture, has never been given a better vehicle in which to display his talents. And he is surrounded by one of the most capable casts ever seen upon the screen. The support includes Fuller Mellish, Riley Hatch, Walter Greene, Agnes Ayres and Edward Keppler.

As the young innocent prospector who is wheedled out of his claim by a scheming promoter and left a penniless wanderer only to be clutched again by the hand of fortune and placed in a position where he succeeds in getting even with his enemies, he is in his element.

The story contains many thrilling moments, among them being a fight between the hero and a prospector who is trying to do him out of his claim. The struggle is renewed time and again with Reid gradually succumbing, when a peculiar thing happens—an Indian appears upon the scene and slips a knife into his hand with which he is about to turn the tide of battle, but is stopped by the appearance of a "Good Samaritan," who pleads with the combatants to cease their struggle, which they do and shake hands. This is only one of the thrilling moments in this exciting picture.

SUGGESTIONS

Here's a feature you can go the limit on in your exploitation. It contains about everything that goes to make up a good production. It has a good story, a good cast and was produced by a capable director.

The story contains innumerable points which you might advertise to advantage. You might feature any of the thrilling moments and not be afraid of a comeback and you might also play up the love interest, which is a feature in the story. There are two big fights in the picture you would do well to advertise, one is the thrilling fight between the star and a prospector over their claim, and it must be said that for its viciousness this encounter has never been beaten upon the screen, and the other is the Tong raid in San Francisco's Chinatown which takes place in one of the popular cabarets. The cast, which is a good one, should also be mentioned.

"THE GIRL IN NUMBER 29"
(Universal)

Surprise Ending Picture Provides Average Entertainment

UNIVERSAL has given us a picture that is somewhat different in structure at least, in "The Girl in Number 29," starring Frank Mayo. It is full to the brim of rapid fire action furnished by the star, whose series of wild and startling adventures comprise the greater part of the picture.

The plot is of the "surprise ending" type, and reminds one of the stage play "The Seven Keys to Baldpate." The hero is a playwright who refuses to work, so his friends hire half a dozen actors, including a beautiful girl, who is surrounded with mystery, to provide inspiration. The spectator is, of course, not let in on the secret. From then on follows action so startling and melodramatic that the audience may not take it seriously and therefore suspect the surprise that is coming. Or else they may swallow it whole for a while and become so bored with this "mystery house" sort of action that they will not wait to have their sense of probability soothed in the final reel.

The director seems to forget, however, that the "frame-up" was planned to fool the ambitionless hero, and not the audience. There is no reason why we should see, as we do in several scenes, two of the conspirators carrying on their fictitious drama, when the hero is nowhere in sight. To accentuate the surprise the characters are made to behave most unnaturally. And this is not a technical flaw that will pass unnoticed. The audience is liable to resent this illegitimate effort to fool them.

Frank Mayo provides real thrilling action, and Clara Anderson plays the pathetic, frightened little heroine quite well. The picture has some good interior sets and good photography. On the whole it is a good average picture, somewhat different from the stereotyped drama, and will entertain in most houses.—Length, 5 reels.—Matthew Taylor.

THE CAST

Laurie Devon.....Frank Mayo
Rodney Bangs.....Harry Hilliard
Doris Williams.....Clare Anderson
Barbara Devon.....Elinor Fair
Ransome Shaw.....Ray Ripley
Jacob Epstein.....Robert Bolder
Strangler Abdullah.....Bull Montana

Story by Elizabeth Jordan.
Scenario by Philip J. Hurn.
Produced by Jack Ford.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Frank Mayo, Universal's popular star, will be seen on ———— at the ———— theatre, in a five-reel feature, "The Girl in Number 29." This picture is a novel departure from the average photodrama.

The star plays Laurie Deven, a playwright, who having produced one success, refuses to work on another. He drifts pleasantly on until—something happens. From his window he watches a girl in the apartment across the street. He sees her suddenly take up a revolver and press it to her forehead. He reaches her barely in time to save her, and she tells him a little of her story. Apparently she is under some terrible evil influence, which she will not reveal.

Laurie, in an effort to save her and untangle the mystery, is led through a series of adventures that amaze and bewilder. The girl is carried away to a house in Long Island, where Laurie rescues her after the hardest kind of fighting. Driven to desperation he draws a revolver, and watches one of his pursuers sink to the ground.

When he returns he is heartbroken. He tells his sister and friends that he is a murderer. Then comes the confession from the conspirators. The whole thing was a "frame-up" concocted in an effort to make the ambitionless author write. His sister and two friends must share the guilt of the crime. Then the "girl in number 29" sees his revolver. It is the one she had used in her supposed attempt at suicide, and was loaded with blank cartridges. The "murdered" man walks in, disgusted with his role, and Laurie and "the girl in number 29" melt into each other's arms in the final fade-out.

PROGRAM READER

If you feel that you would like to see a picture that departs from the ordinary type of photodrama that you have been witnessing, your place is here on the evening of ————. There will be present to entertain and delight you, none other than Frank Mayo, the Universal star, in "The Girl in Number 29," a picture that is entirely novel, and one that will startle and surprise you, and thrill you from the beginning to the end. "The people like to be fooled," said that great showman, P. T. Barnum. O. Henry proved it further, and Universal settles the argument. This picture ends the way you least expect it. It has a "punch" at the end that startles. And Frank Mayo furnishes enough action throughout the picture to satisfy the most thrill-hungry fan.

SUGGESTIONS

This picture is adapted from the novel by Elizabeth Jordan entitled "The Girl in the Mirror." Its star has a large following who like to see him in this type of picture. Show as many stills of the big action scenes in this picture as possible, and display a photograph of Mayo in your lobby. In your advertising copy work up the mystery which surrounds the heroine, and use catch lines showing how the star commits murder to rescue her from a fate that he knows nothing whatsoever about. If you are located near New York mention the fact that the story is laid in Long Island. Advertise it as the "kind of a story O. Henry might have written."

CATCH LINES

What matters prohibition when you can see a picture with such a "kick" as "The Girl in Number 29?"

A picture more startling than "The Seven Keys to Baldpate," and as thrilling as any serial.

"A CHILD FOR SALE"
(Ivan Abramson)

Timely Economic Questions Treated in Dramatic Story

"A CHILD FOR SALE" is, in theme at least, about as up to date as possible. It deals with the rent profiteers in New York City and carries a condemnation of unscrupulous landlords. For this reason it will have a strong appeal.

Being essentially a "reform" picture, it carries with it little love interest. A wife is found for the hero in the end, but no love theme runs through the picture. A dramatic story is woven in, dealing with the past of the mother, who finds in the downtrodden tenant her long lost son.

The picture has no particular star, but Creighton Hale outshines the rest of the cast. Gladys Leslie and William Tooker play their parts well, but Julia Swayne Gordon, as the mother with the past—which consists of merely a hidden previous marriage—is entirely overdramatic throughout.

The picture, condemning the "stubborn aristocrat," carries a moral. The episode of the father being obliged to sell his daughter seems to have been worked in to give the picture a box office title. It is not an essential part of the plot, and the wealthy widow who buys the little girl drops out of the story as suddenly as she entered. The story ends when the downtrodden tenant saves the life of the landlord, thereby changing all his ideas on economic questions.

It seems as if the success of this picture would be proportional with the scale of rents in each city. Besides the anti-profiteer appeal there is not much else to attract.—Length, 6 reels.—Matthew Taylor.

Written and Directed by Ivan Abramson.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"A Child for Sale," a powerful drama, setting forth the evils of profiteering, will be the attraction at the ———— theatre on ————. The story was written and produced by Ivan Abramson, whose earlier productions will be remembered by all who saw them.

The story is laid in the Greenwich Village section of New York City, where Charles Stoddard, a struggling painter, strives to earn a livelihood for his wife and two children. But his home is owned by William Harrison, a wealthy philanthropist, who, while he gives to charity with one hand, grinds higher rents from his poor tenants with the other. Stoddard's wife dies, and he is forced to sell his baby daughter to a wealthy widow. But the pain of the separation is too great and he obtains his little girl back again.

In the meantime Stoddard's little boy is picked up in the streets for begging and taken to Harrison's protectory. There his father comes for him and a stormy scene ensues when Stoddard upbraids the hypocritical philanthropist.

When little Sylvia contracts scarlet fever a kind-hearted doctor brings the little boy to the Harrison home. There Mrs. Harrison questions him and learns that Stoddard is her son by a former marriage which she has kept a secret from her husband. The story comes to a thrilling climax when Stoddard saves the life of his landlord, and Mrs. Harrison tells her husband of her long hidden secret.

The story is a powerful condemnation of present day evils of rent profiteering and one that will make a lasting impression.

PROGRAM READER

Ivan Abramson's dramatic production, "A Child for Sale," will be seen at this theatre on ————. This is a straight-from-the-shoulder, hard-hitting, condemnation of the present day evils of rent profiteering. The cast includes Gladys Leslie, Creighton Hale, and Julia Swayne Gordon, besides the two talented children, Bobby Connelly and Ruth Sullivan. This is the first picture which puts forth in dramatic form the story of the injustices practised today by unscrupulous landlords. It is the kind of a picture which will not fade from the memory when you leave the theatre and it is the kind of a story that will do a great deal toward alleviating the horrors of unjust rents.

SUGGESTIONS

This picture has its great appeal in its condemnation of rent-profiteers. There is no other subject which fills the mind of the American people today as this does. The papers are full of it. You can get several clergymen of your city to express their views on the subject, and use them in your exploitation. If you do any parading use such a startling sign as "Rents Go Up Another 20 Per Cent!" Write some copy in the form of a classified ad., such as "Wanted: A decent place to live, with a landlord who is HUMAN. See "A Child for Sale" at the ———— theatre and learn something of the evils of the housing question of today." Do not boost this as a reform picture entirely—insist that there is an interesting dramatic story behind it all. Gladys Leslie and Creighton Hale both have a goodly following on the screen.

CATCH LINES

A story dealing with that which is uppermost in your own mind—the evils of rent profiteering of the present day.

See "A Child for Sale!" the most powerful condemnation of profiteers clothed in a tensely dramatic story.

MISS MISCHIEF
By William C. Lengel

Character of Story: Comedy.
Theme: Love.
Characters: Winifred Baldwin, known as Miss Mischief; Hughey Granger, West Point Cadet; Blinks Bawker, highwayman;; Deacon Tinker, bashful bachelor; Martha Wallis, almost an old maid; Mr. and Mrs. Baldwin, Winifred's parents; Miss Prim, principal of Miss Prim's School; Colonel Waters, West Point commander; Theophilus Pugsley, a teacher at Miss Prim's.
The Plot: Winifred Baldwin, variously called Winifred, Miss Mischief and Billy, is a Tom Boy. She is the leader of the children in her village, and even when approaching young womanhood still continues to play pranks with the little tads and to tease Sergeant Hughey Granger of West Point who is inclined to regard her as a little girl. A highwayman has been loose in the neighborhood and as a joke Winifred leads her band of children into holding up Deacon Tinker and Miss Wallis who are riding in the Deacon's buggy. The Deacon is tied to a tree and afterward is robbed by the real highwayman. When he obtains his freedom he makes such an earnest complaint of Winifred's behavior that she is packed off to Miss Prim's school for young ladies which is in the neighborhood of West Point. Here Winifred resumes her acquaintance with Hughey who now finds her almost grown up. Although a young ladies' school Winifred still likes to play jokes and becomes a ring-leader in the innocent mischief of the girls. She attracts the attention of an instructor, one Pugsley, who attempts to force his attentions upon her and who takes a great delight in getting her into trouble with the school authorities when she repulses his advances. One night Hughey has leave of absence and Winifred comes down a rope from her window and accompanies him to town where they go to dinner in a restaurant on Broadway. As a joke Winifred sets his watch back. Pugsley discovers Winifred's escape and gives the alarm. Miss Prim notifies the West Point commander that Hughey has eloped with one of her girls and a detail is sent out to arrest them. Meanwhile the highwayman, Blinks Bawker, has broken into the barracks and stolen a good deal of stuff from the boys. The robbery is discovered and an alarm is sent out that he is in the woods somewhere in the neighborhood of the Prim school. Hughey discovers that his watch is slow and that he scarcely has time to reach West Point in time to avoid being absent without leave, but learning that the highwayman is abroad does not dare send her back to school alone. They arrive at the school to find it surrounded by cadets who are looking for Hughey as well as for the highwayman. She insists that he comes into her room. He does so only after she agrees to become engaged to him. She then plans to lead the cadets astray by making them think that she is the highwayman. She succeeds in drawing them away from the school while Hughey gets out. The highwayman really has been hidden in her room and now makes for the woods. There he comes upon Winifred and attacks her. Hughey is caught and arrested, but upon hearing Winifred's outcries, breaks away and goes to her rescue capturing Bawker. Winifred, Hughey and Bawker are all taken before the Commandant, who when he hears their story, alters Hughey's leave of absence to make it twenty-four hours which gives him time to be married. The Deacon and Miss Wallis who have become engaged on West Point grounds, contrary to regulations, are also arrested but released with a warning to do their courting elsewhere.
Locale: West Point and another New York village.
Picture High Lights: There are many comedy details and situations not detailed in this synopsis. Good ingenue comedy of the lighter type.

A WEEK-END WIFE
By Paul H. Sloane

Character of Story: Comedy.
Theme: Commuters.
Characters: Perry Hammond; Betty, his wife; Dorothy Vane, her chum; Vance Vane, Dorothy's brother; Tom Stafford, a friend of Perry's; Mrs. Vane, Tom's sister; Her baby; Carter Rowland, a bachelor; Suzanna Simpson, a gay old girl.
The Plot: This is a farce comedy. Perry Hammond commutes daily from Sea Cliff. His wife complains that she is a "week-end wife" because he is usually forced to stop at hotels in town most of the week because of pressure of work. Perry himself feels that a little more continuity in his family life would not be amiss and plans to obtain this by getting a furnished apartment in the city with which he intends to surprise his wife when everything has been arranged. It is his idea that they will spend the middle of the week in the city and go to the country together for the week-ends. This particular week he has secured the apartment and is once more forced to stay in town until Friday. Dorothy Vane, his wife's chum, solicits her help in a matter affecting her brother, Vance Vane. It seems that Vance, quite innocently and unintentionally, has inspired a deep affection in an old maid named Suzanna Simpson. He has told Suzanna he is a married man but she refuses to believe him and persists in following him about and sending him daily valentines. Could Betty help brother Vance out of this situation by allowing Dorothy and Vance to come to Hammond's house where Betty could pretend to be Vance's wife, just for a day or so while Suzanna visits the suburb? Betty, by reason of their long friendship, consents. Vance is installed in Perry's bed room and Betty takes Dorothy into her own boudoir. Suzanna comes, sees and is convinced, but lingers to knit a pair of wristers for Vance as a last token of her esteem. Perry meanwhile also has a friend in need. Tom Stafford has a sister with no place to go. This sister has quarreled with her husband and come to New York with her baby where she has thrown herself on Tom's hands. Tom cannot secure any rooms for her and does not know what to do—could Perry help him out for a day or two. Perry could. He will go home a day earlier than he intended and Tom's sister with her baby can use his apartment. So it is arranged. Betty, at home, receives a notice from the real estate people that the apartment in town is ready for occupancy. She knows that this was intended as a surprise by her husband so she thinks she will surprise him by buying for him a certain pipe rack he has admired in a shop window in New York. She will take this to the new apartment and hang it up in his den. She arrives with the pipe-rack in her grip just in time to observe, from the other side of the street, Perry's descent of the basement stairs with a baby carriage Then she sees him wave his hand to a woman with a baby in the windows of an upper apartment and go down the the street. So—he has another family! Climbing the fire escape to investigate she is spied by the janitor and a cry of burglars is raised. Taking refuge in an open window Betty hides under the bed in an empty apartment. Presently the owner, a jolly old bachelor named Carter Rowland arrives on the scene with a bag full of old Scotch. He spies her feet sticking out from beneath the bed and drags her out. The police arrive at the door and he lies like a gentleman, swearing that she is an old friend—a relative in fact —and has been talking with him for hours more or less. The police go away. Rowland offers Betty a drink and is rebuked forcibly. She grasps the bag and escapes from the house. Perry, meanwhile has gone home and found his room full of another man's clothes. He is waiting for her revolver in hand when she returns. Recriminations are followed by explanations and just when the atmosphere begins to clear she opens her bag and finds it full of Scotch. Rowland arrives to claim the bag. Suzanna comes to bid a last farewell and arrives just in time to meet Tom's sister (Perry's alibi) who proves to be Vance's wife. She left him because of Suzanna's letters. So all ends happily in general reunions and even Suzanna comes out winner, for she makes a hit with the old bachelor.
Locale: New York and suburbs.

THE SPICE OF LIFE
By Ashley T. Locke

Character of Story: Comedy.
Theme: Variety.
Characters: Doris Martin; Kendall Crane; Lord Worthington; Spiffy McGuire; Kitty Delavan; Dick Murphy; Gaston, a waiter; Mike, a barber; Slim Levinsky.
The Plot: Doris Martin, a young woman who believes that variety is the spice of life makes life miserable for Kendall Crane, a serious minded young millionaire who is desperately in love with her. On the advice of his physical culture trainer, Crane determines to make her jealous. He employs Kitty Delavan, the "lady friend" of Dick Murphy an East Sider of shady antecedents to play the part. She has a thousand candle power eye but a one horse power vocabulary. Crane takes her to dine at the Ritz where he sees Doris much wrapt up in Lord Worthington. He then determines to show her how much nobility is worth and introduces Mike, a barber, and Gaston, a waiter, as noblemen. When he goes home with Kitty after the dinner, he is attacked by Murphy but the latter gets the worst of the encounter. Kitty and Murphy plot to blackmail Crane. Crane takes Kitty to the artists' ball. While there, masked, Doris is annoyed by a masked man and rescued by another. During the scuffle their masks fall off and she learns that the man who annoyed her is Lord Worthington while her rescuer is Crane. After the ball Kitty pretends to be taken ill and Crane carries her up to her rooms. There Murphy comes with Levinsky, a fellow crook, to blackmail him. Doris has followed them home and overheard their threats. She makes a noise in the hall and gets them out, pushing them downstairs from behind. She and Crane then escape by the fire escape. Doris meanwhile has learned that the whole affair with Kitty was a trick to make her jealous. She does not reveal her identity to Crane and he thinks she is simply the girl at the ball who was grateful because he rescued her from the Englishman. Doris determines to play a joke of her own and pretends to elope with Mike, the barber. Crane hears of this and follows. Worthington, who has seen the elopement, follows sooner and overtakes the pair who wait for him, thinking it is Crane. Lord Worthington knocks Mike out with a wrench and carries off Doris tied to the tonneau of his car. He is arrested for speeding and, while he is in court, Murphy and Levinsky, who have been robbing the country postoffice, come out and make their getaway with the car in which Doris is tied. They pass Crane on the road and, recognizing Worthington's car, he follows them and pursues them into the woods. He then takes them prisoners and they say that they have not seen the girl. He finds Mike in the road and learns that Lord Worthington ran away with Doris. He starts for the village where Lord Worthington was arrested. Doris, not knowing that Crane is now at the wheel, thinks she is again being carried away by crooks. She manages to work loose and seize the driver by the throat. In the excitement she tumbles over the seat and comes face to face with Crane. She decides that she has had all of the variety she wants and that henceforth she will be content with the company of one man – Kendall Crane.

Picture High Lights: A humorous melodrama would, perhaps, be the best description of this story. Plenty of action throughout.

DUST OF NEW YORK
By Conrad Bercovici

Character of Story: Short stories
Theme: Varied types in Manhattan.
Characters: Moishe Goldberg; Sophia, his daughter; Ephraim Waldman; Mrs. Goldberg.
The Plot: This book is made up of a series of short stories of life in the various foreign quarters of New York and deals with the reactions of foreigners to American environment. It presents the city from many different angles and has more than a little literary quality but most of the stories are more full of thought than of action, so that some of them, to be used for pictures, would require the injection of action. A typical story is that of Moishe Goldberg, the Roumanian grocer who has come to this country and built up a big business at the time the story opens. Moishe is a popular man and a charitable man who contributes heavily to all worthy causes and joins every lodge and brotherhood that comes within his knowledge. He is sought after by his compatriots and regarded as one of the really solid men of his community. His daughter Sophia, instead of selecting a hard-headed business man like her father, falls in love with a handsome youngster by the name of Ephraim Waldman. Moishe does not approve of her choice but being an indulgent father does not wish to make her unhappy by putting obstacles in her way. If she cannot fall in love with the right sort of man, he decides, the next best thing is to try to make the right sort of man out of the man with whom she has fallen in love. There is little difficulty about persuading Waldman, the new son-in-law, that he ought to go into the wholesale grocery business especially when he finds that he is offered a partnership. As he must have some official position in the firm and as his fastidious taste revolts at the thought of wearing an apron and serving customers behind the counter, it is decided that he shall become the book-keeping department of the firm. Here a difficulty immediately presents itself. Moishe has never kept any books. It has been the custom to take to the bank every day all of the cash and checks accumulated during the day and to draw out of the bank as much money as he needed whenever it was needed. He has carried his accounts in his head and has always found this a very satisfactory method of doing business. If he needed more money in a hurry, he was always good for it at the bank or with any of his friends and, on occasion, he would lend money in the same manner on the word of some friend or acquaintance whom he knew to be honest. This free and easy method of doing business had built him up a great trade and made him many friends. Therefore when Waldman begins to complain that he has no books to keep and that he cannot be a book-keeper without them, Moishe objects to the innovation. He sees no need for books. The business has always run without them and run very well. Why should he go to the trouble and expense of keeping books to look up in a book what he already knows in his head? Waldman, however, is obdurate. He insists that no modern business can be run in that fashion. There must be books—whoever heard of a business without books? Without books there is no dignity in the position. Without books he has nothing to do. Without books he cannot be happy. So what Moishe at first regards as a joke has become almost a tragedy. The entire household is upset. Waldman threatens to go elsewhere unless books are had. So Moishe gets the books. And it is only a short time before Waldman discovers what Moishe never knew—that the business is bankrupt. That its assets are not sufficient to cover the liabilities. That, in fact, they cannot afford to run the business at all although it appears to be prosperous. Moishe's confidence is destroyed.

When next he needs money he has not the nerve to ask for a loan and before long the entire business goes into bankruptcy—all because Waldman must have have books to satisfy his idea of how a business ought to be run.

SIMONETTA
By Edwin Lefevre

Character of Story: Romance.

Theme: Art and love.

Characters: Geoffrey Thurston, a New York collector; Giovanni Vespe, a modern old master; Simonetta, his daughter; Francesco, Vespe's servant; Mariucca, Simonetta's duenna; Cavalieri Partini, a lawyer; Father Gazzoli.

The Plot: Thurston is left with a sufficient fortune, though not a huge one as fortunes are reckoned nowadays, and with a large collection of early Dutch paintings brought together by his father during the latter's life time. As a young man, for the reason that he found the one type of art tiresome, Thurston turned his attention to Italian art and became more or less an expert on the quattrocentist artists. While stopping in Florence on one of his numerous vacations, Thurston is approached in his hotel by a distinguished looking old man who threatens to faint just as he is standing before Thurston's chair. Thurston helps him to his seat and the old man, as he says in gratitude, offers to take him to his house and show him a wonderful painting. Thurston is wary for he fears that the old man means to try to sell him something probably some imitation of an old master, such as is so often sold to unsophisticated Americans abroad. The old man is so earnest, however, and assures him so solemnly that he will not sell the picture, that Thurston finally consents. He finds the house a very remarkable place, full of fifteenth century Florentine furniture and with the atmosphere of the middle ages all about it. There is one picture, hanging on the wall in the main salon, which Thurston immediately recognizes for the lost Simonetta of Botticelli. He questions the old man, who says it might be or it might not be by Botticelli. For his own part he does not think it would add anything to its value to know the truth about it and he therefore will not call in experts to verify it. Thurston declares that it is easy to recognize the model as the same woman who appears in others of Botticelli's paintings and that it is also evident that this portrait has been done from the life. The long and short of this adventure is that Thurston falls in love with the painting as nearly as a man may fall in love with what is not flesh and blood. As he is again visiting the old man's house he encounters, as he leaves, a feeble old man and a boy. Thurston calls a cab to send the old man home and gives the boy money to buy food and wine. A figure in a dark cloak appears suddenly at Thurston's side and commends this charitable act and when the woman is about to go she warns him not to buy the picture. She drops her cloak from her face and he sees that this is, indeed, Simonetta herself. She vanishes as suddenly as she came. Now begin Thurston's efforts to secure speech with the young woman, for he is sure that it is no figment of his imagination. After some bribery of the servants and some pretense of being a sort of magician, he secures an audience with Simonetta and it is a case of love at first sight with both of them. They are secretly married and Thurston hurried home to the United States to make enough money to buy back all of her father's paintings—for it has been the life-long trade of Simonetta's father to paint beautiful pictures in the style of Botticelli and other noted artists and allow collectors to persuade him to sell them. He has told nobody that they were old masters, but, having been trained in the same school and learning to paint by the same methods, his work is such that there is no doubt of the origin of the pictures in the minds off the purchasers. But when Thurston comes to buy back the pictures, nobody will give them up, for they believe in them in spite of all that Thurston may say.

Locale: Italy.

Picture High Lights: The chief interest in the story lies in the apparent coming to life of the picture. Rather lacking in action but appealing theme.

THE WRECKERS
By Francis Lynde

Character of Story: Business romance.

Theme: Railroads and politics.

Characters: Graham Norcross; Sheila Macrae, Maisie Ann Macrae; Jimmy, Norcross' stenographer; Major Basil Kendrick; Chadwick, a financier; Brenridge Dunton; Howard Collingwood; Rufus Hatch; Van Britt, superintendent; Henckel and Clanahan, henchmen of Hatch; labor leaders, railway workers, politicians, etc.

The Plot: Graham Norcross, who has just completed the construction of another railway line, is persuaded by his friend, Chadwick, a heavy stockholder in the company, to take charge of the Pioneer Short Line, a railway which has been milked by Wall Street interests and which has become thoroughly involved in local politics so that it has the public reputation of being controlled by a number of local grafting financiers who operate under the general title of the Red Tower Company. Norcross is given general charge of the line and proceeds at once to clean out the incompetent men who have been given jobs because they are relatives of some of the officials. He announces that the policy of the road will be to attend strictly to railway business, to stay out of politics and to give everyone a square deal. In this program he is opposed, not only by Hatch and other leaders of the local grafters, but also by the president of the road. Norcross is determined to see the fight through and is aided by the advice and inspiration of Sheila Macrae whom he supposes to be a widow, but who is, as he afterwards learns, the wife of Collingwood, a drunken profligate, nephew of the president of the road. A lively fight springs up between Norcross and his organization and the local grafters, who stop at nothing to gain their ends, resorting even to kidnapping and train wrecking. Collingwood is sent West by his uncle to supply funds to the grafters who use this money in apparently buying up votes for the railway company, thus making it appear that Norcross is not telling the truth when he says that the railway is no longer playing politics. Hatch threatens Collingwood with exposure if he does not obey him implicitly and this arouses the resentment of Collingwood. After many exciting events and some narrow escapes, Norcross finds himself in a difficult position because the co-operative shipping companies which he formed to help beat the Red Tower combination, sell out to the enemy and the stock of the railway company is forced up to a point where there is no hope of buying it in for the benefit of the public. At this time, however, a cut in wages is announced by the concerns controlled by the Red Tower Company and Van Britt engineers a sympathetic strike on the railway which forces the stock down to a point where Chadwick buys in the control. Collingwood, maddened with drink, charters a light engine to pursue Hatch and his party on a special car and runs his engine into their train, killing Hatch and himself in the smash-up. This leaves Sheila free to marry Norcross and all ends well.

Locale: A city in the intermountain section of the West.

Picture High Lights: Many good situations. Love interest could be stressed in picture more than it is in the book.

OUT in the big spaces of the West where the mountains and the sky leave an impress on a man's soul, William S. Hart has been living all his life—and thinking.

Thinking of a story of the West that would be as big as the country itself. A story that he would do some day when he had the time and money.

That story is "The Toll Gate." It's Hart's own story, the story he has been thinking about and planning and dreaming all these years.

And it's the biggest and finest picture he has ever made.

THE one thing that could make "The Sea Wolf" more popular than ever to the millions of lovers of this greatest romance of the sea was to put it into pictures.

And that's what's been done! Not merely "put into pictures" but, at enormous expense, and with a grandeur equalled only by the mighty sea itself, made into an epic of the screen, a picture that shows the art of photoplay story telling in its very greatest perfection.

A de-luxe production whose very name means crowded houses, long runs and enthusiastic patrons.

Wonderful Story Excellent Stellar Performance and Extravagant Production

Louise Glaum in
"SEX"
J. Parker Read, Jr.—Hodkinson

DIRECTOR — Fred Niblo
AUTHOR — C. Gardner Sullivan
SCENARIO BY — C. Gardner Sullivan
CAMERAMAN — Charles J. Stumar
AS A WHOLE — Very lavish and rich production containing a lot of dramatic and moral force
STORY — Very well worked out and all sequences handled with real dramatic skill.
DIRECTION — Puts the dramatic as well as the spectacular scenes over with fine effect.
PHOTOGRAPHY — Fine
LIGHTINGS — Very effective
CAMERA WORK — Various scenes show skilful camera placement
STAR — Role runs wide range and she handled all phases very impressively
SUPPORT — Shows to fine advantage
EXTERIORS — Few used
INTERIORS — Rich and appropriate
DETAIL — Shots of players lighting and smoking cigarettes too plentiful
CHARACTER OF STORY — Roof garden queen comes between husband and wife and later, married, finds herself confronted with same situation
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION — About 6,800 feet

C. Gardner Sullivan conceived and developed with his uncanny skill, a dramatic and morally forceful theme in "Sex," which also serves as a wonderful vehicle for Louise Glaum. All the dramatic sequences, and there are many, have been handled with fine effectiveness both in the writing and the production of them and the final sequences contribute a fateful touch to the story that will make it the subject of much conversation. In fact "Sex" is a picture blessed with a BIG story.

The story opens showing Adrienne, a roof garden queen, in all her artificial glory. Her philosophy is to look after herself alone. Believing bitterly in this selfish outlook she laughs at the plea of the wife of her most ardent admirer to give him up. As a result there is a divorce. Later, however, Adrienne marries Dick, a millionaire, and finds herself really in love with him. And not until her successor at the roof, Daisy, once a circus girl whom Adrienne had tutored to become a gold digger, comes between her and Dick does she realize the utter falsity and cruelty of her former act. Unable to hold Dick she takes passage for Europe, and on the steamer sees her former admirer happy in his reunion with his wife. Happiness is all about her but she has none.

The very simplicity of this story is the key note to its power. The placing of Adrienne in the same situation two times, only at opposite corners of the eternal triangle, is a very forceful stroke and one which, besides being responsible for tremendously effective drama, affords Miss Glaum splendid opportunities to display her emotional versatility.

The picture has been very lavishly produced. The roof garden scenes are startling in originality and effectiveness and the wild party in Adrienne's home is reckless in abandon. But Director Fred Niblo has shown himself a master of the dramatic sequences as well as the spectacular scenes. In fact these are handled to surer effect, for the spectacular orgy is marred several times by vulgar incident which should never been pictured. These scenes and shots of the players lighting and smoking cigarettes could well be eliminated.

Irving Cummings as Dick, Peggy Pearce as Daisy and William Conklin and Myrtle Stedman as the husband and wife lend exceedingly valuable assistance to the star.

Wouldn't Be Able to Keep 'Em Away From This With a Small-Pox Sign

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

"Sex" is a wonderful audience picture. The title, star, story and production unite in making it the wonder it is in this respect. And as far as advertising value goes you wouldn't be able to keep the crowds away from this if you displayed a small-pox sign over your door. Naturally that title is going to draw them in and a few catch-lines concerning the story and the star will serve to make it even more alluring. And word-of-mouth advertising will do the rest.

People surely like this sort of a story dealing with the Broadway underworld. Tell them about it by using such reading notices as these in your copy. "Adrienne, the toast of Broadway, laughed and profaned the bonds of matrimony but then love came to her and her selfish philosophy boomeranged on her with terrible consequences." "The sanctity of marriage meant nothing to this selfish queen of the roof gardens but the day came when she was to pay!"

Phillip Overman ..... William Conklin
David Wallace ..... Irving Cummings

Directed by Fred Niblo. Story by C. Gardner Sullivan.

Anyway, the picture has a nice, frank title. An epigrammist, speaking of the current trend in art, remarked that it is "sex o'clock." And because the sex interest is absolutely the sole interest in C. Gardner Sullivan's story, it is kind of him to come out and brand it so openly.

There is nothing especially shocking or daring about the plot. Louise Glaum plays what we would term a vampire role if Lovella Parsons hadn't told us that Miss Glaum doesn't want to be called a vamp. She has the part of a siren who doesn't see anything unethical about breaking up a home. However, when she marries and has a home and husband of her own, she finds that her philosophy doesn't work. And the sting of the situation comes in the fact that the girl who does the home wrecking learned her tricks from the reformed siren.

Like most of Mr. Sullivan's stories, it is logical, dramatic and consistently interesting. The action moves leisurely, but it

Not All Is Melodramatics and Emotionalism in This Absorbing Picture, and the Star Varies Her Serious Work With Light Scenes of Gaiety and Abandonment in Which She Is Quite Fascinating—Tale of Retribution Is Powerfully Told.

That old and true adage about reaping what one sows, even the wind and the whirlwind, is the basis of the latest J. Parker Read-Louise Glaum picture which, not very happily, is entitled "Sex." A fine piece of work this feature is, from whatever angle it is viewed, and, it appropriately renamed, it should have as wide success as its predecessor, "The Lone Wolf's Daughter."

When sex is the trunk, root and branches of nine-tenths of the trees in the vast forest of motion pictures, no one photoplay has the right to use it as a title. In this instance, the picture has so many striking aspects that a name reflecting its real dramatic quality would be particularly valuable, and the soft pedal on the sex question in the advertising would not do the family trade a bit of harm. REVIEWED BY HELEN ROCKWELL.

"AND I learned about women from her"—the oftquoted line of Mr. Kipling's—might have been inspired by Louise Glaum had the famous British poet seen her in her newest photoplay "Sex." For Louise Glaum reveals a few things about the feminine mind and a little more, perhaps of the feminine figure. She does it in typical moving picture vampire fashion—obviously and seductively. It is amusing to note that C. Gardner Sullivan who is responsible for the story shows more acumen and more real intelligence in his writing of the character than the star shows in her rendering of it. Nevertheless, "Sex" is a lavish, arresting and at time startling piece of entertainment which will serve nicely in any theatre where the exhibitor desires to make his audience "sit up and take notice."

There is no lack of the demon rum in "Sex" and—there is no lack of sex. The picture lives up to its title and no one can complain of being lured in under false pretenses. It is chock full of wild scenery of revelry, chorus girl laxities, merry intoxicants, divorces and short skirts. Husbands openly set up chorus girl establishments and tell their wives to go hang. Wives sit at home and brood while the darlings of the Frolic give midnight suppers and dance on the tables. One particularly wild party in the first reel is truly enlightening and deliciously full of thrills.

A good story with an original twist accompanies the revelry. And the logic of it is so sound, and the moral so sure that the end justifies the means. But just the same the realism could be tempered to some degree and give quite as much satisfaction in a more genteel fashion. The settings are lavish and in harmony with the general theme of the picture, and it is evident that expense meant not a thing

J. Parker Read, Jr., Seven-Reel Production for Hodkinson Features Louise Glaum in Unsavory Story.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

IT is difficult to believe that a screen writer of such fine repute as C. Gardner Sullivan could turn out as tawdry a story as that on which the J. Parker Read, Jr., production "Sex" is based. It is not only tawdry, but immoral, as presented in its seven-reel visualization, which is being released through the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation. Louise Glaum, the featured member of the cast, works overtime in trying to put across the salacious character of Adrienne Renault, but compels admiration in the contrast which she draws between the dancer's personality governed by the loose instincts of her earlier life, and the more demure requirements of decent wifehood.

It is reasonable to believe that in making the picture the director, overly anxious to create an impression, has trusted too much to the spectacular possibilities of the story; for, what might be considered the biggest blot on the picture, occurs when at least a quarter of the first reel of the picture is consumed with the staging of a midnight orgie.

It was a mistake to cast Miss Glaum as a dancer—her attempts to make good in an art at which she is evidently a novice, are a detriment to her otherwise clever performance. Faults in the construction of

A "Special" of

Here is a story rich with the scents and odors of the Big Woods; dramatic with the crash of falling trees; filled with muscular action and daredeviltry.

"King Spruce" for ten years has been one of the foremost novels of the great outdoors. All the big motion picture producers have bid for it.

It contains a sweet, clean love story. It shows the sweep of a great forest fire. It contains hard fighting and breathless adventure. It is enacted by a cast of fine players who feel the story they are acting.

Immense Power

When this production came to us for first examination we said: "This is the kind of independent production we like to take in from the outside and get behind with our organization."

We have rarely said about this, that or the other picture that it is "the biggest production of the season." But we do say about "King Spruce" that we like it a great deal; that you, the exhibitor, will like it and that your public will like it.

And we also say that we wish we could, in the course of the year, find eight to twelve other pictures of equal power, appeal and quality.

TRADE REVIEW says: "King Spruce" has plenty of plot and rapid action; it gives the spectator a real thrill quite often.

THE WORLD says: A straight melodrama that is good entertainment. Fine in detail and picturesque in setting.

THE NEWS says: We are quite genially disposed to this virile and pleasing picture.

"King Spruce" is pre-released in the large cities April 18. Prints are ready for screening in all of our branches.

Slam-Bang Jim

Adapted from "SNAP JUDGMENT"

The STORY

"Slam-Bang Jim" is an adaptation of "Snap Judgment" one of the snappiest, peppiest, fastest comedy-dramas ever penned. It is crammed full of action—thrills—comedy—romance. It is made up of 100% of what the speaking stage producer terms "Sure-Fire stuff".

The STAR

is William Russell—sturdy, handsome, typical red-blooded American hero—the featured player in such sensational successes as "Six Feet Four" and "The Valley of Tomorrow". In "Slam-Bang Jim" he has unlimited opportunities.

The DIRECTION

is above criticism. Some of the scenes are laid in the East—a lot more of them in the West. In both locations some wonderful "shots" were obtained, and the splendidly balanced cast of players register the action in a manner that thoroughly satisfies.

Excerpts From Article in New York Times, March 28th

"'EDGAR AND THE TEACHER'S PET', the first of the screen comedies written by Booth Tarkington for the Goldwyn Company, and shown at the Capitol Theatre last week, may be counted a promise fulfilled.

First of all, it is excellently acted. No better person than young Johnny Jones, it seems, could have been found for the part of Edgar, and the others in the cast, children and adults, are fit company for him. The scenes, as a whole, are well-made moving pictures, not too simple, nor yet involved with extraneous details. E. Mason Hopper, who directed the production, apparently was a fortunate selection.

This first chapter, more than fulfilling the promise made for it, is a promise of delightful chapters to come."

WHEN DOES MISSOURI BELIEVE?

When it sees it.

When Does IT See "IT"?

Not when it is shown in the flowery language of the press agent, nor in the wiles or smiles of the publicity man.

The film man who is always hard-headed when it comes to cash, believes only facts, FACTS, FACTS, and nothing but FACTS.

Now, gentlemen of the film trade, please go over the following facts carefully, cautiously, with all the skepticism and cynicism, if you please, of a real film man, but thoroughly and to the end.

We have a picture. It is called " A MAN THERE WAS."

It's author is HENRIK IBSEN.

Our star is the great American artist, VICTOR SEASTROM.

This picture of ours was shown before representatives of the trade press of America, and to some representatives of the European press, and here is their verdict:

L. R. Harrison in the MOVING PICTURE WORLD

The performance of Victor Seastrom as an actor deserves abundant praise, but his handling of the subject matter as director awakens enthusiasm. There is enough of it to show vivid flashes of potential genius. His handling of the spirited and realistic scenes of storm at sea is almost a revelation. "A Man There Was" is a picture of high intensity and tender pathos, a drama of the soul.

John Morrell in the NEW YORK REVIEW

In looking at "A Man There Was" we cannot think of an American director who could have brought out its psychology or its realistic scope any better—perhaps not so well.

The picture keeps the spectator completely fascinated. In point of picturesqueness, story quality, interpretation and direction, it is an exceptional offering.

The star is Victor Seastrom, who is also the director. Fine as his performance is, his direction is better. The angles he has caught on the wreck are almost like animated conceptions of marine paintings.

As an actor he resembles William Farnum in countenance, but his performance is more finished. It is said that Mr. Seastrom is an American who is recognized in Europe as one of the foremost artists of the cinema. He should come to his native land and teach some of his rivals how to GET INTO CHARACTER.

Lawrence Reid in the MOTION PICTURE NEWS

In this picturization of "A Man There Was" there is revealed one of the treats of the season. As intelligent and carefully wrought as is the performance of Victor Seastrom, his direction is even better. His marine views resemble animated masterpieces. His entire work is highly realistic. Presenting, as he does, a powerful theme logically worked out and directed with infinite care and splendidly acted, "A Man There Was" may be called a real achievement.

Helen Rockwell in the EXHIBITOR'S TRADE REVIEW

"A Man There Was" is presented with such simplicity and realism that its effect is twice as forceful as if moulded of the conventional melodramatic metal. The picture has been beautifully produced with exquisite views of the ocean in its various moods. The camerawork is excellent and the picture worth viewing if only for the marvelous glimpses of the sea, which are shown.

WID'S

Direction—has handled the sea scenes wonderfully well and registered the drama effectively. Photography—generally very fine. The star renders a powerful characterization.

The drama unfolded is one of strict elementals. All the sequences are handled very dramatically. Viken's attempt to save his boat is pictured with a real thrill. Again, when Viken puts out to the rescue of the yacht which proves to be owned by his enemy the drama is swift and strong. Certainly no sequence of sea scenes produced in this country has ever equaled in sheer natural force the sequence that leads to the climax of "A Man There Was." The star, Victor Seastrom, is a splendid character actor and plays the role of Viken with feeling. His physique is admirable and his ability at makeup quite superior.

NEW YORK DRAMATIC MIRROR

Victor Seastrom, an American artist hardly known in the United States, acclaimed in Europe as the "Prince of the Screen," appears in Henrik Ibsen's masterpiece, "A MAN THERE WAS." The story, symbolizing the life of a red blooded man in the clash of real human passions, is exceedingly dramatic in every respect.

AND THIS FROM LONDON ABOUT OUR PICTURE:

THE CINEMATOGRAPH

With magnificent photography, intense acting, and a story which grips the spectator, "A MAN THERE WAS" is one of the most attractive productions we have seen for a long while. Seldom has such a breezy, natural, human story been seen on the screen. It is a sea story that appears to convey the spray of the ocean in every scene, and being a clean, wholesome, well-told and intelligent narrative, it cannot fail to prove of inestimable value to the exhibitor.

THE BIOSCOPE

People who have grown weary of "the eternal triangle" of fickle wives and telephone intrigues, will welcome this grim epic of the sea where liliputian emotions are substituted for by grand tragedy where the fundamental passions by which all humanity is swayed sound in a deep, deep vibration. Ibsen is the author of "A MAN THERE WAS" and it ranks with the works when the great master became poet and not cynic. The photography is excellent.

THE CINEMA

Whether Ibsen be the greatest of all times, or merely a sporadic flower of genius, any work to which his name is attached will always be sure of a full measure of respectful attention. There is that elusive something about it all which will not be denied. The play is most admirably acted; the action becomes tenser and tenser as the play proceeds and some of the scenes on the sea are uncannily realistic. The photography is exceptionally good.

W. Stephen Bush in THE BILLBOARD

This is a picture of rare merit, approaching our best in the technique of its photography, and equally our best in direction. In the subtlety of its art and its wonderfully calculated appeal to our pity, it comes close to surpassing our best average.

Victor Seastrom in the leading role dominates the situation. Without putting too great a strain on the press agent's popular group of adjectives, one cannot do justice to his great art, to his extraordinary powers of portrayal, to the subtlety of his characterization.

How many pictures have been offered to the trade with such a send-off by men, whom you, gentlemen, have conceded to be the leaders and authorities in your trade, and by whose judgment, you, as well as the public, have learned so often to abide?

Jottings

By the Editor

Having a chatty little column dropped in this half-way position—almost advertising and nearly editorial—we have one advantage:

There can be no serious objection if our typewriter wanders into a discussion of that more or less sordid subject—advertising.

And on this occasion we are just forced to "touch and apertain" advertising. For it seemed to us that the one topic of Film Row conversation during the past week was an advertisement—last week's bow of Associated Exhibitors.

Seldom have we heard a film trade advertisement praised so generally and from all angles—printing art, engraving art, beauty and effectiveness.

We have heard many colored inserts praised because of their lavish splendor—but then some carping critic has always arisen to ask, "But will it sell anything?"

That's the fire extinguisher—from that point on everyone engaged in the particular discussion starts to pick flaws in the insert and when the analysis is concluded you are pretty well convinced that it wasn't as good as you originally thought, after all.

But Associated met all points of the argument. The beauty and costliness of last week's insert did its share to sell the quality at which Associated is aiming; the dignity and restrained sound logic of its text sold.

So there you are.

While on the subject of inserts, and the fact that Associated hit the bell on its first shot let's take a little of the room left in this box to mention the name of the team that surely ranks near the top for consistent "bell-ringing."

Nat Rothstein and Mon Randall are the boys. And we'll say—in the line that is left us—they never fail to "hit that bull's-eye."

BOX OFFICE RECEIPTS AND POSTERS

A MOTION picture poster should sell seats to the maximum number. Everybody knows that. But not many people know how to impart that quality to a poster. Of those who do, practically all are in the RITCHEY organization. They are poster experts who have the unusual ability to give "poster expression" to their ideas, and, under a masterful direction, they do it in an attractive, a persuasive, and an absolutely convincing way. The RITCHEY poster always has a distinctive charm and it always shows an interestingly individual character. It invariably voices a message to potential motion picture audiences—a message that gets over because its presentation is suave and sure.

The RITCHEY poster is a product of intense conviction. It is positive and powerful, and because of these things it never fails to get the maximum of box-office results.

It is as a sign post directing the passing public toward the auditorium. It is the most profitable investment that a distributor can make. For the exhibitor it stands literally as an emblem for box-office prosperity!

VOL. XXI APRIL 10, 1920 No. XVI

The Problem of 1920

IT seems necessary again to call attention to these salient facts:

That the motion picture is and must remain a low-priced amusement;

That the small town theatre is a totally different proposition from the city theatre with its very large potential audience. That you can tax a small town theatre just so far with high rentals—just so far as you compel this theatre in turn to overtax its limited clientele. Then you invite the sheriff.

That the small town theatre still represents 80 per cent of the picture theatres of the country; that, to use a stale but true phrase, it still does and always will constitute the backbone of this particular amusement field; and that if you break these theatres you will break the backbone of the industry itself.

All this, in view of the fact that we are now at the peak—or have we passed it?—of a considerable inflation in rental prices.

The business has been prosperous. Everything has favored theatre attendance;—for that matter, we believe attendance will increase still further. Money has been easy. Therefore, we have had inflation—and inflation has been most vividly expressed in rental prices. They have soared.

It's time now to take a good dose of Spring antifebrile medicine—a strong cupful of common sense and circumspection. The whole industrial body needs it.

LOOKING back to last Fall we would say that the present season has been more strikingly dominated by high prices than by good pictures. In too many instances the picture did not meet the claims made for it or for its star nor by any possible effort at exploitation could the box-office return the rental price asked.

This is inflation.

Looking forward to the approaching season we believe that this situation will be considerably changed.

As for pictures we believe they will be better—and we say this with sincerity and after a first hand knowledge of the production situation. They will be much better because they will be far fewer per production unit and because they will come from many more units and from unhampered individual effort and from more highly trained producing organizations.

As for prices—they must be more equable. They will be more equable—because there is such a large insistent, broadly economic demand that they be made more equable.

This problem of price adjustment will be the big problem of 1920.

The leading distributors; to take their own word for it—are keenly at work upon the problem—we know they must be for we know they must realize that their success will be largely dependent upon its correct solution.

It is our firm belief that some system of percentage satisfactory both to producer and exhibitor will be arrived at.

We have been warned by exhibitor friends to keep off the subject of percentage. This we cannot do so long as we believe in it.

We would like to state, however, and we trust for the last time, that we do not subscribe and never have subscribed to any present system of percentage. We do not subscribe to "forced" percentage nor to any forced rental system.

IF it will make our position more clear, we will eliminate the word percentage and say—that we believe in a division of the box-office earnings of the picture—one fair to each factor concerned—and this after there has been a cooperative advertising effort on the part of the producer and exhibitor to put the picture over for all that it is worth.

We believe in such a system because it will eliminate "bunk" and overselling; because it is utterly impossible to gauge an individual picture's value in advance of its showing; because we need a system which will encourage good pictures and penalize poor ones—and because, above all, it will put the producer and exhibitor upon a sound and above all a cooperative basis.

We believe that such a system is in the cards—and that it will come forth this year.

It will be based, first, upon good pictures.

No plan, however good, can succeed of itself. Building a big plan upon inferior pictures is like building a skyscraper upon sands.

It will be based upon exploitation.

It will be based upon the same and sincere belief that the exhibitors' and producers' prosperity are dependent one upon the other.

Foreign Market in Critical State

Blumenthal Tells of German Conditions

BEN BLUMENTHAL, president of the Export and Import Film Company, returned recently from a business trip abroad, during which he secured first hand knowledge of the film conditions prevailing in England, France, Germany and other continental countries of Europe. At an interview given to a representative of the "News" this week, Mr. Blumenthal narrated some of the personal observations that he had made and revealed some interesting facts concerning the picture industry in the various countries he had visited. He deplored the present lowered rate of exchange, which he considers to be one of the greatest impediments to mutually favorable interchanges between the American and foreign film fields.

"Until the exchange in European countries is stabilized," said Mr. Blumenthal, "American manufacturers cannot hope for a ready market for their productions. As a result of the unwise methods of some foreign concerns who have bought our film products at the American rate and then foolishly sold them to their patrons at the lowered rates prevailing in their respective countries, we have been obliged to shoulder not a little of the losses resultant from this disparity."

Speaking of production activities abroad, Mr. Blumenthal said that prospects pointed to an expansion along this line. "England, Germany, Italy, the Scandinavian countries and even Holland are making progress as production centers. France, however, at the present time is not producing to any extent." Germany as a producing ground was discussed with considerable detail by Mr. Blumenthal. "The bigger productions made in Germany," said Mr. Blumenthal, "compare favorably with our big pictures in the United States. The German people are attending motion picture theatres in great numbers, and there is a heavy demand for pictures as a source of popular amusement. This is probably an evidence of a reaction following the deprivations of war. German producers are expending large sums for the manufacture of picture products, considerably more money than formerly.

"The largest German production company is the Universum, or the 'U. F. A.' as it is generally called. This company has a film city outside of Berlin where it manufactures its products. The high-water-mark of the current production in Germany is probably the 'Madame du Barry' picture, starring Pola Negri, an actress of Polish birth, who resembles our Nazimova closely. She is accredited to be the best known picture actress in Germany today.

"Prohibition on the importation of films into Germany is still in force. The present law continues in effect until May, and it is likely that at that time it will be extended even further. I undertook to approach the larger film industries in Germany with a view of having them start governmental action for the repeal of this law. While the U. F. A., the theatrical interests and the larger exchange-concerns endorsed my efforts, the smaller producers refused their co-operation, their argument being that the influx of foreign films into Germany would throw a great many at present employed out of work. I suggested various compensating measures, for example, the printing in German laboratories of American film sent over, and so on. The recent political disturbances will probably have the effect of delaying any modification of the present ban on foreign film importations, for the reason that the prevailing feeling is that any change would work hardship on certain laboring classes. This is more than enough to cause the present government to avoid any tampering with this question.

"I am forced to disagree with the recent opinion expressed by Mr. Howells. I am against any effort to discourage the importation of foreign films into this country. That is exactly the attitude we decry in film centers abroad—the wish to keep the American picture out of the foreign market; and that tendency abroad is a strong one, I know from my own experiences. Now, if we adopt a non-importation policy on our side of the water, we will be giving the people abroad just the excuse to retaliate by putting the same restrictions on the advent of American pictures into their markets. What the American public wants in its picture theatres at the present time is variety. The circulation of the best pictures the foreign market has to offer us is one of the most effective ways to meet this demand of our own audiences. Moreover, the United States controls 90% of the world's film industry at the present time; America has no reason to fear competition with any other forces."

German Films Flooding Market in Holland

Ben Blumenthal Finds Germany Looming Up as Future Competitor—Making Big Pictures with International Value

PERHAPS the most prominent feature to an observer of the film market in Holland is the flood of German films to be found in that market. The majority of buying companies and the majority of theatres in Holland are controlled directly or indirectly by German interests. Practically all the film companies there have tried to profit by the low price of the German films, with the result that many of them are so tied up with money invested in these productions that they are not in a position to buy American films. Most of the German productions are of a very ordinary standard, the plots being based in a great many cases on life of a more or less low moral standard.

The low class of films shown has led in Holland to a proposed law, copied somewhat from the Swiss law, prohibiting all children under a certain age from entering picture theatres unless the films shown therein have passed a very strict censorship.

Holland seems to be going through the same process of development in the film industry that America went through some years ago. Holland being a very religious country, and many of the ministers and prominent men being opposed to films for the reason that they say they have a degrading influence on young children, this attitude has been stimulated much by the class of films shown during and since the war, and imported from Germany. The purchase of this class of films was executed on the ground that the public wants it. Of course some of the German productions are more pretentious; these are the exceptions. But the chief excuse for buying the German productions is their cheapness.

Recently Germany has placed 100 per cent export license on certain productions, including films, and this has had a tendency to curb the wild purchase.

Practically all the machines used in Holland are of the German type and the theatres run only one machine at a time. However, it was noticed that in one theatre in Amsterdam two Powers machines of the latest type had been installed, and these machines were being used so as to leave no stop between the reels. The rarity of the American machines there was forcibly shown by the fact that the fire authorities in Amsterdam were very timid about allowing these machines to be used for the reason that it was felt that they were dangerous. However after many unsuccessful attempts to set the film on fire while in the machine, and the explanation of visiting Americans that these machines were being used extensively all over the world, this theatre was permitted to use these two machines.

Another feature that attracted attention in Holland was the fact that no fire extinguishers were permitted in the projection "cabin," the theory being that in case of fire the operator should not try to put out the blaze himself, but should leave the projection room immediately, and it was stated that if the operator were given a fire extinguisher his first thought would be to put the fire out instead of saving himself.

Experts Review Continental Field

Julian Thomas, of Howell's Paris Organization, Gives Impressions from Holland, France, Italy and Belgium

Business conditions appear to be fairly good. The prices charged at picture shows are as high as in Paris, and a good deal of money is now being placed in new theatres and new companies. It is certain, however, that the cheap German film has made the sale of higher priced, higher quality American films much more difficult, for in spite of the fact that the exchange situation in Holland is nearly normal, when compared with other countries of continental Europe, film men get the habit of saying "a film is a film." When the prices are broached they immediately say how much they have paid for films by the meter purchased from Germany and expect the American to sell at the same price.

An international cinematograph exposition is being planned for next fall at Amsterdam, at which all countries, including the United States, England and Germany will be represented. This exposition is being directed at the present time by Mr. J. O. H. Gildemeyer, a Dutch cinematographist, director, writer and producer. Mr. Gildemeyer is now in France in the interests of the exposition.

Financial Interests Investing in Belgium

BELGIUM is in a much better condition than Holland in spite of the adverse exchange. There is a pronounced reluctance on the part of our friends the Belgians to invest in German films, although they are inclined to use the cheapness of the German films as a threat to the Americans to induce them to reduce the price of American films in order to overcome the exchange. However, the Belgian film buyers are kindly disposed towards the American films, admitting that they are without doubt the best in the world today, and admitting also that the Americans pay more for their productions and hence are entitled to more for the films in Belgium. A number of new companies are being formed and money is being invested in the film business in Belgium by financial men who never before have looked to this lucrative branch of investment. They have been particularly directed to the film business by the fact that banks and large business institutions in America, foreign to the film business, are now investing heavily in theatres, producing and distributing companies. Here also German machines seem to predominate, although French and a few American machines have been introduced during the war. The theatre owners in Belgium are complaining bitterly against increased taxation.

In Italy the importation of American films has been brought practically to a standstill owing to the exchange situation. Practically no foreign films can be seen in the theatres there.

Percentage Booking a Live French Topic

IN France the question of percentage is being discussed broadcast. This question was brought to a head on March 10th, when it was voted on by the French Syndicate of Cinematograph Managers, the question being put "Are you for or against percentage?" Hundreds of managers were present and the percentage system (the word "percentage" being considered very barbarous) was discussed at length. The issue is between the film renters who demand percentage and the theatre owners and managers who object to percentage. The interest of the managers certainly is to present to his clientele films which combine the double advantage of high quality and low price. The producers and renters seek films of quality which they seek to sell at as high a price as possible. The film renters who purchase in many cases the films themselves find great difficulty in renting at a sufficient price to pay them for their investment. It must be understood, however, that the general theory of business in France is that in order to make a successful affair, one must make at least 100 per cent within a very short period of time. Anything less than 100 per cent profit would be considered a rather poor business transaction. Programmes are rented in France at a ridiculously low price. At any rate this matter was decided by the Syndicate of French Cinematographists against percentage, a resolution having been passed almost unanimously rejecting the proposition. The meeting however was very animated. This French syndicate is composed of the following organizations:

Cinema Federation of the Southwest of France, Managers' Association of Marseilles theatres, Association of Cinemas and Exhibitors of Alsace-Lorraine, Theatre Managers' Association of Lyon, Syndicate of the Côté d' Azur, Syndicate of the North and of Pas-de-Calais, Syndicate of the Western and Central Sections of France.

Demonstrations have been tendered recently to Louis Lumiere by the French Academy of Sciences in honor of the work that Mr. Lumiere has done for photography and the discoveries that he has made. Among the demonstrations was one on the occasion of the discovery twenty-five years ago of cinematography, by the National Society of Popular Conferences. This manifestation was presided over by M. J. Braton, Minister of Hygiene and President of the General League of the French Cinemas. Part of an interesting programme was a discourse by M. Walton on the history of the Cinema which was illustrated by many ancient and modern pictures.

Patriotic Propaganda Speeds up French

FRANCE is endeavoring to bring its picture industry to the prewar standard. A number of studios are being constructed and French productions are being encouraged in every way. Every production that can possibly be given the name of French is being urged on the public for patriotic reasons. Through a desire to encourage French productions a tendency has been noticed to criticize all foreign films, and as the American film is by far in the lead in the foreign production the American film is getting more than its share of this misdirected antagonism. However, it has been pointed out to our French friends that a good film is an international institution, and that if the French produce films adapted to the American market no one will be more happy to encourage their production by the purchase of the same than their American friends, and that it should be kept in mind that if their films be highclass and adapted to the American market, they will probably look for a large part of the financial support for their films to the Americans, but if this tendency to knock American films is carried on it might create an unfavorable impression in the American market, and so act as a boomerang on the very persons who use it.

It is recognized that one of the causes of inferiority in French films is the poor equipment of studios and the scarcity of apparatus which confronts the producers.

Another step which is being taken to protect the French industry is propaganda, which is evidenced by the following notice which has been published by the French in Belgium: "Belgian business men and merchants do not favor the exorbitant exchange rate of the florin, dollar, and pound sterling. Do not forget that the sympathy of France for Belgium is disinterested."

One thing which has brought forcibly to the attention of practically every American exporter shipping negatives to France is the lack of the most modern facilities for making prints. If some reliable American company were to establish a thoroughly modern film manufacturing and printing house in Paris, or any other large center in Europe, there is no doubt that it would be a great benefit to that house and also to the American exporter, for it is something for which there is a big demand here at the present time.

Skouras Brothers Buy St. Louis Theatres

After several weeks of negotiations, a deal for the purchase of the New Grand Central theatre, the Central theatre and the Grand Central Film Company of St. Louis, the local First National exchange, has been consummated by the Skouras Brothers, of that city. The properties were purchased from the Grand Central Theatre Company and the Grand Central Film Company corporations. The principal owners were William Sievers, Edmund Koeln, Theodore Rassieur and Harry Troll. The consideration was $350,000.

Exhibitors in Canada Form New Company

The exhibitors of Montreal have recently taken out a Dominion charter and have organized a Limited stock company under the name of the Amalgamated Exhibitors Circuit, Ltd. They are now offering shares in the new company to the exhibitors of Canada, the par value of the shares being $100. It is the intention of the company to operate a chain of film exchanges throughout the dominion with competent exchange managers at the head of each.

Three Benefits Arranged for Y. W. C. A. Drive

Three benefits have been arranged in New York by the committee representing the motion picture industry in the effort being made to reach the $15,000 quota allotted in the Y. W. C. A. drive. They will be on Thursday morning at the Strand theatre, at the Capitol theatre on Friday afternoon, and on Saturday morning at the Rivoli theatre.

Rumored Pantages Plans New Orleans Theatre

ALEXANDER PANTAGES, western theatre owner, signed a 75-year lease for a theatre site in New Orleans last week on which he is to erect an enormous show house, hotel and stores, according to pretty well confirmed rumors last week.

If the project is carried through as reported, the Pantages interests will come to New Orleans and erect a magnificient theatre building on the site now occupied by fruit stands, chop suey joints, and other small and unsightly buildings on Canal Street between Rampart and Basin streets, about 400 feet from the Elks' Home, 150 feet from the Southern Railway station and one block from the new Orpheum theatre and the Grunewald hotel.

The plan is said to embrace an immense theatre built behind and over a row of modern stores, which will front on Canal street.

Earl Edmondson, personal representative of Mr. Pantages, has been in New Orleans several weeks looking over sites and he is the person said to have recommended to Pantages the leasing of the site.

M.P.P.A. Amalgamates With Actors Equity

Following a series of conferences between the Arbitration Committee of the Motion Picture Players Association and the Conference Committee of the Actors Equity Association, the amalgamation of the M. P. P. A. with the A. E. A. was proposed and unanimously accepted, it is stated, at a meeting of the M. P. P. A. on March 26th at Geneva Hall, New York. Among the speakers were Frank Gilmore, John Emerson, Paul Dalzell and Col. Booth. President Jack Frazier of the M. P. P. A. acted as chairman.

New Executive Elected by Capitol Film Co.

At a special meeting of the Capitol Film Company, held on March 29th, Hugh Woody, a prominent Indiana banker, was elected in the place of S. L. Barnhard, who has also retired from the directorate of the organization. Mr. Barnhard's vacancy in the board of directors has been filled by B. Herbert Milligan, treasurer of the Capitol Film, who also assumes the general-managership, relinquished by C. Eddy Eckels.

According to Treasurer Milligan, the directors have voted the new management $150,000, which is to be immediately available for the purpose of carrying out the Capitol's new policies and exploiting special features that were recently determined upon.

Company Increases Capital to $5,000,000

The Catherine Curtis Corporation, which was organized last June, recently increased its capital to five million dollars. Miss Catherine Curtis is the president of the growing organization, which is backed by conservative Wall street capitalists. It is expected that at the director's meeting to be held this month, some announcements will be made in regard to the company's plans. Negotiations are under way for New York executive offices.

Federated Film Exchange Formed at Chicago Meeting

Independent Producers on Invitation Confer With New Distributing Body

THE Federated Film Exchanges of America, Inc., was originated last week in Chicago at a meeting of independent exchange men, called by Joseph L. Friedman, president of the Celebrated Players Film Corporation, and within the next thirty days it is expected that the powerful nation-wide organization will be in full operation.

A number of financially sound, progressive and successful state right men from every section of the United States and Canada convened at the Congress Hotel, on March 24, in response to Mr. Friedman's invitation, and the new organization, which it is predicted will mark an important milestone in the progress of state rights men and independent producers, was evolved after three days hard work.

Before the adjournment, on the third day of the meeting, the organization of the new distributing body was perfected, a constitution and set of by-laws drawn up and accepted, a charter applied for under the laws of the state of Delaware and the Federated Film Exchanges of America, Inc., was capitalized at $100,000, completely paid in by the men on the floor of the convention hall. It is explained by the exchange men, who are franchise holders, that the subscription of capital was more for the purpose of proving the stability and good faith of the subscribers than for the purpose of raising funds upon which to operate as, it is understood, the operating finances already have been arranged for.

In anticipation of the formation of a financially sound and permanent organization of exchangemen at the conention, independent producers also met in Chicago and on the last day of the convention, submitted the results of the producers' deliberations to the exchangemen's organization with a program of pictures which they would be prepared to furnish.

The Federated Exchanges appointed a committee consisting of Messrs. H. E. Whyte, New York; B. Amsterdam, Philadelphia; H. J. Charnas, Cleveland, and Sam Grand, of Boston, to meet the producers in New York on April 2 and attempt to arrive at a definite arrangement with them.

The producers announced that they intend to perfect the recently formed organization, known as the International Film Board of Trade, the sole purpose of which shall be to secure for the exchangemen such negatives as they may desire upon a basis which will let exchangemen make a reasonable profit.

It was pointed out that there was nothing in the plan which would force the exchangemen to sign up for three years for any product that would not prove profitable, for, by a vote of the exchanges purchasing committee, the Board of Trade will be obliged to cancel all our contracts providing for the distribution of subjects featuring a star who is not making money for the exchanges.

The attention of the exchangemen was further called to the fact that the big program organizations had been made profitable through regular and consistent advertising and exploitation campaigns and under the plan of the Film Board of Trade, a stipulated amount has been set for advertising and exploiting every star and every picture released through that body, and that the advertising and exploitation campaign calls for continuous advertising of the product of the producer for fifty-two consecutive weeks in each year during the three years provided for in the proposed contract, thereby preventing the dropping of advertising immediately after a territory has been sold, as too often has been the case in the past.

The following took part in the conference of producers preliminary to the meeting with the exchangemen: Jack Kohn, C. W. Harris, representing Outing-Chester; W. A. Schallenberger, Arrow Film Corporation; Joe Brandt, National Film Corporation; C. Eddy Eckels, Locklear Productions and Neal Hart Productions; Louis Burston; Harry Sherman; M. Garston; A. E. Schweirin; Spanuth of Commonwealth; M. J. Weiss; S. L. Barnhard, Capital Film Company; R. S. Sawyer; C. A. Mead, representing C. B. Price, Inc., and Victor Kremer.

The officers elected at the exchangemen's convention were: J. L. Friedman, Celebrated Players Film Corporation, Chicago, president; J. E. Pearce, of New Orleans, vice-president; D. J. Chatkin, of Los Angeles and San Francisco, Calif., secretary, and Sam Grand, of Boston, Mass., treasurer.

Board of Directors will be as follows: J. L. Friedman, Chicago; J. E. Pearce, New Orleans; D. J. Chatkin, San Francisco, Cal.; Sam Grand, Boston, Mass.; H. L. Charnas, Cleveland, Ohio; H. E. Whyte, New York, N. Y., and B. Amsterdam, Philadelphia.

Following is a list of those who hold franchises: New York City and Northern New Jersey, Arthur B. Whyte, Empire State Film Co., New York City.; New England States, Sam Grand, Federal Feature Film Corp., Boston, Mass; Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey, B. Amsterdam, Masterpiece Film Attractions, Philadelphia, Pa.; Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia, H. Lande, Quality Film Service, Pittsburgh, Pa.; Ohio, Michigan and Kentucky, H. Charnas, Standard Film Service Co., Cleveland, Ohio.; North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama and Tennessee, R. M. Savini, R. M. Savini Films, Inc., Atlanta, Ga.; Delaware, Maryland, Virginia and District of Columbia, Abe Dresner, Exhibitors Film Exchange, Washington, D. C.; Louisiana and Mississippi, J. E. Pearce, Pearce Films, New Orleans, La.; Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas, R. D. Lewis, R. D. Lewis Film Co., Oklahoma City, Okla.; Minnesota, North and South Dakota, F. W. Thayer, Merit Film Corporation, Minneapolis, Minn.; Wisconsin, R. Wettstein, Midwest Distribution Co., Milwaukee, Wisconsin; Eastern Missouri, S. Warner, United Film Service, Kansas City, Mo.; Kansas and Western Missouri, A. Kahn, Crescent Film Service, Kansas City, Mo.; Colorado, New Mexico, Woyming, Utah and Southern Idaho, H. E. Kyler, Supreme Photoplays, Denver, Colo.; Canada, J. J. Allen, Allen Bros., Toronto, Ontario, Canada; Iowa and Nebraska, M. J. Frisch, A. H. Blank Enterprises, Des Moines, Iowa; California, Nevada and Arizona, D. J. Chatkin, Marion Hohn, San Francisco, Calif.; Indiana and Illinois, J. L. Friedman, Celebrated Players Film Corporation, Chicago, Ill.

The Federated Film Exchanges unites the buying power of the various members into one strong body and it is interesting to note that their purchases of pictures last year ran close to $5,500,000. Instead of each individual state rights man dickering separately for the product of independent producers, one hundred per cent of the territory of the United States and Canada will be bought outright. This same buying power promises to secure for the

Kansas State Exhibitors Association Convenes

THE Kansas State Exhibitors' Association during its annual convention, which opened at Wichita, Kan., on last Monday, went on record as unanimously opposed to the percentage plan, the present advance deposit system and the prevailing form of contracts. The organization also endorsed the recent Utica convention and recommended the holding of a national exhibitors' convention at an early date. It was decided to affiliate with the New York State League with a view of forming a nucleus for a national organization. R. G. Liggett of the Gene Gauntier Theatre in Kansas City was elected president. P. S. Harrison of New York City was the principal speaker, and during the course of his remarks bitterly attacked the percentage policy.

Neilan and Kaufman in Producing Alliance

Although Financially Separate, Technical and Executive Staffs Are Merged

AN important announcement in producing circles is that of a co-operative production alliance just formed between Marshall Neilan Productions and Albert A. Kaufman Productions, two of the foremost film producing organizations in the industry. Details of this alliance, which is the result of a lasting friendship and the fulfilment of the mutual desires of the two notable heads of their respective companies, have just been given out.

Mr. Kaufman recently announced the severance of his connection with Famous Players-Lasky and the formation of his own company. He has already planned the erection of his own independent studio, but in the meantime while the facilities at the Neilan plant were such that they offered the two producers an opportunity to realize the ambitions of their early picture days, the co-operative alliance was quickly agreed upon.

The Neilan-Kaufman studios now consist of two separate units, each unit comprising a light and dark stage and set of individual dressing rooms.

Although neither producer is financially interested in the other's company and while their methods of distribution have no connection, the results of the affiliation will be of material benefit to both.

The producing, technical and executive staffs have been merged into one and by carefully following a working schedule the different departments will be at the disposal of both companies, and it can be readily seen that the cost of productions will be considerably reduced.

Mr. Neilan is a member of the Associated Producers, who, when their present contracts expire, will release their productions as of one organization. His current pictures are released through the First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

Mr. Kaufman, who recently signed Allen Holubar to direct a series of special productions starring Dorothy Phillips, has not yet made known his plans for distribution, but announced that work on the first Holubar-Phillips feature will begin at the Neilan-Kaufman studio within a few days.

Five years ago Mr. Kaufman was studio manager of the Famous Players-Lasky Company and under his supervision were numbered the productions of such famous stars as Mary Pickford, Marguerite Clark, George M. Cohan, John Barrymore, Pauline Frederick and many others. At the same time Marshall Neilan was a leading man of considerable renown and most of his work was opposite the stars under Mr. Kaufman's charge. Mr. Neilan had previously shown directorial qualities and his ideas on production were very much in common with those of Mr. Kaufman, who shortly afterwards engaged him as director for Famous Players-Lasky.

An admiration for each other's ability and a strong personal friendship arose between the two young men who were later to become so prominent in the motion picture world. It was mutually agreed that should they ever branch out for themselves as independent producers a lot could be accomplished by their aligning themselves together.

Promotions came rapidly for both, Mr. Kaufman becoming general manager of the Famous Players-Lasky studio in Hollywood and later filling the same position in that company's New York studio. Mr. Neilan's worth became recognized more with each succeeding picture he directetd until his achievements made him one of the most sought after directors in the country.

Then came the war and Mr. Kaufman's two year period of war services in which he served as captain in the army overseas. Upon his discharge he was entrusted with the work of organizing and building the Famous Players-Lasky studio in England, which he accomplished in a manner which reflected more credit on himself. Mr. Kaufman then returned to this country.

In the meantime Mr. Neilan had severed his connections with Famous Players-Lasky. He organized a producing staff and made many pictures for various companies including such successes as "Daddy Long-Legs," with Mary Pickford; "The Unpardonable Sin," with Blanche Sweet, and "In Old Kentucky," with Anita Stewart. Later he formed his own independent producing company.

Daylight Saving Defeat Pleases Exhibitors

Exhibitors of Indianapolis are elated over the fact that the city council, by a vote of six to two, rejected a proposed daylight saving ordinance which, had it passed, would probably have meant a loss to the owners of motion picture houses.

Metro Head Discusses Policies and Program for Future

Emphatic Denial of Marcus Loew's Affiliation with Other Interests

IN a statement of Loew-Metro policy Richard A. Rowland, president of Metro Pictures Corporation, emphatically denies that Marcus Loew or the Loew-Metro affiliations is interested in or connected with any other producing and distributing organization.

Mr. Rowland's denial was in refutation of recent rumors, reaching exhibitors of the country and the trade in general, that Loew-Metro has entered into a combination aiming to secure a monopoly of the producing and distributing ends of the motion picture industry.

That Loew-Metro may be compelled to produce stage plays on Broadway as a step toward reducing the mounting cost of literary material for the screen; that the company will not force the percentage system of booking upon exhibitors, but will adopt it if they desire it; that the coming year will see an output of approximately fifty sumptuous Loew-Metro specials, mostly with all-star casts, and that a famous male star will soon be added to the Loew-Metro roster are some of the high lights in the Metro president's statement.

In addition, Mr. Rowland points out that production costs have risen all around to such an extent that they have become almost prohibitive. Salaries of all employes, from stars to mechanical help around the studios, the materials required in the making of screen productions and general office overhead have trebled and even quadrupled in a few months, asserts the Metro executive.

Loew-Metro will make every effort to prevent waste in any quarter and curtail expenses wherever possible, without stinting the quality of its productions, it is promised; but the Metro president makes it plain that this increasing expense may ultimately fall in some measure upon the exhibitor, who should be prepared to meet it.

"We wish to deny most emphatically," says the Rowland statement, "that Mr. Loew is interested in or has affiliated with any other producing or distributing organization, as has recently been rumored. We have heard of these rumors, reaching the trade through underground channels, and in justice to Mr. Loew I must say that they are absolutely untrue.

"Mr. Loew is not interested in any producing or distributing organization other than Loew-Metro. We reiterate what Mr. Loew made public when he acquired the controlling interest in Metro Pictures Corporation—that he did it to protect himself. The Loew theatres, embracing a chain that extends throughout the country, were in need of a constant source of supply of the highest grade pictures. Metro was and is the fountain head of that supply.

"The same protection which he secured for himself Mr. Loew is now willing to extend to others. In other words, he offers to exhibitors everywhere, and particularly the smaller exhibitors, the opportunity to bring to their theatres the big Loew-Metro specials under a protective franchise arrangement. This protective franchise would not only insure a steady supply of quality pictures that would build up the business and prestige of these houses against any opposition, but Mr. Loew would willingly arrange to extend vaudeville bookings to such theatres as wanted that form of amusement to supplement their screen entertainment.

"We have given the subject of percentage booking considerable thought. It presents a situation, however, in which we have no axe to grind—we are willing to let the cat jump either way it will. Loew-Metro will not force percentage booking upon the exhibitor. We shall, as in the past, continue to accept a flat rental for our releases wherever that method is the wish of the exhibitor himself.

"While we will not force the percentage system of payment for subjects, we will meet the exhibitor half way and adopt it with individual showmen who find that it is the more desirable of the two. It is our firm belief that this matter will best straighten itself out in time by actual operation, and it is not the desire of Loew-Metro to precipitate confusion or bring about undue haste in the adjustment of this vital matter. By co-operative experiment both producer and showman will eventually arrive at a satisfactory basis of agreement.

"The present exorbitant prices asked for stage scripts amounts to nothing short of a hold-up," the Rowland statement continues. "In the last six or seven months the valuations placed on stage plays so soon as it is discovered that picture producers are after them—have soared to almost unbelievable heights. Where we used to be able to get a screen story for from $5000 to $10,000, theatrical producers now think nothing of charging from $50,000 to $150,000, and in some cases more than these fabulous sums for the rights to a stage success.

"This condition may force us into the field as stage producers. If we should it would be on the theory that it would actually save money on the gross overhead cost of a film production of the play later. When it is considered that now a screen producer must pay on an average of $30,000 or $50,000 for a bare script, and that he could produce an original play in the theatre for about $10,000 to $15,000, stand to recover his initial outlay on the success of the play and still retain it as a screen vehicle, the reason for such a move becomes apparent.

"We will make approximately fifty major releases during the ensuing year, beginning early in the fall. In the majority the big special productions will be all-star cast pictures. We will, of course, retain our present stars; and we expect that the all-star productions will develop new screen players of outstanding merit, who, if they demonstrate their fitness and popularity, will be given early opportunity for further conquests as featured players with notable surrounding ensembles.

"Our present stars, we are proud to say, possess qualities without which no screen artist may long endure—they are able to rise superior even to the powerful stories and magnificent productions such as we have been giving them. As an illustration, one of them, Bert Lytell, has dominated such strong themes as 'The Right of Way,' from Sir Gilbert Parker's celebrated novel, and 'Lombardi, Ltd.', the Morosco stage play from the pens of Frederic and Fanny Hatton.

"Mr. Lytell's impersonations of Charley Steele in 'The Right of Way' and of Tito Lombardi, in 'Lombardi, Ltd.' stamped him as one of the most gifted figures on the screen today. He has contributed another extraordinary characterization in Paul Armstrong's great crook play, 'Alias Jimmy Valentine,' shortly to be released. Through sheer histrionic ability alone Mr. Lytell has doubled his following and earning power during the past few months and is destined to reach

He Has a Bright Future

R. H. COCHRANE, vice-president of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, has announced the appointment of a new general manager for Universal City, the Universal studios. He said:

"I have appointed a new general manager of Universal City. This is my first appointee for the big job and I am confident I have picked a good man. He is a hard worker, conscientious and knows all the ins and outs of the business because I myself brought him up in it.

"I am going to give him a corps of assistant general-managers which if laid end to end would reach from Universal City to Medicine Hat with enough left over to make up a fire department for Ishpeming. He is a bright, eager, young American, full of pep and I know he will give us the best pictures in the history of the Universal. His name? Oh yes, his first name is Carl, and his last name is Laemmle."

New York Exhibitors "Get Things Done"

Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce Reduces Liability Insurance Rate by 50%

WILLIAM BRANDT, president of the Theatre Owners' Chamber of of Commerce of New York, in the course of a recent interview, characterized the new association as "one hundred per cent. progressive," and submitted in support of his assertion the information that negotiations have just been completed whereby a blanket contract has been secured from the largest liability insurance company in the world, reducing the liability rates on members' theatres from 22 cents to 11 cents. Mr. Brandt also outlined some of the projects that the organization has under contemplation at the present time.

"I must be understood at the outset," said Mr. Brandt, "that the Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce of New York, is a body made up of 'live-wire,' progressive exhibitors. The required qualifications for membership in this organization are such that only exhibitors of the progressive calibre can become members. At the present time over 200 theatre owners, operating in Greater New York and New Jersey, have become affiliated as members with our organization.

"Though our active career began less than ten weeks ago, the organization has already achieved objectives that testify clearly to the progressive character of its members and its practical worth in 'getting things done.' The high-water mark of achievement, realized by the Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce of New York up to the present time, is the arrangement which it has just secured with the largest liability insurance company in the world by virtue of which the liability insurance rates for motion picture houses, owned by our members, have been reduced from 22 cents per seat to 11 cents.

"The steps that led up to this reduction are of interest. It was ascertained upon investigation that the old twenty-two cent rate was a relic of the early days when a motion picture house meant a store-front with little or no facilities for the protection and accommodation of the audiences. It was obvious that though the old rate persisted, improvements had been effected that made the present-day picture theatre vastly superior to the conditions that obtained in the old store-theatre upon which the rate was based. Accordingly, an accurate history was compiled with a view to showing how the motion picture theatre had been developed and improved with the passing of time. For this purpose, fifty of the representative theatres in Greater New York and New Jersey, belonging to members of our organization, were selected. It was pointed out that with their up-to-the-minute facilities for handling large crowds, their accommodations for the convenience and comfort of their patrons and the numerous devices and protective measures installed to safeguard the audiences and prevent damage to the property of the house itself, the motion picture theatre of the present time is not only vastly superior to its predecessor of the early days but is also an excellent insurance risk.

"The result of our campaign is this: The liability insurance company with which we have just concluded negotiations has agreed to a blanket contract, covering all the members of our organization, whereby the liability insurance rate for our houses has been reduced from 22 cents to 11 cents. A leaflet, explaining how to secure this reduction, has been prepared by the association and is now available to all exhibitors by application to Secretary Hy Gainsborg, care of the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce of New York, Hotel Astor, New York City.

"There are under contemplation at the present time various co-operative-purchasing measures, designed to reduce further expenses, common to picture theatre owners in the maintenance of their houses. Negotiations have been practically completed whereby our members will secure carbons at a 50 per cent. saving."

Plans are also under way, according to Mr. Brandt, for a club-house in the film district. The regular weekly meeting of the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce of New York is held every Tuesday afternoon at the Hotel Astor. At the meeting on next Tuesday, elections of the regular officers of the organization are to be held. The temporary officers at present in power are as follows: William Brandt, president; Hy Gainsborg, secretary; Samuel Bock, treasurer, and Adolph Stockhammer, sergeant-at-arms.

Recent Incorporations in State of New York

LAST week witnessed a considerable number of firms and individuals incorporating in New York State for the purpose of entering into some phase of the motion picture business. Among the number were the following: Krellberg Productions, $25,000, S. S. and M. J. Krellberg and Samuel Schwartzmann, New York; Sheridan Theatre Co., $230,000, Max Spiegel, Sol Brill, New York, and William F. Rafferty, Syracuse; Martinique Amusement Company, $500, Walter and L. C. Hast and David Urquhart, New York; Apologue Film Corporation, $30,000, Roswell S. Palmer, Melvin W. Kerr and Harry L. Adams, New York; Majestic Pictures, $5,000, J. J. Unger, J. A. Hammell and M. C. Special Showing of "The Virgin of Stamboul"

"The Virgin Of Stamboul," Universal's big production, featuring Priscilla Dean, was presented in the Cameo Room at the Morrison Hotel in Chicago last week to a large throng of exhibitors.

Luncheon was served at 11.30 P. M. sharp, the waiters being dressed in Arabic costumes, and a selected orchestra under the leadership of Paul Biese added to the pleasure of the occasion by rendering some fine music.

Manager I. L. Lesserman of the Chicago exchange, was host and was assisted in welcoming the guests by H. M. Berman, general manager of Universal Exchanges; J. H. Mayer, director of publicity; Harry Richenbacher, Harry Rice, Maurice Hellman and the members of the Chicago staff.

Corporation Increases Its Capital Stock

At a regular meeting of the board of directors of the United States Photoplay Corporation, held in the executive offices at Washington, D. C., Saturday, March 27, the capital stock of this corporation was increased from $2,000,000 to $10,000,000. Fifteen acres of land will be purchased and a studio is to be built that will cost no less than $750,000.

Film Containers Must Be Securely Fastened

A note of warning has been issued to the officials of all film companies in the form of a bulletin which has been sent out by Chairman P. H. Stilson of the Transportation Committee of the National Association, calling attention to a recent order of the president's office of the American Railway Express Company, which provides that covers of motion picture film conveyors must be sealed or otherwise securely fastened so as to prevent the covers from becoming unfastened in transit.

Chairman Stilson, in calling the attention of the officials to this order, urges that instructions be given to all employees

The Transportation Committee strongly advocates the sealing of all cases rather than merely fastening, and similar requests should be made of exhibitors to return the container properly sealed to the exchange.

Griffith Slightly Injured While Taking Picture

As the result of rather painful injuries received while taking scenes on the Connecticut River for his forthcoming production of "Way Down East," D. W. Griffith is under the care of a physician at his apartments in New York.

Mr. Griffith slipped and fell into the icy water, striking the left side of his face and receiving a number of lacerations of the right leg. It will be several days before he will be able to return to work.

"The Forbidden Woman" Wins Despite Gale

In the face of the storm raging all day in Chicago, Sunday, March 28, Clara Kimball Young in "The Forbidden Woman" opened to packed houses at the Playhouse theatre, it is stated, and broke all records of the house in point of box office receipts and paid admissions.

New Links in Richmond Chain of Theatres

Featuring the week's real estate activity in Richmond, Va., was the sale of the Bijou theatre, between Eighth and Ninth streets, on Broad, to the Van Realty Corporation, of which Jake Wells is president. The transfer of the theatre was one step in the general plans of Mr. Wells for a general rehabilitation of the Richmond theatrical field. The property was sold by M. V. Tyler, the purchase price being $150,000.

Plans for Jake Wells' new Colonial theatre were approved during the week and the building permit issued, in preparations for active operations on the new building, which will cost $150,000.

Mr. Wells said that he and his associates plan to spend about $2,000,000 in Richmond on their theatres. In addition to the new Colonial, the Isis will be added to the Bijou, giving the latter a seating capacity of 2,000 people. Two new theatres are planned, one of which will be the home of Keith vaudeville and pictures, on North Fifth street, and the other playhouse will be for colored people. Both sites have been acquired.

Bill Proposed to Allow Child Attendance

Unaccompanied children between the ages of ten and sixteen years will be permitted to attend the motion picture theatres in New York between after school hours if a bill just introduced by Senator Salvatore Cotillo of New York City, receives favorable consideration at the hands of the legislators.

The bill specifies that the children will be permitted to attend such theatres as have made provisions for the segregation of the boys and girls and with a matron in charge who has been approved by some organization prominently identified with child welfare work.

Stanley V. Mastbaum's Memory is Honored

More than 2,000 attended the exercises held on March 28 at Norristown in memory of the late Stanley Mastbaum. The services were held at the Eaglesville Sanatarium, an institution which Mr. Mastbaum aided and in whose interest he evinced a keen interest. A number of theatrical and moving picture men attended.

Super-Specials to Star Bessie Barriscale

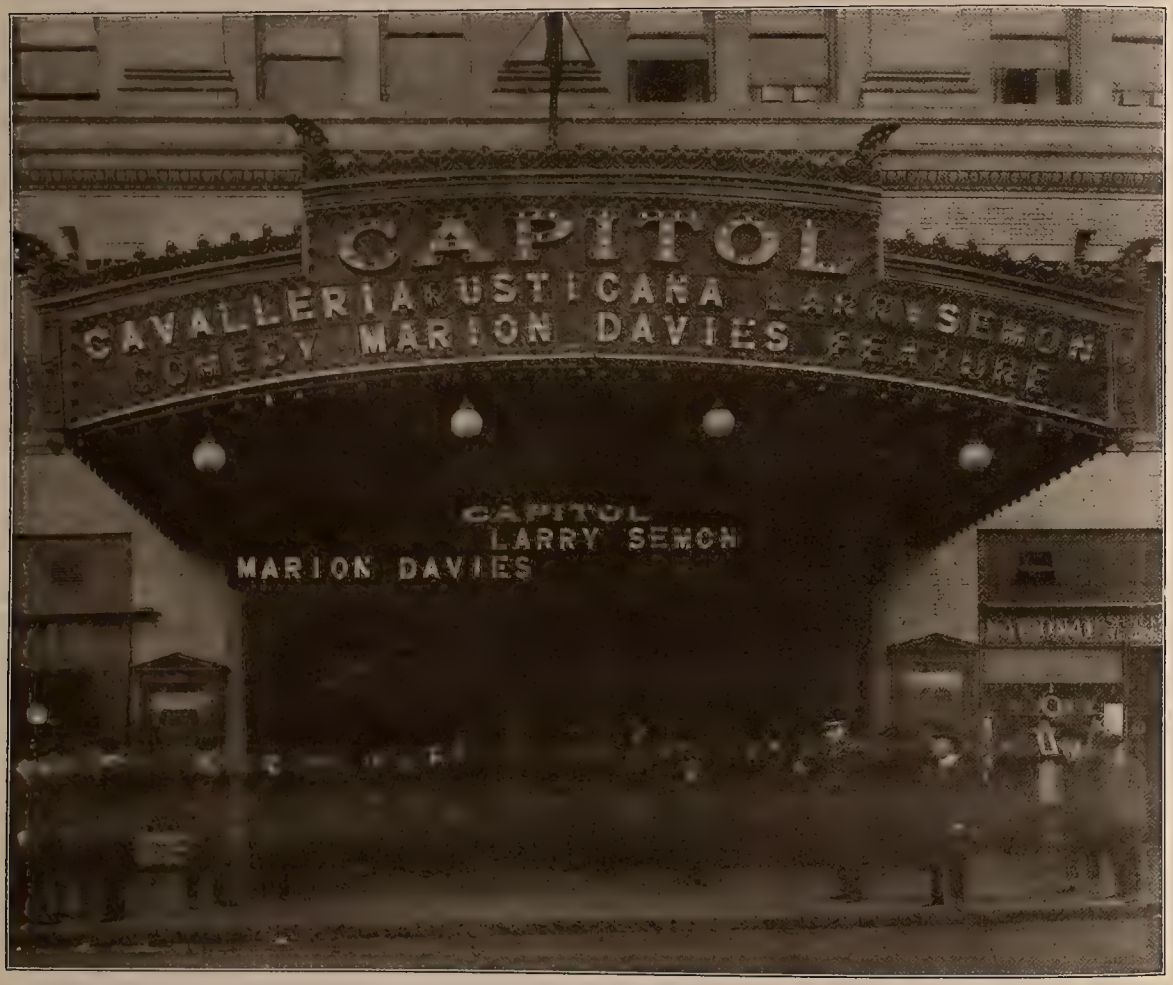
ROBERTSON-COLE announces that after the present Barriscale series has been completed a contract recently signed will be put into effect by which Bessie Barriscale in the future will star in nothing but super-specials for Robertson-Cole.

The making of this new contract with B. B. Features Company places Bessie Barriscale in a position to produce four super-features a year in keeping with the recent announcement of Robertson-Cole that only those productions that can meet the Robertson-Cole standard shall be released.

Abrams Discredits Recent "Variety" Story

Hiram Abrams called the attention of the trade press this week to the following story which was printed in Variety in the issue of March 26:

"Philadelphia, March 24.—A deal has practically been consummated whereby the United Artists ('Big Four') will hereafter distribute its pictures through the Stanley Booking Co. in this territory. Heretofore they have been releasing independently here, booking direct."



"This story," said the statement from Mr. Abrams, "like others concerning us, which have appeared in the same publication, is utterly and absolutely untrue. We have repeated so often and have demonstrated so continuously the absolute independence of our distributing organization that I feel sure we have made it clear that we will at all times and in all territories release the pictures of United Artists exclusively through our own exchanges. I am certain no exhibitor will take any stock in a story of this sort.

"I do not know what prompts the publication of this kind of a story. It isn't news, because it isn't true. It isn't good journalism, because in the case of this particular story we were not asked by Variety whether the story was true or not. They merely published it.

"I can only urge on exhibitors to consider always the source of publication of stories like this and to realize that our business is an open book at all times and any radical departure in plan or policy will be announced from this office over my signature, and need never come to the exhibitors in a round-about, mysterious way."

Miami Valley League Has Many New Members

A. F. Kinzeler, secretary of the Miami Valley Exhibitors' League, with headquarters at Dayton, Ohio, states that this body has added over 200 members to its present strength within the last two months. Mr. Kinzeler further states that two organizers have been hard at work during the past two months and that wonderful results have been obtained. These men are Homer V. Guy, former exhibitor, and C. J. Donlin, a local theatre owner.

Picture Presentation Improving in Rural Arkansas

An Article By H. V. Hodupp, Pathe Manager at Little Rock, Arkansas

A LITTLE more than five months ago Pathe Exchange, pioneering as usual, opened the territory out of Little Rock, embracing the State of Arkansas, ten counties in Mississippi, and ten counties in Tennessee. This territory had been the shag end of several other branch offices and no effort had been made to intensely develop it. The conditions found were what might be expected.

Almost all of the theatres were in small stores, automatic pianos furnished the music, poor machines ruined the pictures and tore the film, and moving pictures were shown at their worst. Poor prices were paid for film but still the exhibitor was not making much money for he was not getting the business. The motion picture just casually existed. It was not the vital part of the community life that it is in so many parts of the country. It hardly ranked with the general store in popularity.

News reels were rarely heard of in the smaller communities and it may seem strange but when I asked one exhibitor in those days what News he was using he replied:

"Well, I have been using the Arkansas State Gazette for many years. I read it every day and I like it first rate."

That man is using a Pathe News reel today and he would never be without a news reel of some kind.

In a few communities, where the colored population is large, efforts were made to run theatres for the colored folks without success because the majority of them could not read the titles. Today in most of these theatres little colored boys educated in the progressive schools of the state sit in with the audience, scattered about in convenient places, and read the titles aloud. An amazing increase in attendance has resulted. In fact pictures have been made possible for these people.

In one lumber town where a big lumber man put on pictures for hundreds of employes the men often permitted their feelings to run away with them to an extent hardly believable. Blasé Broadway will not believe me when I say that very often one of these lumberjacks would draw a gun and shoot at the screen villain at some critical point in the picture. Many a screen was ruined. I have seen the bullet holes in the sheets myself.

The first step in stopping this trouble was to arrange for a checkroom at the entrance where weapons were left before going into the store theatre. Under rough exteriors these big men are of deep and sympathetic nature. They are more strongly affected by a motion picture than any other type I have ever encountered. A tender moment in a film will bring tears every time.

With the exception of a few exhibitors in the more important cities newspaper never bought. The picture was the only advertising was never used, posters were lowing every development of the industry with the keenest interest. The trade papers are eagerly followed and the Motion Picture News ranks with the Bible in some of the exhibitor's libraries.

Our first big fight was with poor projection. Our film was being ruined constantly. We kept after the exhibitors, showing them the advantage of new and modern equipment. A certain big firm handling projection apparatus made a drive throughout the territory and today it is a rare thing to find a theatre where the projection is not good, where the film is not carefully handled, and every exhibitor is grateful for the advice which has given him this equipment.

No company could ever exist in the territory on the prices being paid for film, and still the exhibitor could not afford to pay more for he was not getting enough money at the box office. To get prices that would permit us to exist we had to show the exhibitor how to get money into his box office and exploitation and advertising, as well as good projection and presentation, was necessary.

We got the advertising and the exploitation going with the cooperation of the newspapers and today in towns of five hundred people it is not unusual to find a progressive exhibitor using half-page office is getting much larger returns. He and full-page advertisements. His box is putting on pictures with greater discrimination, he is using an orchestra or a good pianist, his presentation is good, and naturally his receipts are much bigger. Prices for film are higher and the distributing companies can afford to continue the development of this excellent territory.

In a town of six hundred souls one of our salesmen recently took an order for film which represented more than two dollars per capita of population at a single order. Along with the order went a big sale of posters and accessories. The exhibitor is keen on his advertising and in that small town he is making money.

Magazine Flavor Given Rialto Topical

THERE is a strong magazine flavor to the Rialto Topical this week, with three such excerpts. Except for the Fox picture of the opening of the Philippine Exposition and its destruction by fire on the evening of the opening, there is nothing very startling about the news events pictured.

One of the magazine extracts is used cleverly after scenes showing the delegations to the rent hearing at Albany and some eviction scenes in New York. Under the caption, "Envy the turtle who pays no rent. He carries his house on his back," we have some brief views of the turtle that are timely.

It is rather unusual for a Topical to open with a scenic, but this one does, with views of Biskra, Algeria. "Mining in Mexico" is another piece of scenic used.

"Boys in Blue" Vote for Dwan Picture

The spirit of the boys in blue has not changed much in the fifty years since the days of Bull Run, Appomatox, Gettysburg and Lookout Mountain, if their expressed preference in motion pictures can be taken as a criterion.

The G. A. R. post in Kansas City, Mo., decided that while the boys of the American Legion deserved all the attention they were getting in the country, the time had not yet come for the Boys in Blue to pass into memory.

They determined to hold a big celebration to bring out in forcible fashion some of the pertinent facts of history in aid of Secretary Lane's appeal for Americanization propaganda in motion picture theatres.

The Warwick theatre was engaged for March 16th and 17th. G. A. R. ranks had thinned considerably in the last five years, but the members figured many people in Kansas City would join with them in celebrating the feats of American history in which they had taken part.

And they were right. The event was taken up by the newspapers and for the time being the American Legion doings were backed off the front page and the G. A. R. came in for the lion's share of attention. The event proved to be a highly popular patriotic one and the Warwick theatre is reported to have had two of the biggest days of business in its history.

A number of features were submitted to the Post for its consideration, but after going over the list a vote was taken and "Soldiers of Fortune."

Here We Find a Result of Good Newspaper Exploitation

When "The Luck of the Irish" played Grauman's Rialto theatre, Los Angeles, a very novel exploitation campaign was waged in connection with the feature in the nature of interviews with Producer Dwan and the members of the cast who had leading roles. The result was entirely satisfactory from every angle. Los Angeles of course is fortunate in being the production center and able to pull stunts that are denied other cities

Comedy Without a Face or a Title

THERE is something new under the sun, as is being shown at the Rivoli theatre this week with the presentation of "Uneasy Feet," a comedy in which the face of none of the actors is ever shown on the screen. In fact, their "figures" are confined to that portion of them from their "knees down," including that portion of the anatomy of an attractive girl. There is not a title in the whole picture, but the action is so apparent that titles would be superfluous.

It shows a quartette of men—their feet only—standing in front of a cigar store and a girl passing. One of the men follows; the girl flees; a passing train separates them; the coy maiden hesitates; the youth overtakes her; a flirtation on a park bench, interrupted first by a tramp and then by a fat negress; courtship and then marriage; the groom's celebration and the bride's punishment.

Carr and Schad Welcome Children

Children, as a necessary adjunct to the exhibition of motion pictures in a neighborhood theatre, have been recognized by Carr and Schad in opening the Strand theatre in Reading, Pa. The firm, which operates three other theatres in Reading, made a special appeal to the children and the parents of children on the opening date, on the theory that a picture showing special care for the comfort and welfare of children which acquire a friendly standing in any neighborhood made up of American homes.

Accordingly the announcements of the opening contained the invitation to bring or send the children. The fact was advertised that two women would be employed regularly by the theatre to look after the comfort of kiddies who attended and to give them any attention that was necessary. Charlie Chaplin's "A Day's Pleasure," which was used as the opening feature, was also advertised as a picture that would make a special appeal to the young folks.

The Strand is one of the most beautiful theatres in Pennyslvania. The seats are extra spacious, the aisles wide, and the scheme of interior decoration makes it most attractive. In addition to a large orchestra pit the theatre has a three-manual organ. The ventilating system makes it possible to entirely change the air in the auditorium every three minutes.

Carr and Schad, owners of the Strand, already operate the Colonial, Arcadia and Princess theatres in Reading. These houses are located in what is called the downtown section of the city. The Strand is located in the main residential section and it was the idea of the owners to give the people residing in the neighborhood of the theatre a photoplay house of their own and a place to go without the trouble of traveling or being all fussed up in their best clothes.

Comedies Present Great Billing Possibilities

A glowing example of how the most interesting and helpful exploitation may often be obtained with insignificant expense has recently been demonstrated by George Fischer, maager of the Alhambra theatre, Milwaukee, who, at the same time, touched a vital spot as relates to the justification of promotion for subjects that usually go on a program unheralded.

Is an old precedent, established at a time when exploitation was not fully understood, checking exhibitors who desire to take progressive steps in the grand art of increasing box office receipts?

This is a problem which Mr. Fischer has answered in his novel campaign and in the answering thereof he has established for once and for all in Milwaukee, at least, that a novel comedy served in one-reel or ten-reel portions is just as good food for exploitation as the standard six-reel production.

And in the proving of the facts that unique exploitation can be accomplished with a small expense and that there is a new field for exploitation Mr. Fisher chanced to devote his time and attention to "A Twilight Baby."

"It is unaccountably yet thoroughly established that exhibitors have given the exploitation of comedy attractions little or no attention," said Mr. Fischer. "Just why, I can not explain, for, indeed, comedies of the nature of 'A Twilight Baby' afford the exhibitor a forty per cent better chance for appealing exploitation than the stereotyped films that invariably are promoted.

"It is a matter of motion picture history that exploitation has followed an old precedent. Original ideas are now being brought forth with more frequency than ever before but to the showman who is striving for long, progressive strides the steps now taken are comparatively slow. Figuratively there has been a color line drawn against certain types of production so far as exploitation is concerned. Our little experience with 'A Twilight Baby' shows that if such a distinction is being made, it is an undue discrimination and in so recognizing it the exhibitor is robbing himself."

Some might call it luck but others would term it a bit of exhibitor ingenuity that led Mr. Fischer to arrange with the Gridley Dairy Company to furnish him with a number of giant papier-mache milk bottles which they had used a number of months previous on a pure food drive in Milwaukee. These bottles ranged in length from four to eight.

As a coincidence a motion picture ball was given at the Auditorium just a few days previous to the first showing of "A Twilight Baby" at the Alhambra. A number of the attaches of the Alhambra so adapted the bottles as to get within and make the bottles appear to walk about. Each botle was labeled "A Twilight Baby."

After the bottles had served their purpose at the photoplay ball they were removed to the lobby of the Alhambra theatre, the great length of which readily lends itself to such use. Here the bottles were placed in such a manner it seemed that large cut-outs of buxom babies were holding the bottles.

Supplementng the lobby and novelty exploitation, Mr. Fischer was liberal with his display advertising, devising snappy word matter to accompany his advertising. The result was that he had reaped big feature profits from a production that might have been neglected through antiquated custom and prejudice.

Jeykyll and Hyde Looks Like Big Winner

IF we are any judge of exhibitors, we don't think any picture released this season is going to cause as much scratching of heads in attempting to figure the box office value as "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde."

Therefore it may be of interest to showman who try to dope out ahead of playing date what their bookings will do, to know that Monday night at 7.00 P.M. a line extending down Broadway to 49th street was standing out in a pouring rain waiting it's turn to buy a ticket to see this picture, same being shown at the Rivoli this week.

Waiting lines on Broadway are not especially theatrical events these days but when New York stands out in the wet, some of it without umbrellas, especially on Monday night during the dinner hour, it is pretty safe bet that they really want to see a picture and aren't just looking for some place to go to spend an evening. Also that the Rivoli may expect to "stand 'em up" Holy Week, which isn't always done.

One of the big things we have been building with the territory is confidence in the men distributing film and in taking an order such as is described here the greatest care was taken to see that the exhibitor had the right assortment of stuff and was certain when he had played his contracts to be satisfied with his returns.

The secret of the whole matter, to my mind, lies in the fact that the men running the theatres in the territory were business men of the highest type but they were not showmen. They were at the shag end of several territories and few salesmen took the trouble to help them. They wanted help, they wanted to do the thing right, and when the chance came they were grateful. They have been helped, and the industry as a whole has been helped, and it has been definitely shown that the true success in this business lies in every branch of it extending the helping hand to every other branch. It also demonstrates that the showmanship accessories created and directed by specialists in the big centers are the greatest help to the industry in every part of the country. The public must be reached and the distributor must assist the exhibitor in every way in reaching the public.

Saenger's Got Busy When "Brother Isaiah' Arrived

There is only a lesson and an inspiration in this page layout showing "Brother Isaiah" preaching and "healing by faith" at New Orleans, as told on the opposite page and that is to follow the example of the Saenger Amusement Company when they booked "The Miracle Man" for a return engagement when "Brother Isaiah" arrived and took advantage of a local event. Never neglect an opportunity to "hook on to local color"

New Orleans Faith Healer Great Boon to Saengers

"Brother Isaiah's" Visit Suggests Return Engagement of "Miracle Man"

THE Johnson City, Tenn., exhibitor who had a hot dog fight in his lobby knew he was after some kind of exploitation, but the Saenger Amusement Company, of New Orleans, has been getting more exploitation the last week and a half (and it's still going) than it knew what to do with. It didn't even have the picture booked when the exploitation started and had to do some scurrying around to locate a print of "The Miracle Man," when a "miracle man" in the flesh showed up in New Orleans one morning and began healing any and all who came under the "blessed" touch of his hands.

"Brother Isaiah" Cudney, 72-year-old boatman, woodsman, fisherman, watchman on a government dredge boat, had been in New Orleans five years but only a few knew him. Those who have seen "The Miracle Man" have seen the same scenes, almost, reacted, but at first there was no clicking whirr of the cameras nor the shouts of directors. "Brother Isaiah" had a house boat on the Mississippi river, moored on the New Orleans side. He had been healing by faith various ones who went to him for more than a month before the newspapers discovered him, because those he had helped feared to let others know of his efforts lest he be made stop by ethical doctors or someone else. Thursday morning, March 11, the first newspaper story appeared. Before Sunday evening following more than 30,000 persons had visited him and seen him and heard him preach and pray.

Daily newspaper reporters checked up "cures" and verified from the patients' own lips that more than 40 of them had been instantly relieved of such apparently incurable afflictions as deafness, muteness, paralysis, internal troubles, some afflicted since birth and others for years. Several children born deaf and dumb were helped. They were made able to distinguish sounds and light.

Immediately the headline writers on the newspapers called "Brother Isaiah" the "Miracle Man."

Like fire the word spread. Saengers saw the opportunity but where was a film? Telegrams flew. Phones were kept ringing and finally a print was located. It went on all last week at the Globe theatre and played to capacity houses. The only additional advertising Saengers did was to run one ad printed in The Item.

There were several characters among those treated by "Brother Isaiah" who correspond almost identically to the characters in "The Miracle Man." Those who had not seen the picture when it played in New Orleans the first time heard of this and went to see it. Those who had seen it remembered the likeness of the events and again attended to verify their remembrance. Others went because they thought it was a movie of the New Orleans "Miracle Man," and they were not disappointed because Saengers had motion pictures made of "Brother Isaiah" ministering to the multitude and showed those in addition.

At first suspicion was expressed by the public that it was an exploitation scheme, especially when the newspapers carried the first two days 72- point, eight-column, page one streamers in which the words "Miracle Man" were used. Editors ordered the use of these words stopped, but the name stuck in the people's mind. Despite offers of all amounts of money for his cures, the "Miracle Man" has refused to accept reward for his services and continued his preaching, praying and ministering eight days with only ten hours sleep or rest. His house boat was sunk three times by crowds climbing on it. He had to get in a skiff and go out into the river to answer correspondence and to escape the crowd.

Exploitation Expert Impersonates Rogers

Rittenburg, of Atlanta, Originates Novel Idea for "Jubilo"

WILL ROGERS, in his delightful tramp character of "Jubilo," was given an effective advance introduction to the people of Atlanta, Ga., through a novel impersonation stunt pulled off by Arnold Rittenberg, Goldwyn's local publicity man.

Rittenberg, after an anxious week of trying to develop a real, honest-to-goodness tramp "stubble" on his face, arrayed himself in all the disreputable-looking old clothes he could find. Then, with his wife, who was all dressed up in her best, and a huge and battered valise, he ambulated along Atlanta's leading streets—the forerunner of the new motion picture star, who, with his delightful naivette and quaint, spontaneous humor, has won thousands of hearts wherever his pictures have appeared.

The suitcase, acting as a megaphone, bore on its side in large white letters the legend, "Why would a swell girl like this marry a hobo?" and the words, "See the great Jubilo at the Forsyth, Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday.

Their plan of attack was very much like that of the old-fashioned patent medicine vender. They would swing along for a block or two, suit case prominently displayed, and, when a sufficiently large crowd had gathered behind them, they would stop—and pull off a well staged domestic wrangle (they're married, so they know how it's done).

During the argument the suit case would be dropped, and as it fell it would open, revealing a large card upon which was lettered, "Why will a beautiful woman like this marry such a creature as Jubilo?"

Of course, by this time the crowd had caught on, but they enjoyed it just the same, and talk of "Jubilo" could be heard along every street in the neighborhood of the Forsyth.

The pair made their appearance on the most populous thoroughfares of Atlanta, and the enthusiastic reception given the picture directly afterwards at the Forsyth was plentiful evidence that their stunt had proved a big success. When Will Rogers finally appeared upon the Forsyth screen he was received by a record crowd which responded sympathetically to all of his amusing, though intensely human, situations.

Because of the interest awakened in Jubilo through this stunt, the engagement of the picture at the Forsyth Theatre was more than usually successful.

In addition to this special stunt, other good publicity work was accomplished during the run of Jubilo at the Forsyth. Two of the best known eating places in Atlanta were induced to serve a special "Jubilo Salad," and to announce the fact with large placards placed in their windows, which are among the best window display locations in Atlanta. Here, again Mrs. Rittenberg was called into service. She furnished the recipe for the "Jubilo Salad."

"Mystery of Yellow Room" Opening, Tally's Broadway

On ths page is shown something of the business which Tally's Broadway theatre, Los Angeles, did with "The Mystery of the Yellow Room" on the opening night, February 23. It will also giwe those who have never visited Los Angeles an idea of what a winter's night is like in lower Cali-'ornia. Note that many of the eople in the crowd are not wearing overcoats

How Watts Killed Two Birds with One Stone

"Everywoman" Exploitation Serves Double Purpose at Springfield

WHEN W. W. Watts purchased the Princess theatre from Kunz Bros., he looked around for an attraction to inaugurate the playhouse under his management. "Everywoman" was decided upon as the first offering. When Watts had made his decision on the picture, he began to devise plans to put the picture over in the proper manner.

Getting in touch with the State Journal, Watts agreed to give as many tickets to the theatre as would be necessary to put on some sort of a contest. It was suggested that a page or double page be worked up with advertisements calling attention to things that every woman needs or would like to have. One of the mats sent out by the producers was then cast and cut up and distributed among the advertisements. The rules of the contest stated that it was only necessary to cut the pieces out and paste them together in the neatest and most artistic manner.

A page and a half was sold by the State Journal to run twice—once with the rules of the contest and then again when the winners had been decided. This gave three full pages of publicity for "Everywoman" and also called attention to the fact that the Princess was passing into the hands of a new manager.

The State Register, the other local paper, also put on a similar advertising proposition, running a full page twice. When Watts had decided the winners in the State Journal contest, all of the winning offerings were taken to the theatre and displayed in the lobby. They caused a great deal of comment.

Another thing that Watts did that made friends with a great many was his decision when it came to awarding the prizes. Originally there were twenty offered, but when Watts saw the number of replies he decided to give away fifty additional prizes to those who did not win the first twenty. Of course this pleased a great many youngsters who would have been a bit disappointed and downhearted because their efforts were not successful. The advertising that Watts and the Princess received from this matter can not be estimated but it must have been worth hundreds of dollars.

Watts thanked the newspapers for their part in helping him put over the opening in such great shape. But the papers did not expect or wish thanks, for they had secured two or three pages of additional advertising at little expense and were able to offer their readers some worth-while prizes, which is a very valuable aid in securing and holding circulation.

What was done in Springfield on "Everywoman" can be done in any city on any picture that has merit.

Printed Novelties Jennings' Specialties

Toronto Exhibitor Believes in the Potency of Good "Printers' Ink"

MANAGER HERB JENNINGS of the Allen's Danforth theatre, Toronto, Ontaria, can be counted upon to evolve a wider variety of printed novelties to advertise a moving picture theatre than half a dozen ordinary mortals combined. Every few days his brain invents a new advertising stunt and generally it is a printed booster. Jennings capitalizes every local topic or appropriate incident and links his house with current themes. Further, the new Danforth theatre is a community centre in every sense of the word. Before the theatre was built a number of people representing the Danforth Avenue section, headed by several clergymen, waited upon the Provincial Government to protest against the granting of a license for a theatre to be erected in the district. Almost any day now, with the theatre not yet a year old, you will find some of these same preachers and representative citizens visiting with Manager Jennings in his private office. Jennings is in touch with every development in the section and the result is that reporters of several local newspapers include the Danforth theatre in their list of daily calls for news. One of Jenning's recent stunts was a baby show for the Danforth district and he was also responsible for the organization of the Danforth Business Men's Association which has, for one of its objects, the improvement of stores, traffic facilities and other local features. Many stores in the neighborhood now look cleaner and brighter as a result of this association's activities.

For the presentation of Clara Kimball Young's "Eyes of Youth" at the Danforth theatre on March 15 to 17, Jennings distributed several thousand folders on which both visible and invisible ink was used. On the outside of the folder appeared the words, "For—from the Far East came the Yogi." On the first inside page was the following: "Bear well his words of wisdom." On the opposite page: "For the Yogi commands you—Heat the opposite side of this paper with a match and behold one of Life's greatest lessons." Below this appeared a large blank square and beneath appeared: "My ways are mysterious, my visits are short. At Allen's Danforth, March 15, 16 and 17." By heating the page as instructed, the title of the picture and the name of the star came out as if written with pen and ink.

The Danforth presented "Pollyanna" during the first half of the week of March 22 and a "Scholars' Matinee" was arranged for Tuesday afternoon, March 23. To advertise this performance, handsome two-color cards bearing adapted nursery rhymes were distributed at all schools of the district. The special price of admission, 10 cents, was noted while the special message to parents that "Pollyanna is just the sort of a picture you would enjoy having your child witness," was also set forth prominently.

"When the Clouds Roll By," starring Douglas Fairbanks, was booked for the first half of the week of March 29 and for this Manager Jennings has sent out "Leap Year Proposals." The front of this folder says, "Leap Year I propose—" and inside one reads: "That you see Douglas Fairbanks in 'When the Clouds Roll By'." This is followed by an impromptu proverb: "And Noah says 'When the Clouds Roll By, we ought to have good weather'."

The patrons of the Danforth are now always looking for something out of the ordinary in the way of original folders, cards, circulars, etc., announcing coming attractions and Jennings does not disappoint them. Week after week something entirely new and different appears and the patrons hold their hands out eagerly for the dodgers. Many of these novelties are worth while saving.

Showing Two Lobby Displays For "The Fortune Hunter"

The exploitation possibilities of "The Fortune Hunter" were quickly recognized by exhibitors who go in for lobby displays. The top cut on this page shows the lobby decoration for this picture, which the Princess theatre of St. Paul designed and arranged for the film's engagement at this house. The bottom cut is another "Fortune Hunter" display somewhat less elaborate but very effective, the work of the Tudor theatre, Atlanta, Ga.

Sane Exploitation Box Office Asset Says Thos. Sorerio

Lowell Showman States Exaggerated Claims for Pictures Are Boomerangs

ONE hears so many complaints on all sides from moving picture patrons concerning exaggerated claims in film advertising and publicity that there is room for wide improvement in setting forth facts and figures of the pictures and at the same time without giving offence.

I am forced to admit that many managers, some of them shrewd business men and capable leaders, utterly ignore the fact that their patrons may possess intellects of their own. I could cite instances where managers have made claims through "readers" in the newspapers which, to their regret, were not borne out in fact, as many of the patrons soon learned. These claims were mere exaggerations, and probably seemed to the managers as perfectly proper and a part of the up-to-date methods used too largely nowadays in the motion picture industry for its own good.

What is sane publicity, then? To my way of thinking (and I have been devoting a large part of my time to the study of this intricate problem), that medium which reaches the largest number of people calculated to respond to the facts set forth and accepting these facts as honest statements, is the only ideal publicity. Sane publicity can be achieved through the newspapers, by contests in connection with the theatre, bill-boards, hand bills, and through any of the other dozen or more agencies available.

In this instance intelligence must be shown in selecting the medium of publicity. One would not (and should not) attempt to interest the better class of patrons by distributing garish hand bills at their doors. Perhaps a carefully worded letter-pamphlet directed to the intelligence of the cultured patron would result more satisfactorily to the manager than the gaudy pamphlet, if this agency is desired. Since all types constitute the average moving picture audience, the lower strata must not be ignored. To enlist their attention without being charged with exaggerating, is a problem no less serious than that which confronts the manager in appealing to his better class of patrons.

Newspaper publicity, including an unstinted use of cuts and display ads, supplemented by the so-called contests (about which I will go into detail later on in this article), gives excellent satisfaction, I have found. The appeal of these agencies is, of course, very broad. This is in direct contrast to the carefully worded letter directed to the more intelligent patrons. A great many managers feel that so long as they present facts to the public, no matter how extravagant they are, this accomplishes the true function of publicity. Nothing could be further from the truth.

Mr. Barnum's philosophy that the public loves to be buncoed has been replaced by a hatred of being cheated and humiliated. If a manager sets forth facts, either unconsciously or deliberately, which his patrons learn have been exaggerated they become embittered and lose their respect for the house and its manager. I don't say that all managers do this, but there is a tendency to seek patronage by surpassing rival managers in making vast claims with respect to their houses. This breeds contempt and suspicion on the part of the patron. He grows more and more skeptical of moving picture publicity, and probably in the end rejects the whole business and determines to "take a chance" and find out for himself. This is the attitude of the more intelligent every time they enter a moving picture theatre, and is something which should be deplored.

Good publicity is the life of a theatre, and bad publicity will drive away patrons from the most carefully managed theatre. Perhaps I should say here that many of these statements are conventional and perhaps stereotyped, yet nevertheless I firmly believe they cannot be repeated often enough to sufficiently impress managers who wish to enhance their reputation and enlarge their box office receipts.

By studying your audience as a collective unit and with respect to the locality in which your theatre is situated, and by studying the temperament of the city as a whole, one can determine what is the proper publicity and will give the best results. One wouldn't be expected to use the same methods in a university city as in a mill city; therefore, it doesn't mean that publicity must be exaggerated even with patrons not classed as intellectual, for the worth of publicity is measured by the responsiveness of those to whom it is directed.

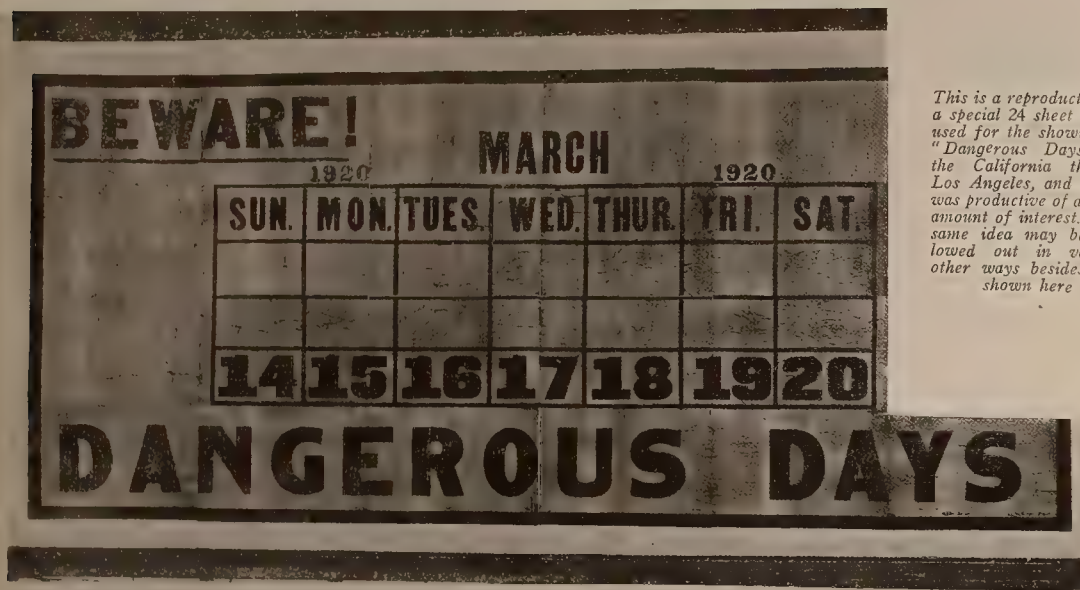
When a theatre sets forth publicity in an attractive, catchy manner without exaggeration, patrons grow to learn they can depend on what this particular theatre has to offer.

Newspaper men tell me that a large percentage of the publicity which is received at the copy desks of dailies is "bunk," showing neither intelligence nor good taste. A great deal of this trash is sent out, they say, by professional press agents who fail to make a study of the particular needs of the house, and use the same old hackneyed expressions. These fellows seem to think the more exaggerated their statements the larger the appeal. Unfortunately a great many of them don't seem to know what to leave unsaid—truly an art in itself.

This subject is a vital matter to the managers, and therefore, no matter how busy they are, they should at least read the publicity which goes into their papers. A bald statement dressed up with a lot of adjectives cannot achieve the result, in most cases, that a suggestive assertion, combining dignity and modesty, can. I don't mean that publicity need by mysterious, but by subtle innuendo and a clever play on the imagination publicity can be made to win many friends and fatten the coffers of the manager.

The follow-up, whether in newspaper publicity or other agencies, is an admirable way to focus attention on the theatre. Perhaps I can illustrate this better by concrete example.

For instance, I have just laid out a publicity campaign as general manager of the Strand theatre, Lowell, Mass., which will include some very clever descriptive ads, all hand drawn, and the same have already been tried out, and have brought very good results at our theatre. During the summer the patronage of moving picture theatres is perhaps slightly less than in the winter, and I felt that if I could interest the school children it might increase the box-office receipts. So I began early, and during this past week or so opened my campaign on the youngsters by offering five dollars in gold to the Lowell school child finding the first pussywillow of the season, as the official harbinger of spring.



I secured the co-operation of the school authorities, and while it did not involve any large expense, it attracted wide attention and great excitement among the little folks. Incidentally, the winner was Anna Reardon, twelve, who is in the 8-A grade in one of the public schools here. I brought it to their attention by the use of slides, so that it didn't even cost me anything for newspaper advertising.

To illustrate the follow-up method and to increase their interest I also offered five dollars in gold for the best drawing of a pussywillow among the school children. This again the school authorities heartily endorsed. All the drawings have been made, and the drawing instructor will act as judge, and select the winner within the next fortnight.

Also, the prize drawing and the best of those drawn by the children will be exhibited in the lobby of the theatre.

I have in mind several other such stunts as these to follow up with.

Two West Coast Ideas Which Register As Extra Good

This is a reproduction of a special 24 sheet poster used for the showing of "Dangerous Days" at the California theatre, Los Angeles, and which was productive of a great amount of interest. The same idea may be followed out in various other ways besides that shown here

When Sid Grauman played "Easy to Get" he used the interior of a Pullman car as the setting for a prologue number before screening the feature. Same was described in a recent issue of the NEWS. Shown above is the "car" which had "practical" wheels and the performers who presented the act

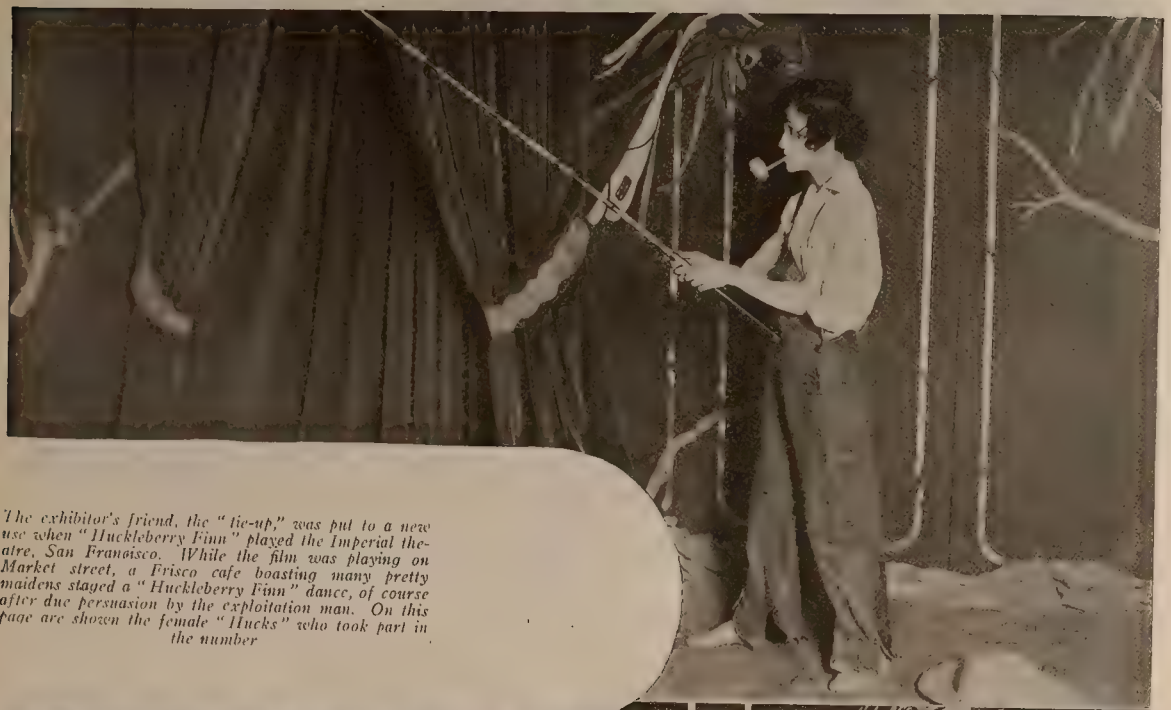
Patrons "Review" Serial for Kashin

UNUSUAL means were adopted by Morris Kashin, manager of the Holman theatre, Montreal, Quebec, to popularize the "The Lion Man." Public and private invitations were extended for attendance at special screenings of the first two episodes at the Holman. Two of these screenings were held in the morning and a third was conducted late at night. The house was well filled on each of the occasions by regular and casual patrons who were asked to fill out a printed form, giving their honest opinion of the serial as well as their names and addresses. A copy of this printed form was published in one of the local newspapers with the request that the people bring it with them to the theatre for the private presentation. Copies were also given to those who had neglected to clip the coupon. The scores of replies all indicated that the "reviewers" were well satisfied with the episodes screened and the picture was then announced as booked as a result of the public verdict.

Another unique stunt was the sale of "season tickets" for the entire serial of eighteen chapters. These tickets were first distributed without charge with a coupon attached which read as follows: "Save Money! Here's your chance to see the entire eighteen episodes of this wonderful serial at a greatly reduced cost. Let us tell you about the discount on this season ticket. Bring this ticket to the Holman Theatre." The card, which bore eighteen numbered spaces for punching, was not good for admission to the theatre on days that the serial was to be presented until the holder had paid the amount required in which case it was countersigned in a space indicated for a signature. Following this procedure, the ticket was duly honored at the theatre entrance. The card served both as an advertising stunt and for the purpose stated. The reduction in price granted was five cents for each admission.

"Copperhead" Showing an Event in Shelbyville

SHELBYVILLE, Indiana, happened to be the first Indiana city in the territory of the Cincinnati Famous Players Lasky exchange to play "The Copperhead." Manager Meloy of the Strand theatre made a special trip to Manager Harris P. Wolfberg's office at Cincinnati to get "The Copperhead" for a Lincoln birthday showing. And having secured "The Copperhead" for a state "premiere," Mr. Meloy went to the expolitation of the engagement with Paul Meloy, son of W. C. the manager, who is a World War veteran himself and he made a speech at a meeting of the American Legion, telling them of the stirring Americanism of "The Copperhead." He got their undivided and enthusiastic support and when the engagement started, there was a house-full of American Legion veterans, attending in a body and making the "Copperhead" the feature of their Lincoln birthday anniversary celebration.



As a result of the private showing, the Rev. H. F. Von Tobel, leading pastor, spoke of "The Copperhead" in his Sunday sermon; Superintendent of Schools, Prof. J. W. Holton, heartily recommended the picture to his school children "and everybody in Shelbyville, Frank Wolfe and Walter J. Myers, representing the American Legion, gave the Legion's official approval—and the newspapers printed lengthy commendations.

The exploitation man found little difficulty in securing merchant-cooperation for window displays, only the patriotic nature of the picture having to be mentioned to secure support. The leading drug store in town gave an artistic window, featuring a portrait of Lincoln.

"Huckleberry Finn" Dance Makes Hit in San Francisco

The exhibitor's friend, the "tie-up," was put to a new use when "Huckleberry Finn" played the Imperial theatre, San Francisco. While the film was playing on Market street, a Frisco cafe boasting many pretty maidens staged a "Huckleberry Finn" dance, of course after due persuasion by the exploitation man. On this page are shown the female "Hucks" who took part in the number

Electricity and Art Aid "Daughter of Two Worlds"

The last word in the creation of inexpensive atmosphere of the most enticing variety for the front of a theatre was seen recently by hundreds of Milwaukee picture fans, who, responding to the lure of electricity and art, flocked to the Alhambra to witness the showing of Norma Talmadge in "A Daughter of Two Worlds."

The space above the great doors leading from the lobby into the foyer was occupied by a realistic painting of two classes of domiciles. On the one side was the home of wealth and luxury, a dignified residence with stately colonial pillars, surrounded by handsome grounds and noble trees. Just beside it was the picture of the star—laughing, happy, carefree.

On the other side was a reproduction of a tenement district, with tall, forlorn houses lining the alley and clotheslines hung with nondescript garments, clipped from actual fabrics. Close by was another picture of the star, this time shown as the daughter of the tenements—sad, wan, hopeless.

The pictures were cut from 24 sheets. Each of the two Talmadge heads used measured some six feet in diameter and of course were lithographed. They were mounted on beaver board, one overlapping the other, while around the pair ran a rim of electric bulbs shooting off into arrows that pointed at the two homes.

Charles Brewster, electrical wizard of the Alhambra, made the lighting arrangement striking, the rims flashing alternately. The bulbs around the happy girl's face were red and their rays glinted off the tip of the arrow that pointed to the rich home. Green lights circled the face of the unhappy woman, casting a sickly shade over the miniature tenement district.

"April Folly" Prelude Dainty

ONE of the most artistic prologues that has ever been given a feature on Broadway is provided at the Capitol theatre this week in connection with the showing of "April Folly," with Marion Davies as the star. The prologue is to be especially commended, since it is very brief and leaves the audience longing for more. In fact, when it was witnessed by the MOTION PICTURE NEWS critic the applause was insistent.

Because of the length of the performance, there is an intermission and promenade concert just after the main musical number, and then comes the comedy. Immediately at the conclusion of this the curtains part, showing a half circular window effect, one of the clever creations of John Wenger. Lighting effects with the colors blended bring out the figures inside of the restaurant in their gay costumes and their wild tribute to folly. A few bars of song are rendered and almost immediately the feature is projected on the screen. The whole thing occupies less than two minutes.

even greater heights and greater popularity in the year to come.

"Thus our special productions with our established stars as well as those we will make with all-star casts should possess the greatest box-office magnetism.

"In the making of our specials our studios in the east and west will be utilized. The western studios in Hollywood, California, will be in charge of Joseph W. Engel, as general manager. Our Sixty-first street studios in New York will be under the watchful eye of Maxwell Karger, who as director general will personally supervise all production at these studios."

Goldman Stages Atmospheric Prologue for Nazimova Feature

Exploitation and presentation are receiving the undivided attention of the management and publicity of departments of King's and Pershing's theatres, St. Louis, these days.

During the recent engagement of Nazimova in "Stronger than Death," William Goldman managing director of the theatres presented a very artistic atmospheric prologue. He engaged Miss Adele Kirkwood, a St. Louis girl, to dance in a scene which was an adaptation of Nazimova's number on the temple steps in "Stronger than Death." The setting and lighting effects were in keeping with the splendor of the scene in the picture.

Lang Believes in Personal Letter Idea

A. P. Lang, manager of the Temple theatre, in Pleasantville, Ohio, is a progressive showman whose original exploitation ideas contribute greatly to the success of his house. Mr. Lang is a firm believer in the efficacy of mailing campaigns to swell the lines at the box-office. He devotes considerable time and thought to the composition of the letters he sends to persons on his mailing list, and the result is that their cleverness attracts a great deal of attention.

Recently the Temple theatre showed "Fair and Warmer," starring May Allison, using this form of publicity. The result of the exploitation strengthened Mr. Lang's belief that his plan is good. Later an equally clever letter was sent out for "Lombardi, Ltd.," with equally satisfactory results.

Great Thought if You Can Locate a Real Vamp

Fort Madison Girl With Stage Aspirations Exploits "The Virtuous Vamp"

A REAL live vamp, with eyebrows curved and otherwise vampishly constituted, her shirtwaist low and her French heels high, specializing in shaking a wicked hoof and manipulating a slippery orb, stimulated the heart-beats of young bloods of Fort Madison, Iowa, recently.

This "vamp" stimulated something else also, and this "something else" was nothing more than the ticket-selling machine in the new Strand Theatre, of which James Boyle is manager.

When the great Day of Reckoning comes for those showmen who do and dare, Jimmie Boyle ought to find himself decorated with more citations than any of Broadway's kindly head waiters in the pre-prohibition days. And if there is any citation for which Jimmie is going to be given his just deserts, it is going to be for the courageous way he put through his original idea for the exploitation of "A Virtuous Vamp."

This campaign began when Mr. Boyle decided to bring the "Virtuous Vamp" to life. This was delicate business. The average girl does not mind vamping a little on her own hook but she is pretty apt to kick when someone, even a hard-working exhibitor with a family, asks her to do so as a profession. But thanks to Miss Phyliss Lake, of Fort Madison, local vamp stock has attained a high place of eminence because it was through her efforts, which knew neither union hours nor middy blouse habits, that vamping became an art and not a dissipation.

Those exhibitors who want to adopt Mr. Boyle's idea will find it to their advantage to employ a girl who has stage ambitions. Miss Lake had 'em. The work Miss Lake did was as clever a bit of acting as has ever been seen on the Fort Madison stage. For instance, when Miss Lake put a red rose in her hair, penciled her eyebrows, applied the lip stick, donned a sky-blue satin skirt and an emarald green silk shirtwaist, and sallied out the lobby of the New Strand, two show-clerks, the village wag, half a dozen actors and two policemen were immediately pleased. It took a young man, however, who just made his fortune in the Texas oil fields and who was in Fort Madison searching for a chorus girl who had thrown him a kiss before he had made his fortune, to make the first advance. Thinking himself clever, he began to whistle, "Nobody Knows and Nobody Seems to Care."

"I do," said Miss Lake sweetly and nervously.

"Gosh," stuttered the youth, almost choking on a high frill.

Phyliss Lake, Fort Madison, Ia.

"I am a 'Virtuous Vamp,' said Miss Lake, loud enough for the collection of bright young men to hear her.

Feeling it encumbent upon him to say something, the boy from Texas, regaining his nerve, said, "Ah! do tell."

"I will meet you in the lobby of the New Strand Thursday night," said Miss Lake, and she rushed down the street leaving the bold youth frozen to the sidewalk, his pulse racing up and down like a newly struck gusher.

And while Miss Lake was doing her vampiest vamping the local newspaper was not neglected. Ads, press notices and subtle readers warning the public to beware of a "Virtuous Vamp" who looked like the first day of spring, and like her resemblance was turning young men's fancies to thoughts of love. It was simply awful, the paper said. It seemed that a vamp epidemic had hit the town.

"Remember your Mothers, Wives and Sweethearts," said the articles, "don't be fooled by a 'Virtuous Vamp.'"

And while the newspapers carried warnings, Miss Lake was exploiting the picture everywhere the street cars, automobiles and taxi-cabs would take her. One of her most popular stunts was dropping her handkerchief, her purse, her gloves, or her red rose in front of a group of either young or elderly men. The result was always the same. It looked like a stampede, and when the knight errant, who had probably suffered nothing worse than having his fingers or his favorite cigar crushed, picked up the naughty vamp's belongings, she would invite him to meet her in the Strand lobby on Thursday night. What more incentive for the blade?

Miss Lake was an exceptionally fine dancer. Fort Madison is exceptionally fond of dancing. And it was at these dances that the alluring press agent of a "Virtuous Vamp" vamped everyone from the coat-check boy to the trap drummer. Age meant nothing to her as did nothing else. At the dances she attended she distributed neat little cards advising the showing of a "Virtuous Vamp."

The campaign climaxed on the opening day of the showing when Mr. Boyle used a full page newspaper ad to herald the first performance.

Local exhibitors estimate that Miss Lake only talked to 6,174 people. On Thursday night it seemed at least that number were trying to keep their appointments in the New Strand lobby.

And that's the way Jimmie Boyle put over "A Virtuous Vamp" in Fort Madison.

Results from Exploitation Costing Five Cents

Four cents expended in stamps and the cost of two letterheads and envelopes was the entire outlay made by Frank Holland, manager of the Murette theatre in Richmond, Ind., in getting satisfactory exploitation results from "Soldiers of Fortune."

The place is a college town and Mr. Holland realized that most of the students in the colleges and high school of the country had read all of Richard Harding Davis's works, and that they were studied as models in modern writing.

He determined to let the students know that a picturization of one of the stories was to be shown at his theatre and decided that two letters would turn the trick as neatly as a large amount of money spent in various ways on handbilling newspaper and billboard advertising.

He wrote two carefully worded letters concerning the feature. One was sent to the principal of the Richmond High School and the other to the president of Earlham College in Richmond. In the letters he asked the school authorities to make an announcement that "Soldiers of Fortune" would be played at the Murette, if they felt that the case warranted it.

The announcements were made and, according to Manager Holland, the results were very gratifying. The students at both the college and the high school made a special event of the showing and large blocks of seats were sold to them at every performance. The Murette was crowded to capacity at every showing.

Lobby Display By Washington Theatre, Dallas, Texas

The electric sign as an advertising medium can be estimated in this cut of the front of the Washington theatre, Dallas, Texas. Also that even with such a giant sign as that which the Washington boasts, an enterprising showman like the manager of this house does not think it advisable to confine his lobby exploitation to this medium alone. Note the special display for "Smoldering Embers," especially how a cut-out of Frank Keenan from a 24 sheet was utilized to great advantage

Incorporates New Thoughts in Old Exploitation Idea

Ernest Stellings Pulls Beauty Contest That Has Lot of New Wrinkles

INCORPORATING the new ideas in an old exploitation stunt and varying it so as to get original results is the plan adopted by Ernest Stellings, manager of the Grand theatre, Washington, Ind., in connection with his showings of "Erstwhile Susan."

He made arrangements with the Washington Herald, an afternoon newspaper having about 2,000 circulation, to cooperate in a beauty contest to select the young woman in the city bearing the closest resemblance to Miss Binney.

Despite the fact that the newspaper had no engraving plant to make cuts of the entrants' photographs, Mr. Stellings was not deterred. He announced that a season's pass to his theatre would be given to the young woman winning the contest, a pass of one month to the one bearing the next closest resemblance, and a week's pass to each of the next three.

A photographer was engaged to take the pictures of all entrants without charge to them. The photographer also mounted and framed the pictures without charge. This arrangement was possible for the reason that the photographer derived much valuable publicity from the stunt.

The campaign opened with publicity on the first page of the Herald, announcing the terms and specifying that it was necessary for each entrant to obtain a permit card from either the Herald or Manager Stellings before the photographer took the photographs. On the Sunday preceding the opening of "Erstwhile Susan" at the Grand, all of the photographs of the entrants were displayed prominently in the show window of one of the leading merchants in the town. Needless to say, that attracted much attention.

Now up to this point, it will be noted that the stunt followed stereotyped lines, but here Mr. Stellings injected some new life into the idea and the whole thing went over with a smash as a result.

On Monday, the judges of the contest went over the photographs carefully and picked Mrs. Claude Bennett as the winner. Then, Mr. Stellings got the merchants of the city to co-operate and Mrs. Bennett was asked to visit the principal stores where women's apparel was sold.

The different merchants selected a specialty which they christened "Erstwhile Susan." One displayed the "Erstwhile Susan Hat," another the "Erstwhile Susan Coat," another the "Erstwhile Susan Suit," and so on through a long list of articles.

These were put prominently on display in the store windows. Mrs. Bennett during the days of showing went about the streets of Washington shopping, wearing a number of different styles and combinations of various "Erstwhile Susan" clothes.

Mrs. Claude Bennett, of Washington, Ind., who is a double for Constance Binney

It was announced that a complimentary ticket to the Grand theatre would be handed to any person who spotted Washington's "Erstwhile Susan" on the street. This brought another big display on the front page of the newspaper. The persons recognizing Washington's "Erstwhile Susan" were instructed to say, "I know you, 'Erstwhile Susan.'"

Mrs. Bennett would thereupon hand the person a complimentary ticket to the performance. She was identified a number of times and Washington's 8,000 population had an exciting and busy time tracking down the young woman. The prizes were given away the day before the "Erstwhile Susan" opening. So effective was the campaign that Mr. Stelling hung up a new box office record for his theatre on the very first day the picture was shown.

Unquestionably, neither of the two old stunts of a beauty contest or the "spotting" contest would have produced this result. And yet tying them up together with the effective newspaper publicity tended to make a new appeal. But it was the tie-up with merchants on fashions that was added to this combination that brought the real punch. It gave an aspect to the old material that was entirely fresh and new, and appealed particularly to women.

And the fact is, as every exhibitor knows, that the matinees attended by women chiefly are the factor that mark a big success from ordinary business. Right there lies the secret of why Mr. Stelling set up a new house record.

Small Town Exhibitor With Big Town Ideas

J. D. Smith runs the Princess theatre in Rockford, Ohio, a town of 1,200, dogs and all, as Smith says. His theatre seats exactly 168 persons!

He booked "The Miracle Man" and having booked, decided to put it over city fashion. Here is how he did it:

He put out his paper—an unusual amount—and did all the orthodox advertising according to Hoyle. Then he went to the business men in his town with a subscription list for tickets and told each of them about the wonderful effect of bringing such a picture as "The Miracle Man" to Rockford. He sold 150 tickets for each show each night, two shows a night! That left the Princess theatre box office 18 tickets to sell for each performance when playing date arrived. Mr. Smith didn't have to worry about the weather, the flu, or Lent. But filling his house was only one aim of this showman. He wanted to let everybody know he had a picture like "The Miracle Man." He wanted the prestige and the noise. He advertised on the front page of his papers and put up lithos on barns, chicken coops and fences, in all parts of the country near Rockford and surrounding towns.

"Everybody was talking 'big show,'" writes Mr. Smith. "Just to illustrate how important they thought 'The Miracle Man,' one old lady asked me: 'When that Miracle Man comes to town where will he stay?' There's not a hotel here and she wanted the honor of renting the Miracle Man a room!'

But, wait, Smith isn't done yet. You've heard exploitation men boast about putting over double-page spreads in big towns. How about a double-page spread in a town of 1200? Smith did it! He got out and sold the ads himself; wrote the copy for the merchants, read the proofs. All he failed to do was to deliver the papers!

Then he dressed the front of his house. Cut-outs and a 24-sheet banner turned the Princess into a bright spot of the town.

Grauman's Theatre—

Overture—Love Tales of Hoffman.
Current Events—From Gaumont News and Graphic, Pathe Review and News, and International.
Organ—Jesse Crawford playing "Mystery."
Special—"The Heart of the West." Sid Grauman under above title is presenting a dancing number which is meeting with great success. The drapes open on a garden scene with apparently life sized bronzed statues and four marble statues placed about the stage. Later a statue as a fountain girl gives a dance and falls asleep. The marble statues also dance. A tiny marble statue renders a solo. The men impersonating the bronze statues present a contortionist act. All return to their original positions as they complete the part of the entertainment. Our West wires that it is one of the most artistic of the Grauman specialties staged.
Cartoon—"Bone of Contention"—Paramount Magazine.
Feature—"The Toll Gate"—William S. Hart. Presented with an atmospheric prologue prior to the screening. A slide announces Maleta Zarelli in grand opera selections. In the middle of the song the theatre is "held up" by a man in the make-up of "Black Deering" of the Hart feature and "Deering's" gang. People paying admission are excused from giving up valuables but the forty piece orchestra is "frisked," the singer is kidnapped. The "bandits" leave the stage on a hand car running on a "railway and carry the girl with them." "Deering" rides off on a spotted pony. A stage setting suitable for the locale of the picture is hung to mask the wings.
Next Week—"Treasure Island"—Maurice Tourneur.

This five column by six inch display originated with the Adams theatre of Detroit. All exhibitors may not agree that this is the way to bill "The Inferior Sex," but at least they must admit that the ad will get attention.

Tally's Broadway Theatre—

First National Officers Busy

Convention Arranged at Meeting of Committees

CONSIDERATION of the details of the distributing arrangement sought by Associated Producers, popularly known as the "Big Six," decision on the date and place for the 1920 annual convention of First National members and exchange managers, a final survey of the percentage allotments determined by its Statistical Department and conferences in which several new producer offers were debated, were the important features of a special joint meeting of the Executive Committee and the Exhibitors' Defense Committee of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., held in New York on Monday and Tuesday of this week.

According to the announcement, there has been no final action taken by the First National executives which in any way terminated the negotiations which have been in progress for weeks between the Associated Producers and the Circuit, or which the director members of the "Big Six" have had with other distributing organizations. Two meetings between members of the Executive Committee for First National, with its attorneys, A. L. and S. F. Jacobs, and Nathan Burkan and Nathan Vidaver, chief counsel for the Associated Producers, resulted in an exchange of terms and conditions favored by the exhibitor members of the Circuit and sought by the directors, but without any concluding action resulting, it is said.

Pending a definite settlement of releasing arrangements members of the "Big Six" are continuing their work on present contracts, or planning in advance production work to be included in the output through whatever distributing affiliation finally is made.

The annual convention of exhibitor members of First National, and the managers of the Circuit exchanges will be held at the Congress Hotel, Chicago, beginning on Monday, April 26, and continuing throughout the week. This convention will be the biggest of the annual affairs held by Circuit members since the organization of First National as an exhibitor cooperative body three years ago. As in 1919, it will be a joint meeting of the franchise owners and managers, but on this occasion, it is announced, many of the important exhibitors throughout the country will attend, in addition to the present members of the organization.

Coincident with the transaction of organization affairs by the members, the most important feature of the convention will be a complete explanation of all details of the new sub-franchising arrangement, which will become effective immediately after the convention. Present at the sessions devoted to the expansion method will be salesmen from every territory, the exchange managers, their respective exploitation men, and the total body of exhibitors, both present members and future members by franchise, together with the executives for the various producing companies holding contracts for the release of their pictures through First National.

Exhibitor cooperation will be the keynote of convention it is said. Several new production propositions, fostered by important independent directors, stars and producers, which have been submitted to First National in the last four weeks, were discussed by the members of the Executive Committee, and will be made public at the convention, when they will be taken up for final action by the membership at large.

Two Interpretations of Sennett Comedy

The latest Mack Sennett five-reel comedy, "Down on the Farm," admits of two interpretations, according to United Artists Corporation, who are releasing the production. The story may be accepted as an authentic tale, or it may be enjoyed as travesty on the melodrama that flourished years ago. It reveals the entire Sennett equipment at its best: chickens that never saw Broadway; cows not of the "prop" variety; ducks, geese, turkeys and all the rest of the feathered creatures of Mr. Sennett's farm, became, so to say, a background for the romance of Louise Fazenda, the rustic corn-fed beauty.

Chicago and the Mid-West

Covered By L. H. MASON

Paul Busch, Chicago manager for Republic, has arranged some special exploitation for "The Girl of the Sea," which will have its premier loop showing next week. Special newspaper advertising, a poster on every "L" station in the city, and a tie-up with Guyon's Paradise, one of the largest and most popular dance halls in Chicago, which will give a Girl of the Sea Dance and present a cup to the prize "trotters," are among the publicity plans already made.

"The Forbidden Woman," featuring Clara Kimball Young, has broken all house records at the Playhouse, the fashionable "Boul Mich" picture theatre, according to Manager Smith. An unusually extensive campaign of advertising helped put the picture over. "The Virgin of Stamboul" will follow "The Forbidden Woman" at the Playhouse and Harry Rice and Harry Reichenbach are collaborating in planning a big exploitation and advertising campaign for this big Universal production.

Chicago manager Paul Busch, of Republic; Manager Ben W. Beadell, of Select, and Assist. Manager Edwin Silverman will leave the latter part of the week to attend the conference of Selznick managers, New York. A number of other western managers, who are going to the convention, will join the party here and travel from Chicago in a body.

The Chicago office of Select will be removed from the quarters it now occupies in the Consumers' Building to the fourth floor of the Film Exchange Building, 207 S. Wabash Avenue, about May 1st. The new offices will occupy part of the space now used by Republic.

Chicago exhibitors, members of the Allied Amusement Association, are raising a fund of $10,000 or more for the benefit of the widow and three children of Wm. A. Mills, manager of the Crawford theatre, who while counting the day's receipts in the box office, was killed by bandits a few days ago. The Allied Amusements Association headed the subscription list with $500; Jones, Linick & Schaefer gave $250; Lubliner & Trinz $500; Ascher Brothers, $250, and smaller subscriptions are coming in at a rapid rate. The F. I. L. M. Association, it is understood, will add $2,000 to the fund.

Clara Kimball Young was the first to subscribe for the relief fund to aid the sufferers who were injured in the hurricane which swept the Chicago North Shore suburbs Sunday and also arranged for the opening of a sixty-bed hospital in Wilmette to care for the injured. Miss Young remained in Chicago for the meeting of Equity directors Wednesday and Thursday and then returned to the Coast.

Todd Browning, who directed "The Virgin of Stamboul," was in Chicago Saturday and Sunday on his way to the coast and expressed himself as highly pleased over his new arrangement with Universal. It is understood that in the future Mr. Browning will direct the principal productions for that company.

Lee Herz, of the Silee Film Company, has bought the rights to the Jester Comedies for northern Illinois, from the Territorial Sales Company. The pictures will be issued every other week and Mr. Herz, who is enthusiastic over them, has already arranged for a loop showing of the first release, "Chickens in Turkey." Mr. Herz has also acquired the rights for the Foundation Film Company's single reel educationals, which will be issued weekly, for Illinois, Indiana and Wisconsin. The first release in this territory will be about May 1st. "Crimson Shoals," the feature picture now being handled by the Silee exchange, promises to be a big success in this territory, according to early bookings.

Si Griever was in Cleveland and New York this week on business connected with Griever Educationals, which already have been booked extensively in the Chicago territory.

C. A. Mead, secretary of C. B. Price, Inc., of New York, was a Chicago visitor last week and it is reported closed some important picture deals while in the Windy City.

Mayor William Hale Thompson was the Mayor and his handsome city hall office the location of a picture filmed last week, under the direction of Ben Beadell, manager Select's Chicago office. The purpose of the picture is to boost the proposed bond issue which will provide funds for building a municipal convention hall seating 34,000 people. The continuity for the picture was prepared by Spearman Lewis, well-known newspaper writer, and the Essanay Company furnished a truck full of lights, camera men, etc., in charge of Fred Wagner. Saturday morning the actors, including his honor, and a throng of prominent citizens, were on hand and rehearsals began, one of the scenes showing Mayor Thompson explaining plans to the group of P. C.'s. The completed picture will be shown in every Chicago theatre.

Aaron Sapperstein announces the acquisition by the Empire Film Company of the rights to "What Becomes of the Children?" for Illinois and Indiana. He has also bought the Capital Pictures five-reel feature, "The Secret Trap," and has acquired from Clark & Cornelius, all the old Mutual re-issues featuring well-known stars.

The big billboard campaign, advertising the Vitagraph feature, "The Courage of Marge O'Deane," is under way in Chicago and the adjoining territories and 24 sheet posters appeared last week on 135 billboards in Chicago alone. Vitagraph also is using 100 billboards to exploit Larry Semon Comedies in this territory.

G. E. Pomeroy has joined the Vitagraph sales force and will work out of the Chicago office under Manager Aiken.

Harry Tanner of Pana, Illinois has opened his theatre to big business and reports that he attributes the success of his new house largely to the beautiful music rendered by a Bartola just installed. John Julius who has had one of these instruments in his Strand Theatre at Fort Dodge, Iowa, for four years, recently has taken over the Unique Theatre, Webster City and installed a new model of Bartola therein.

Arthur S. Hyman Attractions, Inc., has arranged with New Era to distribute their pictures in northern Illinois and with Doll-Van of Indianapolis to distribute their features in southern Illinois and Indiana. The Chicago office of Arthur S. Hyman Attractions, Inc., will be closed about May 1st. Manager McCoy will go to the Detroit office and it is rumored, he may be placed in charge of that office. The new plan of Arthur S. Hyman Attractions is to center their efforts in the Michigan territory.

Manager Max Levy of Robertson-Cole Exchange, anticipating a big business with the forthcoming Robertson-Cole features, which are heralded as being some of the finest pictures ever filmed, is re-zoning his territory and strengthening his sales staff. Recent additions are, Mort Goldberg, formerly with Select; Frank Miller, who recently has returned from military service, and before joining the colors was a successful exhibitor; and Harry Robb, who also recently has been released from the army. Manager Levy reports one of the biggest contracts signed up in Chicago has been closed with the Harry Moir houses, who will take practically the entire Robertson-Cole output.

Hundreds of exhibitors were saddened last week by the news that J. A. Humphreys, veteran Vitagraph salesman for Indiana, had died with pneumonia, at the Palles Hotel, Fort Wayne, Indiana, following a brief illness. During the four years he had covered the territory he had endeared himself to all those connected with the industry and was known far and wide as "Dad." Vitagraph, on learning of his death, presented his widow with a substantial sum in token of its regard for "Dad." The body of Mr. Humphreys was taken to Paw Paw, Michigan, for burial.

A "Film Post For Film Folk" drive was planned at a meeting of Chicago Cinema Post 494 held at the Rothacker Film Mfg. Co's studio last week. A membership campaign will be started to get all Chicago war veterans, who are in any way connected with the motion picture industry, together into one American Legion Post. It is planned to launch the membership campaign with a dinner about the middle of April.

J. Allen Boone, in charge of production for Robertson-Cole on the west coast, stopped over in Chicago enroute to Los Angeles, last week, to visit with Exchange Manager Max Levy. Mr. Boone announced that the picturization of "Kismet," featuring the famous actor, Otis Skinner, who achieved a remarkable success in the play, will start within two months. This week two continuity writers are to join Mr. Skinner, who is on a tour, and start work on the continuity, by collaborating with Mr. Skinner. Mr. Boone regards this as one of the most important pictures Robertson-Cole has ever offered.

W. C. Hoffman, who, although not a veteran in years, is an old-timer in the moving picture industry, and who recently has been connected with the Mickey Film Corporation of Chicago, left for Kalamazoo, Michigan, Sunday to become manager of the Fuller Opera House and Elite Theatre, both of that city. These houses are owned by the Kalamazoo Amusement Company.

C. H. Ritter, president and H. H. Jonson, treasurer and managing director of the Luna Amusement Company which owns and operates the Luna, a 1,100 seat picture theatre at Lafayette, Ind., the Lyric a 1,000 seat house at Fort Wayne and the Luna, with 950 seats at Kankakee, Ill., announce that they will start the erection of a $250,000 theatre at Lafayette at an early date. A 77x150 foot lot already has been acquired and the new house it is said will be operated as a legitimate theatre. A $15,000 organ will be one of the features of the proposed theatre.

Edward Browarsky has purchased a lot at the corner of Sixty-third St., and Harper Ave., Chicago for a reported consideration of $170,000 and will erect a 3,300 seat theatre and a hotel and office building.

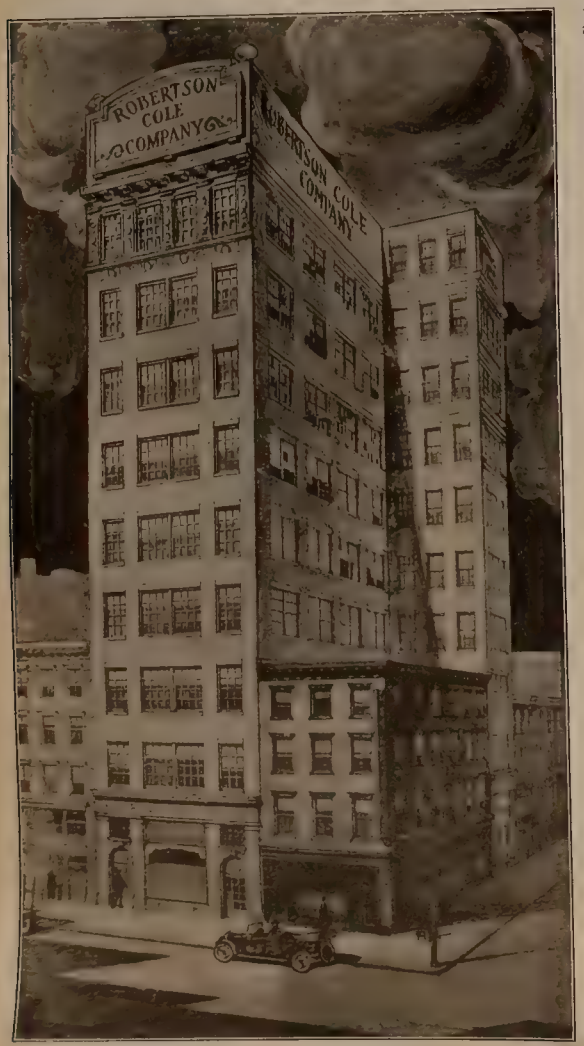
Robertson-Cole to Build Soon

To Have Own Home in Film Row; Work to Begin in April

TO house adequately its rapidly increasing volume of business, and to throw open to the world a New York headquarters for visiting motion picture exhibitors, the Robertson-Cole Company, which has grown from a vigorous infant to one of the most robust forces in the film world in little more than a year, now makes the announcement that it will erect at once its own home. Work is to start during April on a ten-story entirely fireproof building which will be situated at 723 Seventh Avenue, in the heart of America's motion picture administration world.

The company has in mind besides a building to care for its swiftly-growing business, which includes distribution to the domestic and foreign fields, a place where all exhibitors of the world can gather when in New York—whether Robertson-Cole clients or not—and avail themselves of a quiet nook in the city's whirl where stenographic service, a reference library and other conveniences with be given them absolutely free.

The new building, which will be erected of the best material available, is to be by, of and for Robertson-Cole. The company has purchased the site. It is now encumbered with an old five-story building which is to be razed at once. Upon this site Robertson-Cole will build the new structure which will belong to it exclusively. There will be no partnerships or associations. The building will be owned and erected by and entirely under the direct administration of Robertson-Cole at all times.



It will be a ten-story structure of reinforced concrete, and fireproof throughout. The first two floors will be of Bedford stone. Above this it will be face brick up to the last two stories, which will be of ornamental glazed tile.

The building will front on Seventh Avenue and will be in the shape of an "L", turning around into 48th Street, where it will also have frontage. It will be equipped with a full set of passenger elevators and in addition to this will have one freight elevator which will be for the carrying of film exclusively.

On the second floor of the building will be situated the Robertson-Cole New York City exchange, which will cover the Metropolitan and surrounding territory with Robertson-Cole film service. The main Robertson-Cole offices will be on the four upper floors. Here will be situated the Robertson-Cole executive offices and offices of the foreign department, and the home office of the Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation.

There will be two theatres on the roof. These will be utilized for the showing of film to press representatives, foreign buyers, and various persons interested in Robertson-Cole pictures. The best possible equipment will be installed in these theatres, including four standard machines. Two operators will constantly be on duty to project pictures. This will double the present facilities of Robertson-Cole for the screening of pictures.

As a most unusual feature of these two theatres, on the top floor of the building, there will be installed a suitable organ. This will enable the company to give special exhibitions at various times to which guests will be invited, as well as to screen a picture with musical accompaniment so obtaining the exact effect of a regular theatre showing. Opportunity also will be given for the work of the men who are concerned in making the full musical setting which goes with each Robertson-Cole picture.

Read's Agent to Make Wide Sales Tour

Sig Schlager, general press representative for J. Parker Read, Jr. productions, left New York last week on a tour of thirty principal cities of the country as Read's special sales representative on a campaign of exploitation and investigation into selling conditions.

Schlager has been in New York nearly six weeks with J. Parker Read, Jr., during the conferences of the Associated Producers. He broke into the publicity game with Universal, when Tarkington Baker first took hold of the exploitation machine. Since then he has conducted his own bureau in Los Angeles and has represented the Louis J. Gasnier-Sydney Cohan interests and has acted as personal representative for Lew Cody.

Notes of the New York F.I.L.M. Club

Mr. Norman Moray, having succeeded Mr. Fred Salinger as New York Branch Manager of Republic Distributing Corporation, attended last meeting, and his return was enthusiastically welcomed.

The Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation was unanimously voted to membership. Manager Goldfarb was given the regular initiation ceremony.

Mr. Buxbaum, chairman of Jersey Sunday Opening Committee, reported passage of a Sunday Law in Jersey was almost certain.

President Chadwick appointed a Committee of Six, headed by Mr. Joseph Klein, to co-operate with a committee from New York Exhibitors League in raising funds for the Benefit of Visiting Nurses.

Keefe Appointed Production Manager on Coast

Wm. E. Keefe has been engaged by the American Lifeograph Company which has studios and laboratories at Portland, Oregon, and he will serve as production manager. Keefe's initial work will be that of supervising the making of a series of two reel situation comedies based on a futuristic plot construction conceived by Keefe.

Bob Gray, formerly of Lasky who later directed Judge Brown's juvenile stories and Shorty Hamilton stories, will be in charge of the direction, and principals will be Parke Jones, Claire Morris and Eugenie Gilbert.

Neilan Picture Makes $75,000 in a Week

What is thought by motion picture sales experts to be the record on the weekly gross business of a photoplay after the first runs have been completed was reached last week by Marshall Neilan's first independent production released through First National, "The River's End". In its fourth week after release date, contracts for the production were approved by the Marshall Neilan organization aggregating $75,000. This total sale for one week, it was pointed out at the Neilan offices in New York, is not the result of a concentrated sales drive for a given period to attain a record amount as is often done by companies desiring to make an exceptional showing, but comes as natural sales resulting from the exceptional business the photoplay is playing to wherever booked.

W. O. Hurst Engaged by Whitman Bennett

W. O. Hurst, for the past year supervisor of production of non-fiction subjects for Famous Players-Lasky, tendered his resignation last week, effective March 27, to join Whitman Bennett as studio manager. The resignation of Whitman Bennett as production manager for Famous Players was announced two weeks ago and is now pending. Mr. Bennett is announced to have signed up Lionel Barrymore for a series of pictures and will enter the producing field for himself.

LEE KUGEL'S Memorable Broadway Stage Success

OLD LADY 31

by RACHEL CROTHERS

OLD LADY 31 ~ when produced by LEE KUGEL on Broadway, was one of the greatest theatrical successes New York ever saw. It ran for more than a year and later for long engagements in Philadelphia, Boston, Chicago & other large cities.

It's heart-reaching story revolves about Angie Rose and her husband Abe. For fifty years they have lived and loved side by side. Then comes poverty & the prospect of separation — he to go to the poor house and she to the old women's home.

At the gate of the home for aged women Abe is invited to become an inmate. Labeled "Old Lady 31" ~ he is the sole male ~ he enters into the life of the institution. Finally he can stand it no longer: "I dunno whether I'm a woman or a man," he wails and runs away.

What happens after that makes this one of the quaintest and most tender stories ever screened.

Prints of Nazimova's New Picture Ready

The first completed prints of Nazimova's newest picture, "The Heart of a Child," have arrived at the New York offices of Metro, in the Longacre Building, from the big coast studios at Hollywood, where this screen production of the most famous of Frank Danby's novels was done.

In the case of the Danby story, Nazimova is Sally Snope, a child of the London slums, born and raised to girlhood in a sordid, poverty-stricken environment as devoid of ideals as of clean collars.

Charles Bryant, also depicting in the production the important role of Lord Kidderminster, adapted the story for the screen and constructed the scenario from which the director, Ray C. Smallwood, worked. Allen Ruoff designed the special art settings.

Lucy Cotton in Latest Chautard Picture

Mayflower's first announcement concerning the cast of its new Emile Chautard production divulges the fact that Lucy Cotton will be seen in the leading feminine role. The statement also carries the information that Director Chautard has completed the work of cutting and assembling the film and is now engaged in titling.

In addition to Miss Cotton, the cast of the new Chautard subject will contain a number of players well known to the Broadway stage and the screen. No individual player will be featured, however. The picture will be designated as "An Emile Chautard Production."

Kane Pictures Have New Office in New York

The Arthur S. Kane Pictures Corporation has moved to its new offices in the National Association Building at 25 West 43d street, New York. The lease to these quarters was signed several weeks ago, but delay in construction work on the new building prevented moving sooner. The young corporation has had its temporary quarters in the Knox Building at Fortieth street and Fifth avenue.

Universal Contest Under Way

Exhibitors Suggest Names for Single-Reel Novelty

A GREAT many suggestions have come in as a result of Universal's advertisement in last week's issue of this publication, in which offering $250 to the exhibitor who could suggest a name for its new single reel novelty release. Judging from the number of names suggested, it is plainly evident that the board of judges, which has the final sayso in selecting the winning title, faces a task of gigantic proportions.

On or about June 1st, Universal plans to issue a new novelty reel. This release will be by Hal Hodes, managing editor of the New Screen Magazine. It will contain among other things, a new idea in slow motion films, adventure scenics, startling examples of trick photography, and other unusual material. The question of cost in making up this release is not being considered, it being Universal's determination to make its latest offering the best novelty reel this industry has ever known.

In putting the task of christening the subject up to the exhibitors of the United States and Canada, Universal has made a radical departure from the usual policy. It is the belief of the executives of that organization that the exhibitor should best know what kind of name possesses the most drawing power.

The personnel of the board of judges, which will pass upon all the names submitted, consists of S. Barrett McCormick, managing director, Circle theatre, Indianapolis; James L. Hoff, Moving Picture World, and William A. Johnston,

Hal Hodes, editor of Universal's Screen Magazine

Motion Picture News. Upon these men devolves the task of ascertaining the most striking title. Incidently, should two or more exhibitors suggest the winning name, each will receive an amount equal to the prize itself.

Universal Camera Correspondents, now operating in Europe and Asia Minor, have already obtained much excellent footage of a strange and unusual nature. Among several of the subjects already produced are actual scenes showing the Dyak, head hunters of Borneo on the war path and engaged in a foray against their enemies; actual pictures of an engagement between Chinese revolutionists, and African sacrifice dances taken on the upper reaches of the Congo and strange rituals of the semi-civilized folk on the Mongolian frontier.

"In putting the production of this release up to me," said Mr. Hodes, "Carl Laemmle, the head of our organization, told me to spare neither time nor expense. It is his ambition to show the trade a reel which will book on sight. The material already secured makes it certain that Mr. Laemmle will have this ambition gratified.

"We have obtained a number of unusual cartoons, and of these we are assured a regular supply. In addition to all them, we have a little surprise up our sleeves, which will not be announced until shortly before the reel itself is ready for release. The latter feature alone will cause the new novelty reel to be booked on sight."

The prize contest was begun on Friday, March 26th. It closes midnight, April 30th. There is only one restriction to the contest. No name which contains the word "magazine" will be considered. Exhibitors are requested by Universal to forward their suggestions to Hal Hodes, Universal Film Manufacturing Company, 1600 Broadway, New York City, making sure that the names of their theatres and addresses are indicated clearly on their lists of title suggestions. No limit is placed on the number of names each contestant may submit.

Ince and Read Return Home

Producers Reach Coast After Four Weeks' Visit in East

BOUND 'round with optimism and smiles that mirrored the pleasures of a four weeks' sojourn in New York City, Thomas H. Ince and J. Parker Read, Jr., arrived in Los Angeles last Friday as prominent members of the local press and a party of relatives and associates of the Ince Studios in Culver City bade "welcome home" to the crusading producers.

Messrs. Ince and Read voiced enthusiastic regard for the cordial reception tendered in Gotham by exhibitors and publishers of representative trade journals, New York dailies and various magazines devoted to the motion picture industry. According to the producers, their visit in the East was one continuous round of "get together" affairs and banquets and the interest assumed in the future plans of the "Big Six" Associated Producers was both encouraging and inspiring.

"I take this second opportunity to thank the exhibitors, motion picture press, New York newspapers and magazines, for their most courteous and sincere receptions," said Thomas H. Ince. "The publishers and representatives of The Moving Picture World, The Motion Picture News, Exhibitor's Trade Review, Wid's Daily, and other journals demonstrated a cooperative spirit that pleased us greatly."

Messrs. Ince and Read also expressed their appreciation of the welcome accorded during the stopover in Chicago. Scribes of the Windy City dailies greeted the delegates at the Hotel LaSalle and devoted much space in their respective columns to a resume of the current and coming movements of the "Big Six."

Asked his opinion of trade conditions in New York and Chicago, Mr. Ince replied very emphatically that the forecast is unusually bright and replete with big opportunities for both the exhibitor and the producer.

"Our discussions with prominent exhibitors and leaders in the distributing field supported my own convictions that the industry faces a new era of prosperity and progress," Mr. Ince said.

"Generally speaking, the evidence was quite conclusive that the day of the author and the producer is at hand, and that the successful exhibitors now fully realize the necessity of big productions, big stories, big casts and faultless direction.

"Exhibitors are buying pictures on merit only. They have learned to distinguish the really fine, universally appealing production from the inferior film that 'gets over' mainly by force of exaggerated exploitation and advertising.

"One of the outstanding, and most pleasing, impressions of our visit in New York was the growing tendency of the exhibitor, the producer and the distributor to cooperate for the advancement and general welfare of the industry. It is evident that the industry appreciates the importance of unity in all things and I was altogether impressed by the willingness of exhibitors to lend their endorsement and wholehearted support to movements which designed to further protect and advance the best interests of the trade."

Hampton Picks Winner in "Sagebrusher"

Benjamin B. Hampton showed good choice of screen material in his selection of Emerson Hough's "The Sagebrusher" for production as a big Great Authors special. A year ago there were exhibitors who questioned both his judgment and wisdom in producing on a large, liberal scale multi-reel portrayals of so-called western stories. During the past few days the picture has been booked in Indianapolis, Pasadena, Cal., Wilmington, Del., and many other cities.

William H. Crane, Viola Dana, Sid Grauman and other celebrities meet on Metro's West Coast lot

Metro Changes Its Plans

Viola Dana Will Not Be Starred in "Parlor, Bedroom and Bath"

METRO PICTURES CORPORATION announces that it will picturize the successful stage comedy, "Parlor, Bedroom and Bath," by C. W. Bell and Mark Swan, as a big special production with an all-star cast, instead of, as at first planned, using it as a starring vehicle for Viola Dana. As two of the featured players in this de luxe special, officials at Metro's west coast studios in Hollywood have engaged Ruth Stonehouse and Eugene Pallette, both of them seen prominently in recent Metro productions.

Miss Stonehouse will play the leading feminine role of Polly Hathaway, a society reporter, in "Parlor, Bedroom and Bath." She has just finished playing in "The Hope," the Drury Lane melodrama by Cecil Raleigh and Henry Hamilton. It was with the old Essanay Company that Miss Stonehouse made her debut in motion pictures. She has also played with Triangle, Lasky, Universal and other organizations. Before the inauguration of Metro's "fewer and better" specials, Miss Stonehouse appeared in a Metro program picture as leading woman for Hale Hamilton.

Eugene Pallette has had a long and varied career in the silent drama. He has appeared in a number of recent Metro productions, among them "Fair and Warmer," with May Allison, and "Alias Jimmy Valentine," with Bert Lytell.

A. P. Younger prepared the scenario for "Parlor, Bedroom and Bath," and Edward Dillon, a new acquisition to the Metro directorial forces, will direct the all-star production.

Laboratory Has New Vault

Rothacker Company Provides Safe For Negatives in Chicago Studio

A FIRE and bomb proof vault is now ready at the Rothacker Chicago Studio-Laboratory to receive 6,000,000 feet of negative. Cinema engineers have said that hardly anything short of a direct hit by a 16-inch shell could touch a Rathacker client's negative once it is inside that vault.

It is really five vaults, one within another. First is an outer wall of reinforced, waterproof concrete and brick, twenty-four inches thick. Within this vault, inside a 6 inch "air cushion," is another vault of similar construction. And within this second vault are built five vaults sealed with automatically closing steel doors.

The "air cushion" between the outer and second vaults is for ventilation and insulation. It will aid in keeping the heat out in the summer and the cold in winter, the same temperature is to be maintained inside the inner vaults the year around. A specially designed brick ventilation shaft, which rises about fifteen feet above the remainder of the vault, will permit the free passage of air currents into and out of the inner vaults. Thus there will be no chance for the accumulation of film fumes.

There are no electric switches inside the film vaults. The film vault at the Rothacker plant, which is now being built in Los Angeles, will be patterned after this one. So will the vaults of the laboratories which are to be erected in New York and London.

Walsh Picture Ready Soon

Producer Nears End of "The Deep Purple," for Mayflower Release

THE motion picture rights to "The Deep Purple", the stage success by Paul Armstrong and Wilson Mizner, have been purchased by R. A. Walsh and will be used by him as his first production for Mayflower Photoplay Corporation under the recent affiliation. Work on the production has been virtually completed and it is booked for early release through Realart.

"The Deep Purple" was one of the most successful plays of the late Paul Armstrong. It was originally produced by Liebler & Co., at the Princess Theatre in Chicago on October 3rd, 1910. After a three months run there it moved to the Lyric Theatre in New York City, where it opened on January 9, 1911, and played for more than a year.

The play had a long career in road companies about the country and after nine years is still being played by stock companies. In the original cast of players were Emmett Corrigan, James A. Finney, Ada Dwyer, Catherine Calvert, wife of the playwright, Paul Armstrong, and Richard Bennett.

"In addition to being a proved stage success," said Mr. Walsh in explaining his selection of the drama, "the play must be adaptable to the screen. All good stage material is not good screen material necessarily. Particularly is this true of stage farces and comedies. A good melodrama is good as a general rule, whether as a novel, play or photoplay. That's an axiom of the trade.

"The Deep Purple" is a clean, human and vital drama. Let that be known as the Walsh policy, and a rigid one — super-features which contain the heart punch minus morbidness. I am confident it is going to prove a popular policy with the exhibitors and am very happy that the recent affiliation with Mayflower will give it the enterprising promotion of the youthful but energetic Realart organization."

Three-Week Run on Film

The Playhouse, Chicago, Presents Equity's "The Forbidden Woman"

EQUITY Pictures announce the opening of Clara Kimball Young in "The Forbidden Woman" at the Playhouse theatre, Chicago, beginning Sunday, March 28, for a three-week run as the minimum stay at that house.

Coincident with the booking of "The Forbidden Woman" in Chicago, Equity has added another feather in its policy-cap of few, but great productions, for it has the distinction of being the choice out of fourteen feature productions, is the announcement.

An unusual publicity and exploitation campaign will be given the picture, under the personal supervision of Harry L. Reichenbach, Equity's vice-president, who left for Chicago last week. As Mr. Reichenbach conducted the entire exploitation of "The Forbidden Woman" for its run at the Capitol theatre here, for which he carried on a blind campaign in the New York daily papers for four weeks prior to the opening of the picture and terminating with blazes of green color thrown on the sky as a means of informing the public at which house the picture would be shown, it is not unlikely that similar methods will be used by him in Chicago.

It is with no small degree of interest that Equity enters on the run of "The Forbidden Woman" at the Playhouse, following so shortly the showing of "Eyes of Youth" in that theatre. "Eyes of Youth," being the first of the Equity releases of the Clara Kimball Young pictures to be shown in Chicago, received initial attention from Equity in exploitation and publicity aids.

Pearl White, Fox star, who has just completed her second production for the Fox program, "The Tiger's Cub," as she appeared just before she sailed for France

Pearl White Leaves to Make European Tour

Pearl White sailed for Havre last Saturday on the French liner La Savoie for the purpose of making a tour of Europe and enjoying a rest from her picture activities. According to a report from the William Fox offices, a large crowd was on hand outside of the pier to catch a glimpse of the star and bid her a "Bon Voyage."

Miss White recently completed the "Tiger's Cub," which will be cut and titled by Charles Giblyn, who directed her in this production. Miss White will tour Great Britain and the continent, and will gather material for several Fox features. She will select costumes which it is planned she will wear in these forthcoming plays. It is expected that Miss White will remain in Europe about six weeks. The settings for her next picture will be erected in her absence.

Eminent Authors Pictures Profitable

"From an idea and an ideal, the production of Eminent Authors Pictures has become a profitable commercial reality," said Felix F. Feist, vice president and manager of sales for the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation. "We thought it was a big thing to get the big stories for the screen and put them on with fitting casts. We are sure about it now. Such pictures as the Eminent Authors are making assure the exhibitor both prestige and profit. Just as surely as big stories are the only sound foundation on which to build big pictures, they are also the cornerstone or the keystone of the arch of exhibitor showmanship."

"Dangerous Talent" Has Good Criticisms

Very favorable criticisms are coming from the press following the first runs of "The Dangerous Talent," starring Margarita Fisher. A "Jim the Penman" type of story, the plot takes an entirely new and unique slant with a pretty innocent girl naturally gifted with a forger's uncanny ability to copy handwriting.

"Put this down as the most consistent picture ever produced with Margarita Fisher as the non-smiling heroine," says the Cincinnati Billboard. A critic in The Dramatic Mirror also commends its strength of plot and interest.

Endorse J. D. Williams' Stand

Three More Letters Approve Tenor of Recent Remarks

ADDITIONAL letters, endorsing the statements of J. D. Williams, manager of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, apropos the alleged invasion of the exhibiting field by producer-exhibitor interests, have been received from various exhibitors, each one adding the quota of his own personal experiences to lend confirmation to Mr. Williams' main contention. The pertinent paragraphs of three of the communications received are submitted in the following:

Martin McSherry, manager of the Lincoln Way theatre, Gettysburg, Pa., writes:

"The automobile dealers of Gettysburg wouldn't pay the exorbitant prices of the Atlantic Refining Company if they had any other place to buy their gasoline. We are in the same predicament. We wouldn't pay the prices of these producer-distributor companies and submit to their terms if we had any other place to get good pictures.

"My remarks are promoted by a careful survey of the contents of articles written by Willard C. Patterson, of Atlanta, and J. D. Williams, manager of the First National Exhibitor's Circuit in last week's MOTION PICTURE NEWS, calling upon all independent exhibitors to 'awake or be annihilated.'

"I cannot say too much against the present situation in the motion picture world. This tendency of producer-distributor companies to get a monopoly on everything is bound to prove ruinous. I agree with the statements of Mr. Williams in everything that applies to small towns. I am thoroughly awake to the situation but do not believe that any chain of motion picture houses owned and controlled by the producer-distributor companies can get a foothold in Gettysburg or other small towns in this immediate vicinity. The people know who has furnished them good pictures for many previous years and can be made to see the situation through proper newspaper publicity. In the cities, however, the matter is growing alarming.

"By this present system the exhibitors are slaves to the will of the producer. They tell us what pictures to take and we even have trouble getting a transfer through at a late date. No better example of their tactics could be shown than that of an agent who came to my rival exhibitor here, offered him a recent big feature for $100 and then, after the contract had been signed, came to me and sold me the picture rights for $115. I did not know until some days later that a paltry $15 had caused him to take that action. The first contract was then returned to my fellow exhibitor."

From William Dowling, Central Square Theatre, East Boston, Mass., comes the following:

"The mind of the independent exhibitor rightly is in a disturbed state these days. The claims, counter-claims, hints, warnings, pleadings and threats coming to him in varied shapes and guises form cause enough for this. Add to these the very timely warning to we independent exhibitors by Mr. J. D. Williams in the last issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS. The exhibitor sees threats in the moving condition about him. He is told not to sell and he is coaxed to sell. Generally he is undecided whether he has not forfeited his right to live and possess because he owns a theatre. But if he is made of the stuff that makes life worth while he will run his business himself and operate with his own judgment, taking, as he hitherto has done, his losses with his gains, and use the brain God gave him to control his future movements.

"The invasion of the exhibiting field by producers cannot but produce in the sensible exhibitor's mind a resentment that is as rebellious in spirit as ever a Bolshevist treasured. He feels that therein is a vicious invasion of his rights as vendor of the producers' products. Such competition as will result if allowed to grow unchecked is despotic and against all recognized rules of proper trade conditions. He is placed in the condition of fighting against an insidious foe for his existence with the cards stacked against him. Of course, he is fighting to check this if he has any valor at all."

Elwyn Simons, manager of the New Family and Garden Theatres, Adrian, Mich., writes:

"There is no alternative for independent exhibitors but to view with apprehension the announced plans of large motion picture companies of invading the exhibition field and operating their own picture houses. Competition would be virtually impossible on the part of individual exhibitors if the move is carried out.

"Competition will be eliminated if the producers seek to operate their own theatres. I feel that there is a separate field for producer, distributor and exhibitor and that neither should overstep his bounds. We have seen what the lack of competition has accomplished as regards the railroads during the war and I am sure the public would not welcome the dissolution of competition among the various parts of the motion picture industry."

Third Mrs. Bell Story Purchased by Fox

A third story written by Pearl Doles Bell has been purchased by William Fox as a vehicle for his star, Shirley Mason. "The Little Pagan" is the title under which the story was purchased.

The name of the director is not yet announced, nor has the cast to support Shirley Mason been selected, but upon the completion of "Love's Harvest," these details will be published and the star, after suitable rest, will start the production of her third Pearl Doles Bell story, "The Little Pagan."

Milton Sills Cast for Melford Production

Milton Sills has been specially engaged for George Melford's production, "The Translation of a Savage," by Sir Gilbert Parker. For this picture there has been chosen virtually an all-star cast, including Elliott Dexter, Mabel Juliene Scott, Ann Forrest, Helen Dunbar, Fred Huntley.

Mr. Sills will appear in two later productions also to be directed by Mr. Melford.

Harry Carey Feature to Be Released

Film Specials announces that it will release the Excel Pictures' first release, "The Square-Shooter", starring Harry Carey. This picture will be released on the state rights market.

Marion Davies Greeted by Capitol Audience

Such an enthusiastic reception as few celebrities have ever received was accorded Marion Davies, Cosmopolitan Productions' star, when she made a personal appearance last Sunday, March 28th, at the Capitol Theatre, New York, in connection with the premiere of her latest starring picture, "April Folly."

Escorted by Robert W. Chambers, Messmore Kendall, president of the Capitol Theatre, and several other notable men and women, Miss Davies entered the huge auditorium during the showing of "April Folly" and sat in a box on the right hand side. In the darkness she was not recognized, but when the feature was done and the lights came up the audience of approximately 5,300 persons greeted her with great applause. Nor would they be stilled until Miss Davies, blushing and somewhat taken aback by the spontaneous outburst, stood up and bowed for fully a minute.

This was Miss Davies' first personal appearance in connection with any of her own productions. It was not intended as such, however, as Miss Davies had gone to the theatre as the guest of Mr. Chambers and Mr. Kendall only to witness the premiere of "April Folly." She was also their guest at dinner in the theatre's own restaurant.

Hatch Feature Service Formed in Boston

Announcement has been received from Boston that Charles L. Hatch, prominent theatre owner of that city, has entered the field of Independent Exchanges and has formed the Hatch Feature Service of Boston, Mass. According to Mr. Hatch it is stated that the purpose of this new concern is to handle the independent distribution of big features and up to date specials for the New England States.

Bessie Love Starts Work

Has Begun on Her First Independent Production — "The Midlanders"

FOLLOWING the announcement last week that the Andrew J. Callaghan Productions, Inc., have formed a company to star Bessie Love in big story vehicles, with high class direction and production, comes the further news from Los Angeles that the star has already begun work on "The Midlanders" the widely read novel from the pen of Charles Tenney Jackson.

Joseph de Grasse and Ida May Park, each of them credited with the successful direction of such stars as Dorothy Phillips, Priscilla Dean, Sessue Hayakawa, Dorothy Dalton, Lew Cody and others, have undertaken supervision of Miss Love in her first picture.

Calling for an initial outlay of thousands of dollars for picture rights to "The Midlander" and for the services of the distinguished pair of directors, the Callaghan organization is fulfilling its intention, published last week, of placing this talented young actress in surroundings which will bring out in a bigger way than ever her undisputed dramatic ability.

"It will be evident at once to discerning exhibitors," said Mr. Callaghan in a statement from Los Angeles, "that the business men who are placing unlimited capital at the disposal of Miss Love and her directors have tremendous faith in her ability to do something for the screen that will surpass by far anything she has ever done previously. Our faith is being expressed in dollars and cents devoted to the purchase of the best directorial talent, the most suited vehicles adapted from first class novels and plays and the highest class production all around.

"As our first step in this direction we have secured the picture rights to the famous American novel, 'The Midlanders' by Charles Tenney Jackson. This dramatic narrative of pioneer society in the booming and colorful Mississippi Valley is tense with action, and running through it is a human story of love that hurdles the obstacles of the years and finds itself dramatically triumphant in the end. Miss Love has been dreaming of such an opportunity for years, to find herself in a character that requires the expression of every human emotion, a character with the depth of real life and place in a narrative alive with action."

Heath and Gates Begin Scripts for Metro

Percy Heath and Harvey H. Gates, who recently were added to the scenario staff at the Metro studios in Hollywood, Calif., are already busy on the construction of continuities for forthcoming Metro releases.

Mr. Heath has begun work on Viola Dana's next starring production, "Head and Shoulders," a story by F. Scott Fitzgerald, recently published in The Saturday Evening Post, and Mr. Gates is doing, as his initial script, "Held in Trust," by George Kibbe Turner.

Blanche Sweet Picture Due on Big Circuits

With practically every large theatre in the Metropoliton district under contract to show the latest Blanche Sweet production "The Deadlier Sex," and with the leading theatres throughout the country bidding for dates, the picture is destined to be the greatest success of Blanche Sweet's career, according to all reports received at Pathe Exchange. Many of the bookings were made on the reputation established by "A Woman of Pleasure" and "Fighting Cressy," but hundreds of exhibitors have signed contracts after privately reviewing the latest picture, "The Deadlier Sex," it is stated.

All the Keith and Proctor houses will show the picture and the Fox and Loew houses have also contracted for it. In Connecticut it will be played at all the S. Z. Poli theatres.

Glaum Melodrama is Breaking Records

Exhibitor demand for Louise Glaum productions resulted last week in the signing by the W. W. Hodkinson managers of contracts in excess of five hundred bookings on "The Lone Wolf's Daughter," all of these contracts being in cities of upwards of 50,000 population. This Louis Joseph Vance melodrama has attained a booking level in fourteen weeks seldom equalled by the pictures of most of the stars of the screen.

Jack Mulhill Signed by Famous Players

Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, announces that Jack Mulhall has just been placed under a long-term contract to play leading roles in Paramount-Artcraft pictures, including special productions, and those with noted stars.

Articles on Production Methods in Dailies

Heading the list of a special syndicate service directed to the foremost metropolitan newspapers, Sunday magazine sections and pictorial supplements is a series of articles on Thomas H. Ince's methods of production, giving in straightforward, concise terms his heretofore unpublished views on matters of general interest to the motion picture public and exhibitors. Hunt Stromberg, Ince's publicity director, is the author.

Latest reports from the Ince studios claim that twenty big metropolitan newspapers, included among which are The Chicago Daily Journal, the Kansas City Star, The New Orleans Item, The Los Angeles Herald, The Cleveland News-Leader, The Dallas Times-Herald, The Milwaukee Sentinel, The Duluth News-Tribune, The Vancouver Sunday Sun, The Waco Times-Herald, The Richmond Evening Journal, The Manchester Daily American, The Winnipeg Tribune, The Great Falls (Mont.) Tribune, The Baltimore Sun, and The Tacoma Ledger, are now running the entire series.

Former Newspaper Man with Goldwyn-Bray

The Bray Pictures Corporation, producers of the Goldwyn-Bray Pictograph—"the Magazine On The Screen", announces that Lyne S. Metcalfe, formerly general manager of Moving Picture Age and Sunday editor of the Chicago Tribune, has been appointed director of the Industrial Scenario Department of that company.

Mr. Metcalfe was for 10 years connected with leading newspapers in New York and Chicago in an executive capacity and has been for some years a successful writer of magazine articles, moving picture scenarios and advertising. Mr. Metcalfe will conduct the bureau devoted to the study of the various business films to be made by the Bray Studios and will superintend the writing of scenarios.

Chicago "Exhibs" Dine Priscilla Dean

"The Virgin of Stamboul" was the guest of honor at the Morrison Hotel, Chicago, last week, when five hundred of the Windy City's leading exhibitors gathered there to welcome her.

Harry M. Berman, general manager of Exchanges for Universal, assisted by I. L. Leserman, Chicago branch manager, presented the little lady to the Chicago showmen. It was one of the most successful trade showings ever held in that city. The picture has been booked at the Playhouse for an indefinite run.

H. A. Ross Made Ass't Sales Manager

H. A. Ross, formerly manager of the Detroit Exchange of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has been appointed assistant sales-manager of that organization and assumed his new duties at the home office in New York, March 15. He is succeeded as branch manager at Detroit by Charles S. Perry, formerly assistant manager.

Star is Signed for Pathe Serials

CHARLES HUTCHISON, the star whose performance in "The Great Gamble" and other productions won him his present reputation as one of the premier daredevil and stunt men of screen serials, has signed a contract to star in four serials for Pathe, it was announced by that company this week.

The contract becomes effective in April, and the first picture Hutchison will do for Pathe under the new agreement is to be producted at the Robert Brunton studios in Los Angeles under the supervision of Robert Brunton. The scenario has been selected for the first picture but no information as to the author or of production plans were given, further than a statement by one of the officials of Pathe that a picture on the scale of "Daredevil Jack" as regards settings and details of production would be provided.

Mr. Hutchison left New York Tuesday, March 23rd for the Coast.

He was accompanied by his wife and stated that he would make a stop-over in Pittsburgh to visit with his parents there. He will arrive in Los Angeles, according to present plans, in the middle of April and expects to find everything in readiness at the Brunton studio for him to commence work.

Charles Hutchinson serial daredevil, now under contract with Pathe to star in thrillers

Hutchison made his first appearance as a serial star with Pathe in "Wolves of Kultur". His second picture, "The Great Gamble," has been pronounced one of the greatest stunt serials produced. He is credited with having actually done all the stunts shown in his pictures and as never having called in the services of a specialist for a special feat of daring during his career.

He began his picture career as a member of the Old Victor Company after several years of experience on the dramatic and vaudeville stage.

Later he accepted an engagement with Joseph A. Golden to play leading roles and for a time directed one of the companies. When Mr Golden decided to make the serial "Wolves of Kultur," he cast Mr. Hutchison for an important role, and as a result of his work Mr. Hutchison was starred in "The Great Gamble."

In announcing the new contract Pathe states that the return of Hutchison to the serial program of that company is an important step toward the fulfillment of the announced policy of Pathe to furnish their exhibitors with the biggest and best serial productions posible.

A Studio Secured by Bennett

WHITMAN Bennett announces that he has leased the former Triangle Studio on Riverdale Avenue, Yonkers, New York, and that it is his intention to make this a permanent institution for the production of his special pictures to be released through the First National Exhibitors' Circuit. The first series of these pictures, for which arrangements have been completed, will be four subjects in which Lionel Barrymore will appear as the star.

In order that the Barrymore productions may be made under the very best conditions, Mr. Bennett has completely refitted the studio, installing modern lighting apparatus and all known conveniences and helps for director and artist. The studio, which has heretofore been operated on alternating electric current, will hereafter be operated on direct current, for which purpose an elaborate motor generator has already been put into service.

The laboratory attached to the studio, has also been completely overhauled so that the negatives will be developed and the sample prints made right on the premises from day to day while the pictures are in work.

Although Mr. Bennett made his arrangements with Mr. Barrymore only a month ago, work has progressed so rapidly that Mr. Barrymore will begin his first picture on Monday, April 12th. Although the pictures are to be made strictly under Mr. Bennett's direct supervision, he is taking toward his work the attitude of the regular theatrical manager and is fortifying himself by employing known experts in every department.

The director for the first two Barrymore pictures will be Kenneth Webb, who has been favorably known in connection with the direction of Vitagraph and Famous Players subjects with important stars. Mr. Webb is one of the younger generation of directors, a university man and an acknowledged artistic talent of high order. His assistant will be his brother, Roy Webb, who has been associated with Kenneth in many undertakings.

The head of the Technical Staff will be R. E. Wortham, formerly the head technical man in New York for the Goldwyn Film Company. The chief photographer will be Tom Griffith, who dates from old Biograph days and has been for some four or five years one of the main members of D. W. Griffith's photographic staff, and the art director will be Miss Phyllis Dodson, who has been for several years connected with the School of Interior Decorating at Columbia University and who is a specialist on costumes as well as decorations. The Business Manager of the Studio will be W. O. Hurst, for several years the Manager of the Paramount Magazine.

It is Mr. Bennett's hope that he may be able to turn the Yonkers Studio into a genuine craftsman workshop. In addition to the studio and the laboratory, the premises include a large dwelling house formerly occupied by the famous actress, Clara Morris, and this house is being turned into a combination office and library.

Clyde Cook, eccentric dancer and comedian, who has joined the William Fox Company to be featured in Sunshine comedies

Fox Acquires Clyde Cook

New York Hippodrome Favorite To be Seen in Sunshine Comedies

WITH the close of the night show at the New York Hippodrome on Saturday last, Clyde Cook, eccentric comedian and dancer, made his last bow to a theatre audience from the speaking stage for the season. Early Sunday morning, Mr. Cook boarded a train at Grand Central Terminal bound for sunny California and the William Fox motion picture studios at Hollywood.

For the past thirty weeks Clyde Cook has been featured with the great Hippodrome bill and has amused thousands of New Yorkers and visitors from all corners of the earth with his antics on the big stage of this amphitheatre.

Beginning April 1st, Mr. Cook becomes a member of the Fox Sunshine Comedy forces at the studios of Fox Film Corporation in Hollywood. His admirers now will see him featured in the Sunshine Comedies in roles which will permit him to display his unique talents to the greatest advantage, than heretofore. He will be surrounded by a silent chorus of bautiful girls such as afforded him so effective a background in his comedy work at the Hippodrome.

Hampton Del Ruth, supervising director of the Sunshine Comedies, has already prepared the outline of the first picture Mr. Cook will make, and it is thought that Del Ruth will personally direct his initial production for Fox. Every facility of course, will be afforded the comedian to make his debut under the Fox banner noteworthy.

Exhibitors Buying Organs

Bartola Company Reports Great Demand for Its Instruments

DAN BARTON, of the Bartola Musical Instrument Company, has returned to Chicago after a trip north as far as Duluth, Minn., and reports that the demand for high-class organs to replace old instruments in theatres already erected and for new theatres, is phenomenal.

Mr. Barton states that the rush of contracts being made by the Bartola Musical Instrument Company will tax the capacity of his enlarged plant, and said that within the last ten days the following theatres have ordered instruments installed: R. H. Vanes, Coldwater, Mich., operating the Tibbets theatre; Paul J. Schlossman, Muskegon, Mich., a large Bartola for his Muskegon Heights theatre; R. H. Miner, Rice Lake, Wis., operating the Unique theatre; Rex Theatre Company of Duluth, Minn., a Bartola for their $500,000 theatre now in course of erection at West Duluth; A. J. Latts, one of the most prominent exhibitors in the Northwest, has purchased an organ for his Royal theatre in Ashland, Wis.; W. M. Ainsworth, Fond du Lac, Wis., has purchased a Bartola for his new theatre now in the course of erection; Themer Bros., Chateau theatre, Kankakee, Ill., have also purchased one for the Palace theatre which they are equipping, and Geo. Fleischman, of the New World theatre, who is soon to open a $500,000 neighborhood house in Toledo, Ohio, has purchased a new model Barton Organ for his theatre.

Earle in Mayflower Film

EDWARDE EARLE, who was starred by Vitagraph in the O. Henry series and other important productions, has the leading male role of Morgan Kleath in Charles Miller's production of "The Law of the Yukon," presented by Mayflower Photoplay Corporation.

The picture is now being cut and assembled by Director Miller in New York City after completion of the camera work during the winter at Port Henry, N. Y. The story is based on Robert W. Service's poem, "The Law of the Yukon," and Director Miller promises something new and entirely different from anything presented on the screen before of Yukon life.

In addition to Edwarde Earle, the leading roles are filled by June Elvidge, Nancy Deaves, a newcomer to the American screen; Nadine Nash, Warburton Gamble, Thomas O'Malley, Bigelow Cooper, Joseph Smiley and John Dillion.

According to the policy followed in Mayflower features, no player is to be starred in the cast, but each one will be featured in accordance with his importance in the production. This principle casting has been found to produce more balanced results and to accentuate the story and the production.

Edwarde Earl, according to Mr. Miller, was peculiarly suited to the role of Morgan Kleath, the man from outside in the story, who comes to Gold City to establish a local newspaper and bring with him the more civilized standards of life.

New photograph of Edward Earle, who has joined Mayflower

The feature will be released by Realart Pictures Corporation, and, although no release date has been set for it as yet, it is expected that prints will be ready for exhibitors within a month's time.

Coast Missions as Locales

Seen in Vehicle of Clara Young, Who Heads Restoration Campaign

CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG has been selected to head the Restoration Committee in California's great campaign to restore its famous old missions, it is announced.

This movement was officially launched at a meeting betwen the San Francisco Missions Restoration Committee and the San Francisco Advertising Club, held at the St. Francis Hotel, San Francisco, March 31. On that occasion, Clara Kimball Young was the guest of honor and delivered an address on the subject of "The Old Missions." The chairman of the day was Archbishop Hanna.

The missions of Southern California are perhaps the most romantic edifices in the world. They tell the story of nomad wanderings of groups of holy men, bound on the conquest of ignorance and unreligion. They tell of strife, of struggle, of sublime patience and charity, of vigorous campaigns against superstitious Indians, treacherous beasts, a strange land and a strange people, all conquered through stout hearts. And the edifices—staunch, powerfully built, picturesque and at once dignified and beauteous, lend themselves admirably to the picturization of Marah Ellis Ryan's story, "For the Soul of Raphael," which Clara Kimball Young and her producer, Harry Garson, decided to use as material and apropos backgrounds for one of the most interesting and impassioned stories yet screenized.

Every important mission, from Los Angeles in the south to Mount Shasta in the north, has been utilized as locales for the attractive stories, it is stated. "For the Soul of Raphael" was written in the little village of San Juan Capistrano, and to secure the proper atmosphere, Marah Ellis Ryan, the author, was permitted to live in the San Juan Capistrano Mission, which she occupied for a period of many months, during which time the book was written.

David Butler to Star in Own Productions

It has been announced in Los Angeles that David Butler, who has appeared as co-star in numerous featured productions, will hereafter be starred in his own productions in which he is financially interested. His first picture, which has already been completed and will be shown in New York shortly, is an adaptation of a recent story published in the Saturday Evening Post. The leading part is said to suit his capabilities better than anything he has ever appeared in and one that he himself selected from many stories that were available. Mr. Butler has had a world of experience and has certainly created a great following by having done consistently good work.

Picturization of Clyde Fitch Tale Under Way

Picturization of Clyde Fitch's masterpiece, "The Truth", is now under way. The Goldwyn company, which recently purchased the screen rights to the famous play, has begun work on the new production at its eastern studios on east 48th Street. Madge Kennedy will play Becky Warder, whose penchant for little lies led to the brink of a ghastly tragedy; and the rest of the cast, which numbers only seven persons, includes Zelda Sears, who will portray Genevieve Crespigny, the same part which she took in the original Broadway production of "The Truth", when Clara Bloodgood was starred. Lawrence C. Windom has been engaged especially to direct the picture.

"Jiggs" Make His New York Screen Debut

"Breaking Into Society," the first comedy of the famous "Bringing Up Father" series, released by International for distribution through Pathe, was booked by the Strand Theatre, and the New York debut of Johnny Ray on the screen as "Mr. Jiggs," and Margaret Fitzroy as "Mrs. Jiggs" has been staged at that theatre. The booking of the comedies is in keeping with the well established policy of the management in seeking clean lively comedies for the theatre's patronage and in this case the added advantage of having Mr. Jiggs in his first New York appearance is secured. The first comedy has been played for the entire current week, commencing March 28th.

"Velvet Fingers" to be New Pathe Release

"Velvet Fingers" is announced as the title under which Pathe will release the serial which George B. Seitz is now producing at his studios in New York.

"Velvet Fingers" is an original story by Bertram Millhauser. The continuity was written by James Shelly Hamilton. Mr. Seitz and Marguerite Courtot play the leading roles.

Screen to Be Poet's Vehicle

Predicts That Poetry Is to Be Source of New Film Themes

IN a recent statement to the trade, Isaac Wolper, president of the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation, predicts that before long, large-scale productions of famous poems will become an established fact. The steady absorption by picture producers of past and current stage plays and works of printed fiction, says Mr. Wolper, coupled to the inflated valuation placed on available material, has brought about a serious shortage of screen stories. The field of poetry, he asserts, offers a logical means of relieving the stringency.

In his statement, Mr.. Wolper characterizes the works of celebrated poets as a "vast reservoir of splendid picture themes, waiting to be tapped." In the mad scramble for high priced stage plays, books and magazine stories, he says, producers have neglected almost entirely a fertile source of picture themes of the most desirable kind.

The Mayflower president firmly believes that the ideas and beauty of thought expressed in poetry can be transmitted to the screen. He predicts that many of the great pictures of the future will be those inspired by works of poetry.

"The shortage of good story themes is becoming more acute every day," says Mr. Wolper. "The demand so greatly exceeds the supply that producers are forced to pay fabulous prices for available material. The scarcity is a very real and vital problem demanding a quick solution.

"Original screen stories are doing much to help producers circumvent the problem, but are not entirely solving it. To what other sources can we look?

"In the field of poetry, we have a vast reservoir of splendid picture themes waiting to be tapped. Here, I believe, producers will ultimately find a logical solution to their problem.

Isaac Wolper, President of the Mayflower Corp.

"In some quarters, this prediction will probably be met with the argument that the majority of poems contain but little plot material; that their appeal is restricted to the intellectual class.

"But we do not look to the poem for plot or dramatic incident. These are mechanical things that skilled technicians can provide. Plot is nothing more than a method of story telling. Poetry gives us something finer and deeper. It gives us a living thing, an idea -a beautiful thought.

"And it is ideas that pictures need most. Ideas lift a picture far above the commonplace level. Analyze one of the greatest pictures ever produced, 'The Miracle Man.' What made it great? Why was the public response to it so eager and spontaneous? The crux of reason is expressed in one word, 'Idea.' The picture conveyed a poetic idea of life beautifully expressed.

"Poetry projects only fundamental ideas and emotions of life. Through the universal language of the screen these fundamentals can be understood and appreciated by all classes of people.

"The time is not far distant when producers will recognize this fact and the poem in common with the original screen story will provide more screen themes than stage plays, books, or magazine stories."

By using the basic ideas of celebrated poems, and interpreting them by means of logical, well-knit, dramatic stories, Mr. Wolper believes that producers can achieve a two-fold purpose. They can develop a sufficient volume of stories to meet requirements and can offer to the public a finer and more meaningful type of production.

That Mr. Wolper has great faith in the adaptability to pictures of poem themes is indicated by the fact that Robert W. Service's immortal poem "The Law of the Yukon," has been selected as the basis of Charles Miller's initial production to be presented by Mayflower. Around the spirit and ideas conveyed by the Service poem, Director Miller has woven a story of great dramatic force and human appeal.

"Sex" Released on April 11th

Fifty-five First Run Houses to Show Picture for One Week

THE week of April 11th will establish a record for J. Parker Read, Jr., as a producer of motion pictures. This record has been made by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation with Louise Glaum's newest production, "Sex", by C. Gardner Sullivan. April 11th is the official release date of "Sex" and for that week fifty-five full week stand first run theatres will play "Sex" as the most widely exploited attraction they have offered their public in the past year.

In two weeks of selling since the prints of "Sex" reached the exchanges, the Hodkinson managers have held the time through the desire of exhibitors for what the entire trade generally recognized as one of the exceptional pictures of the past few years.

To W. C. Dineen, general manager of the Harry Moir chain of downtown first run theatres in Chicago goes the credit for being the first run factor in America to sign a playing contract for "Sex". He will open this production for a two weeks' engagement at the Rose theatre, Chicago, April 11th. To launch "Sex" as he feels it deserves, Mr. Dineen, through his advertising manager, has bought four times larger space than he has ever used before on any picture in the Chicago newspapers. Jacob Fabian, a Northern New Jersey exhibitor, is the only exhibitor in the country who obtained a pre-release on "Sex" in advance of April 11th. He took a chance that the accessories on the picture would be in his Newark branch and opened the picture in Paterson, N. J., on March 29th.

Moe Krydell, the big Newark exhibitor, who broke a two weeks' house record with Louise Glaum in "The Lone Wolf's Daughter", has booked "Sex" and opens with it on its national release date.

In Chicago, the powerful Lubliner & Trinz Circuit has booked "Sex" solid for its entire chain of theatres, headed by the big Pantheon and inclusive of the Vitagraph, Paramount, Pershing, Madison Square, Michigan, Knickerbocker, Crawford, Covent Garden, Biograph, Wilson theatres. Regional first runs have been booked for this production by the Marks & Goodman houses; by the Gold theatre; by the People's theatre; the Oak Park.

Sidney J. Goldman, the Hodkinson manager in Chicago, with control and direction over the Milwaukee, St. Louis, Indianapolis and Des Moines offices, reports that his advance bookings in the Chicago branch alone are double the advance bookings ever taken on a picture in the territory prior to its first run release.

Sig. Schlager, J. Parker Read, Jr.'s personal representative, acting in conjunction with the Hodkinson organization, has had a job of large dimensions on his hands, being called upon in twenty-five days to cover twenty-five first run cities east of the Mississippi river for exploitation work in connection with the first runs. Similar work is being done by other special representatives west of the river.

UnprecedentedDemand for Beach Picture

Reports from the Goldwyn branch offices show what is called an unprecedented demand for Rex Beach's next Goldwyn picture, "The Silver Horde". The western division under A. S. Aronson leads the field with interest running strongest in San Francisco, Seattle, Los Angeles, Denver and Salt Lake City. J. A. Koerpel, the Goldwyn manager at Seattle, claims that his section is the greatest Rex Beach territory in the country. Extra prints of "The Silver Horde" are being made to meet the demand.

"For ten years" says Goldwyn Pictures, "exhibitors and their public have been looking forward to the film production of "The Silver Horde". It is released now as a special Goldwyn production and Rex Beach's masterpiece."

Educational to Release New "Intimate Reel"

Homes, happiness and domesticity form the ingredients of the Photoplay Magazine, Screen Supplements which will be released by Educational Films Corporation. The series is designed to show the stars "at work and at play." We see Taylor Holmes, who illustrates the various methods of love-making. Alan Dwan and James Kirkwood are seen dosing away a Sunday afternoon at the former's home, and Helen Chadwick also proves that she is a home lover. The final chapter shows Sessue Hayakawa bidding friend wife good-bye as he hastens off for his studio.

Unusual Theme Presented

American Film Production Treats of "Blood Coin"; Strong Cast Seen

"THE THIRTIETH PIECE OF SILVER," a picturization of Albert Payson Terhune's story, is the latest offering of the American Film Company, Inc. The story centers around the last and supposedly only extant one of the silver pieces, which were presented to Judas Iscariot for the betrayal of Christ. The time is the present and the locale is the City of New York. The characters are taken from the fashionable set of the Metropolis, and the leading male role, played by King Baggot, presents Tyler Cole, a collector of rare coins and the owner of the historic shekel.

And so the young husband, Tyler Cole (King Baggot) in the "Flying A" special, forbids his beautiful bride, a la Bluebeard, to open the cabinet in which his precious shekel reposes. His over-anxiety is due to the fact that he has lost the true and original coin, and to retain his position of prominence among numismatists, he replaced it by a counterfeit. Now to forbid an American wife to do anything she may choose to do, is dangerous, as Cole learned later.

Mystery and humor find ample and appropriate places in the unfolding of the plot, when the jealous young bride takes her troubles to a crystal gazer. The beauty of the interiors, excellent photography enhance the pleasure the spectator experiences throughout the picture. A small cast admirably adapted to portray Albert Payson Terhune's characters, include: Margarita Fisher, King Baggot, Lillian Leighton and Forrest Stanley.

Bookings Follow Showings

Screenings of "King Spruce" by Hodkinson Brings Good Results

TELEGRAPHIC requests from fourteen Hodkinson exchanges urging immediate shipment of accessories on "King Spruce", starring Mitchell Lewis, from Holman Day's famous story of the Maine forest, speak volumes for the results obtained from the simultaneous trade showings of the production held by all Hodkinson managers last week. Already five contracts for pre-release engagements in the larger cities are awaiting approval at the home office.

"King Spruce" is a gripping, human drama that the producers believe is certain to hold the interest of its audiences by its stirring heart appeal, rather than by a series of thrills injected to excite the nerves of audiences. But many a scene in the new W. W. Hodkinson release, nevertheless, raises a supreme thrill of sheer excitement.

Chief among these is a spectacular forest fire said to be one of the most gigantic incidents of its kind ever enacted for the screen. Another thrilling incident in "King Spruce" is the blowing up of a river dam which was a straight feat of engineering and motion picture generalship on the part of Director Clements.

Exchanges Booking "The Adventures of Helen"

Co-operation Urged by Berst

United Pictures President Tells of Company's Purpose

"TWENTIETH century efficiency is summed up in the word 'cooperation.' This is the axiom laid down by J. A. Berst, president of United Picture Theatres.

"This is the lesson taught us by the world-wide war," said Mr. Berst. "Cooperation has come to be recognized as the all-important factor in any great industry. It is a question of helping one another for our own good. It resolves itself down to the fact that if you don't get together with your brothers in your industry, no matter what that industry may be, soon that industry will be without you. That is the secret of success among the exhibitors. That is the secret of success which the United Picture Theatres of America, Inc., is attaining.

"The exhibitor is in a peculiar condition. The fact that he owns his theatre today does not necessarily mean that he is going to own his theatre tomorrow. There are two important factors that determine his success or failure—showmanship and the quality of the pictures he runs.

"The exhibitor's problem is this: 'How can I be assured of a steady supply of good pictures?'

"He knows full well that he cannot count on any producing organization which goes like a wolf in the night raising film rentals until his business becomes unprofitable. A company cannot be a friend and enemy of his at the same time. It can't shake his hand and take the bread and butter out of his mouth at the same time. It is either for you or against you. And you know it isn't for you.

"It is the realization of this fact which forced a number of farseeing exhibitors to band together in the United Picture Theatres of America, Inc. It was up to them to protect their theatres by creating an organization by which they could not only safeguard their supply of pictures but to get them at a fair rental that would enable them to run their business profitably.

"United Picture Theatres of America, Inc., is exhibitor-owned and exhibitor-controlled. The exhibitor purchases a franchise which gives him a right to run the United picture before his competitor. This guarantees the exhibitor first run in his district. It also gives to the exhibitor the knowledge that he will have a supply of pictures—good pictures—for his use.

"The United Picture Theatres of America, Inc., owns a one-third interest in the United Picture Productions Corporation. The money which the exhibitors pay for their United franchise thereby gives them a part ownership and a part control of United Picture Productions Corporation. The United Picture Productions Corporation has, through its purchase of the Triangle exchanges, now complete ownership of a distributing machine equal to any in the industry. Twenty-four exchanges situated at strategic points are in a position to furnish the best possible service to exhibitors who are partly owners of this system of exchanges.

"United now controls the famous Griffith and Ince productions starring William S. Hart, Douglas Fairbanks, Frank Keenan, Norma and Constance Talmadge, The Gish Sisters, Dorothy Dalton, Louise Glaum, Charles Ray, Olive Thomas, Taylor Holmes, Bessie Love, Mae Marsh, Bessie Barriscale, H. B. Warner and the famous Mack Sennett Keystone Comedies.

"Under the United plan, we have cooperative buying. The exhibitors of America are now able to not only get the best pictures due to the force of their buying power, but exhibitors will be able to get these pictures at a fair rate of rental, for these pictures are being rented to themselves by themselves. The money that they take out of their right pockets they put into their left.

"United is the franchise holders' organization. Every move for the betterment of United means a direct benefit for exhibitors who are sensible enough to see the handwriting on the wall. When United took over the Triangle and Lynch exchanges, it meant that the exhibitors who are franchise holders now are assured of an efficient distribution.

"United means that the exhibitor is his own boss. It means that he owns his theatre in every sense of the word. It means that he can run his own theatre in his own way. He can show any picture he pleases. It means that he can wear what he pleases and he can eat what he pleases. It means that he is free and not a slave."

Metro Engages Seena Owen

Cast for Bert Lytell's Leading Woman in "The Temple of Dawn"

SEENA OWEN has been engaged by Metro as Bert Lytell's leading woman in "The Temple of Dawn," a picturization of I. A. R. Wylie's novel upon which production will start this week at the Metro studios in Hollywood, Calif. Miss Owen is one of the best known leading women in motion pictures, having supported the most prominent stars of the screen as well as playing in all-star productions.

Miss Owen's most recent picture was "The House of Toys" in which she was featured by the American Film Company. She has been in pictures since 1914, when she made her initial appearance with the old Majestic-Reliance Company.

Later Miss Owen went with D. W. Griffith and played in both "Intolerance" and "The Fall of Babylon." In the last year she was with William S. Hart in "Branding Broadway," with Charles Ray in "The Sheriff's Son," with Tom Moore in "The City of Comrades," with Owen Moore in "Sooner or Later," and was one of the leading players in Maurice Tourneur's special production "Victory."

It was as a member of the San Francisco Stock Company that Miss Owen started her career. She was on the stage only a short time before joining the ranks of the motion picture players. Miss Owen is a native of Spokane, Washington, but received her education in Denmark.

"The Temple of Dawn" will be directed by Dallas M. Fitzgerald and Sol Polito will do the photographing. The scenario was prepared by Arthur Zellner. Cleo Madison will have a strong part in support of Mr. Lytell. "The Temple of Dawn" follows "The Right of Way" and "Alias Jimmy Valentine" in the Lytell series for Metro.

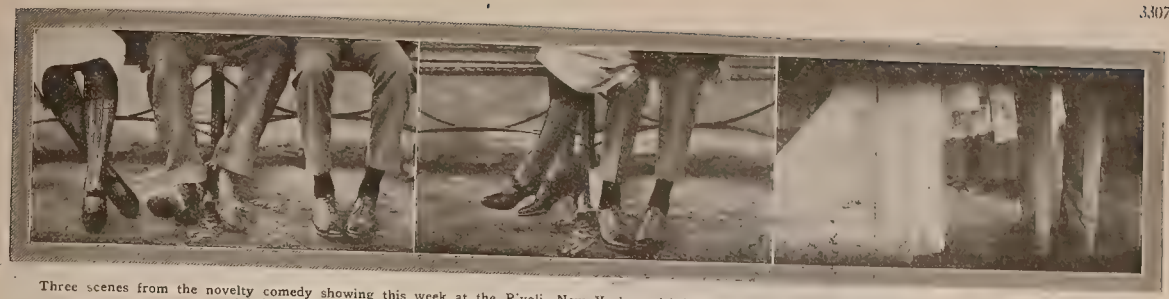
William DeMille Ready for New Production

William DeMille states that he is almost ready to begin work at Hollywood on the second of his special productions for Paramount Artcraft, namely, "Conrad in Quest of His Youth." He is merely awaiting the arrival of Thomas Meighan, who is to have the leading role, from New York. The popular actor will be in Hollywood, presumably, early next month. Work will then be started on "Conrad in Quest of His Youth," for which a fine cast has been chosen, including Kathlyn Williams, specially engaged; and Margaret Loomis, who is just now leading woman for Bryant Washburn in "What Happened to Jones"; Olga Printzlau is doing the scenario from Leonard Merrick's novel.

Showman Suggests New Name for Realart

J. C. Hewitt, manager of the Strand Theatre of Robinson, Ill., affiliated with the Roscoe Cochran Amusement Enterprises, suggests that "Real Service" be added to the trade-mark name of Realart Pictures Corporation.

His suggestion is based on what he terms an unusual service from Realart's St. Louis office, of which Floyd Lewis is manager. Mr. Hewitt had booked "Erstwhile Susan" starring Constance Binney, but up to the last minute the print had failed to arrive, and he was about to hang out the "No Show" sign, when Mr. Deitz, of the Realart exchange, arrived with the films under his arm. He had traveled 200 miles by a roundabout way from St. Louis to get the shipment to the Robinson exhibitor.



Shorty Hamilton Leads Fast Two-Reelers

Mr. B. H. Mills, of the Elk Photo Plays, Inc., reports that business on the series of 15 two-reelers, featuring Shorty Hamilton, is coming in so fast that extra prints have been ordered. Mr. Mills says, "I believe this enormous increase in bookings is due to the fact that Shorty Hamilton is appearing in person with the splendid two reelers. As Shorty leaves shortly for the Coast, I would advise all exhibitors who have not as yet taken advantage of this magnetic money-getter, to get busy and do so at once."

Noel Smith to Direct New Rainbow Comedy

Noel Smith has been engaged to direct "A Temperamental Artist," a new two reel Rainbow comedy to be released through Universal. Mr. Smith is well known in the farce comedy field. The cast will be headed by Harry Mann.

Two other Rainbow Comedy companies are at work on their current productions. William H. Watson is directing "She Did and He Didn't," and J. A. Howe is directing "Who Is Which and Why?" a mystery melange.

Comedyart Releases to Play Big Houses

First run bookings have been made for the Comedyart releases of Special Pictures Corporation in practically every key city of the country, the first run to begin with the initial release of the week of March 28th, and continues for fifty-two weeks.

The bookings of this new combination two reel subject includes some of the finest theatres in the country including the California of Los Angeles; Rialto, New York; Liberty, Seattle; Rialto, San Francisco; Temple at Toledo, Stillman at Cleveland, Reuben and Finkelstein houses of Minneapolis, St. Paul and Duluth; the Betterfield circuit of Michigan and the Ricard and Nace houses of Arizona.

Manager Robert H. Poole of the California Theatre, Los Angeles, will make "Uneasy Feet," the Special Pictures first release, a feature of his program the week beginning March 28th.

Hoffman Reports Favorably After Trip

M. H. Hoffman, general manager of the Pioneer Film Corporation has just returned from a country-wide trip in which he visited all the exchange centers in which offices of the Pioneer Co-operative Distribution System are located.

Mr. Hoffman reports that he believes conditions in every territory are becoming more favorable to the independent interests and a reaction is taking place in the minds of the exhibitors against the larger companies who seek to control the exhibiting end of the industry.

Emotional Role for Madlaine Traverse

Paul Cazeneuve and Denison Clift are co-directing Madlaine Traverse, in her latest Fox feature, "The Spirit of Good," said to be a powerful story of life today which runs the full gamut of human emotions. Following completion of "The Spirit of Good" Madlaine Traverse will be starred in "Her Honor the Mayor," based on the well-known stage success.

Film Specials Handles Harry Carey Feature

Excel Pictures announces that it will release the Harry Carey Feature, entitled "The Square Shooter." The State Rights sales will be handled by Film Specials, Candler Building, New York City.

Educational Has Volcano Films

National Geographical Pictures Acquired by Corporation

E. W. HAMMONS, vice president and general manager of Educational Films Corporation, this week announces the signing of a contract with Gilbert Grosvenor, president of the National Geographic Society, of Washington, D. C., which will bring to Educational the motion pictures made by the expeditions sent by the society to investigate the eruptions of Mount Katmai, in Alaska.

"The Valley of Ten Thousand Smokes" is probably the most important of the releases, although the name suggests that it has been conferred by some punch title writer, it is the official name given to the region by the society's investigators to the scene of probably the most violent eruption in the world's history. Another picture deals more specifically with the activity of Mt. Katmai itself.

"The Valley of Ten Thousand Smokes" shows the unique phenomena resulting from the eruption. The expeditions headed by Prof. Robert L. Griggs found in a valley near the mountain more than a thousand openings emitting columns of smoke 500 feet in height together with a number of smaller ones. Three different expeditions were sent out by the National Geographic Society to make the investigations and obtain the pictures, which have been viewed only by small groups of scientists.

Several articles have been published by the National Geographic Society about these investigations and in a recent contest among the 750,000 readers, "The Valley of Ten Thousand Smokes" was voted the most popular article that has appeared. New delights are promised by the pictures with the combination of the "smokes", the glaciers and the snows, contrasted with the boiling crater and lakes of lava. So startling were the discoveries that the society has just put through a movement for the conversion of the scene of the disaster into a national park.

"That Educational should have been selected as the official representative of the National Geographic Society in distributing these pictures is most gratifying," commented Mr. Hammons, "It is further indication of the standing that Educational has won in the non-theatrical field. The National Geographic Society has never before combined forces with any film organization, and it is only the standard that we have created that has made possible the present cooperation, which I feel sure will prove a great step forward in the dissemination of scientific knowledge attractively presented.

"National Geographic Society is a notable addition to the distinguished list of non-theatrical organizations now working with Educational, including the Inter-Church World Movement, the American Red Cross, the Conservation Commission of the state of New York, and others."

Goldwyn Buys Irvin Cobb Play

"Boys Will Be Boys" Purchased; Cast Is Not Announced

IN line with its announced policy of securing the works of the most popular writers of the day, Goldwyn Pictures Corporation has just purchased the screen rights to Irvin S. Cobb's "Boys Will Be Boys", which was adapted for the stage by Charles O'Brien Kennedy and presented by Joseph Hart at the Belmont Theatre, New York, October 13, 1919.

The picture possibilities of this story, which is rich in characterization and human interest, are particularly good. It will be handled with a view to bringing out to the full the humor of Irvin Cobb. As the deal for the rights to the play was only closed a few days ago, the Goldwyn executives have not yet had an opportunity to decide upon the details of production. It is probable that within the next week an announcement will be forthcoming relative to the players selected for the leading roles.

Particular interest will center in the choice of an actor for the role Peep O'Day, the delightful character that was portrayed on the stage with such conspicuous success by Harry Beresford. The story, with its rural background and truth to live in characterization and incident, affords other excellent opportunities for telling performances, but the central figure in the picture, as in the play, is bound to be Peep O'Day.

It is doubtful if there are many authors in the country who have as large a following as Irvin Cobb. His stories are eagerly awaited by thousands of readers, and there is expected to be a great audience for any work that carries his name. The Goldwyn screen production will profit by the interest first aroused by "Boys Will Be Boys" in story form and later by the stage version prepared by Charles O'Brien Kennedy.

New Company to Make Two-Reel Comedies

Plans for the production of two-reel comedies have been completed by the International Film Corporation of Chicago, and by the end of April, the first of their pictures is expected to be ready for the screen. The corporation was organized in 1916 by a group of well known business men but owing to war conditions, they delayed production until the present time.

G. T. Bainbridge has been engaged and took charge at the studio this week. He will be given a free hand in the work of production, according to officers of the company. Work will start in temporary studios, but plans have been drawn for a handsome hundred thousand dollar studio building which will include many novel features and construction of this building will start at an early date.

The officers of the new company are: John Wojtalewicz, president and general manager; Frank Waszkielwicz, vice-president; Joseph Petlak, treasurer, and Nicholas S. Budzban, secretary.

Universal Begins New Series of Comedies

In accordance with instructions from President Cal Laemmle, Universal has begun a series of comedy productions that will cover the entire range of humorous entertainment. Five reel comedy features will be presented by Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran, which, it is promised, will be as bright as any current Broadway farce. The first of these, from the pen of Edgar Franklin, playwright and magazine writer, is entitled "Everything but the Truth," and has just been completed at Universal City. In this production Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran have the assistance of such players as Anne Cornwall, Katherine Lewis, Willis Marks, Nelson McDowell and Elizabeth Witt.

Religious Picture as Pre-Easter Service

What is heralded as the first large motion picture made to depict the religious experiences of a country boy who came to a big city has been shown during the current week—March 29 to April 3—as a pre-Easter service in Casino theatre, Broadway and Thirty-ninth street, New York City, It was put on with religious music, and solos from 12 to 1.30 (noon) for men only. It is an attempt to awaken religious thought and to prepare a few of New York's busy throng for Easter Sunday. No admission was charged and no collections taken. It is managed by the New York office of the Methodist Centenary. It is the inauguration of a new plan that will spread all over the United States immediately if successful here.

Exhibitors Praise Lloyd

Fifty Wires Received by Pathe Boost Star's Last Two Reeler

HAL E. ROACH, president of the Rolin Film Company, which produces the Harold Lloyd two reel comedies for Pathe distribution, last week dispatched the following wire to Paul Brunet, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc.:

"Have received fifty wires from exhibitors commending last Lloyd, 'Haunted Spooks.' Jack Eaton of N. Y. Strand says it's the best comedy he has played this year. All agree it is Lloyd's best. Wait until you see the next one. It's a sure knockout."

With the sixth, the last of the first series of Lloyd two reelers about ready for distribution, both Mr. Roach and Pathe feel that every promise they made regarding the multiple reel comedies has been fulfilled.

In recently discussing the success of the Lloyds with a representative of Pathe Exchange, Inc., on the West Coast, Mr. Roach said:

"When we first decided to take Lloyd out of the one reel class, and star him in two reel features, we felt we were making an experiment, yet we were perfectly confident of success. We know Harold was in a class by himself when it came to portraying the kind of comedy he enacts for the screen. But above everything, we had every resource and facility for making the finest type of comedy. We had unlimited financial support, and one of the best equipped studios in the United States to work with.

"Our first series of comedies will be concluded with the next release, which will soon be in Pathe's hands, and which I feel sure will evoke even more praise than 'Haunted Spooks.' We have set a standard of excellence with this latter production that we will have to maintain. We are not only prepared to maintain it, however, but even to raise it to a higher level, if it is possible."

Favorable Reports for "The River's End"

Marshall Neilan's initial independent production for First National, "The River's End," continues to break box-office receipts everywhere according to the reports coming to the Neilan offices in New York. "I have never seen a picture take such spontaneous hold on public, exchange men and exhibitors," said J. R. Grainger, in charge of sales. "Contracts indicate that managers realize the drawing power of this attraction, for long run bookings are the rule."

Among the most recent theatres to sign up for indefinite runs on this offering are the Tremont Temple, Boston, starting the first week in May, and at the Tabor Grand, Denver, Colo. This booking opens April 10th.

John C. Ragland Given Token on Resigning

The former colleagues of John C. Ragland, who resigned as general sales manager of Realart to join the Arthur S. Kane Pictures Corporation, have presented him with a silver cigarette outfit in token of their esteem and friendship. Mr. Ragland assumed his new position as general manager of the Kane company last week.

The new affiliation of Mr. Ragland with Arthur S. Kane is drawing many messages of congratulation from persons in the trade, who declare that the combination of the two film men presages big things for the young concern. Mr. Ragland, who has a wide acquaintance among picture men in all parts of the country is gratified to acknowledge the receipt of many letters of good wishes from former associates and men with whom he has had the best of business relations in the past.

British Trade Greets "The Miracle Man"

The unusual welcome given George Loane Tucker's "The Miracle Man" on its first showing in America is said to have been duplicated at the first trade show held in London recently under the auspices of the Famous-Lasky Film Service, Ltd., according to advices received by E. E. Shauer, assistant treasurer and in charge of the foreign department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. Trade publications and exhibitors are stated to have been a unit in declaring it one of the greatest and most appealing photoplays ever shown in London, and all are predicting for it, according to reports, a repetition of the enormous success scored as a box-office feature in the United States.

F.-P.-Lasky Press Books Are Complimented

Gus Schneider, director of publicity and advertising of the Strand Theatre, Providence, has written a letter to Charles Kenmore Ulrich, editor of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation's press books, in which he gives the highest praise to the work of Mr. Ulrich and his assistants.

"If I were editor of the Paramount Press Books," writes Mr. Schneider, "I would make very few changes in the policy which seems to govern you.

"The stories are well written and informative and it is quite often possible for us to use much of the material in precisely the form in which it comes to us. In order to preserve the identity of the Strand we do not use mats or cuts of complete advertisements, but have one of our artists use some of the illustrations as a basis on which to build our newspaper advertising."

New Publicity Agents for Universal Film

Joseph H. Mayer, director of publicity for Universal is back in New York after a week's trip through Ohio, Illinois and Indiana, during which he added four new publicity representatives to the Universal forces.

They are Marie C. Blanchard of Toledo, Ohio; William Danziger of Cincinnati, Ohio; L. V. Schneider of Indianapolis, and Ann McMurdy of Milwaukee. They will represent Universal in their respective territories.

Miss Griffith Starts on "Gumshoes 4-B"

Corinne Griffith, the Vitagraph star, has just begun production of her next picture, entitled "Gumshoes 4-B," an adaptation from the story by Forrest Crissey. This was one of the thirty stories which won prize awards in the recent O. Henry memorial contest conducted by the American Society of Arts and Sciences. A strong cast has been selected.

The adaptation was written by Lucien Hubbard. Edward H. Griffith is the director and Alice Calhoun, a young leading woman who has become prominent in recent big pictures, plays an important role.

Harry Weiss in Charge of New Exchange

Harry Weiss, formerly associated with the First National Exchange, is now in charge of the activities of the Superior Screens Service, Inc., an independent exchange, which will operate in the states of Illinois, Indiana, Wisconsin, Michigan and Iowa.

Superior Screen Service, Inc., will have two departments—a feature department and a commercial department. Through the feature department will be released twenty-six features a year. In the commercial department will be handled re-issues.

Moranti Comedies to Make Two-Reelers

Moranti Comedies, Inc., is the name given to a new California organization, which will make comedies featuring Melbourne Moranti. The company is incorporated for one hundred thousand dollars and is being financed by Los Angeles and eastern capital. The company plan to make a series of 26 two-reel comedies. Supporting Moranti in these are Helen Williams, Joe Bonner and Albert Huston. The company has been working at a Long Beach studio.

K. L. (Billy) Eagon, formerly special field representative for Realart, now is piloting Clara Kimball Young Productions in Wisconsin and reports business never better. Mr. Eagon also is handling the new independent productions of Olive Tell.

To Enlarge Publicity Forces

Robertson-Cole Plans Effective Organization for U. S.

THE Robertson-Cole Company has started the organization of a publicity and exploitation force that will cover the United States like a blanket, it is stated.

Each of the twenty-five Robertson-Cole branches is to have a trained publicity, advertising and stunt man who will carry out a carefully conceived and concrete campaign of promotion, so planned that the entire force will work as a unit directed from headquarters in New York City.

To accomplish perfect harmony of action "a manual of instruction and duties" has been prepared that distinctly specifies what each and every member of the exploitation organization is expected to do. This manual covers every step to be taken, from the time the pictures are received from the producers till they have been shown to the maximum of attendance in the theatres.

Initiative and origination will not be curbed in any direction, but the entire Field Publicity organization will work like a perfectly assembled machine. Plans have been made so that exploitation stunts can be carried out simultaneously in every section of the country without any lost motion and the utmost efficiency attained for both the exhibitor and the Robertson-Cole Company.

Each branch publicity man will be a "service man" in the fullest sense of the term. He will be the realization of the service and promotion helps that the Robertson-Cole organization promises to its customers. The promise of assistance made by the sales force will be redeemed in full, by the exploitation man in each branch and that exploitation man will be trained to carry out the promise with intelligence and vigorous integrity.

One of the outstanding features of the Robertson-Cole exploitation force will be the advancement of the merchandizing side of each feature. The old system of playing up "hookum" will be eliminated and the commercial attributes of each picture will be exploited; in the same manner that the distinctive features of standard articles of merchandise are played by the big, sound commercial institutions.

For that reason, one of the main qualifications demanded of their branch publicity man, is advertising experience. Men who have been trained in the advertising field, have been taught to clearly discern the commercial advantages of all articles that come under their attention and know how to put forward these qualities in an interesting manner.

As an indication of the calibre of the men that will be employed as branch publicity directors, the following is reprinted from a letter sent to each Branch Manager by Mr. A. S. Kirkpatrick, Vice-President and General Manager of the Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation, specifying qualifications demanded of the men to be employed.

"Preference will be given to men who have had experience both as reporters and advertising writers.

"On most papers there are men who handle the combination job of editor of certain departments and solicitor of the advertising of the same class. These men make ideal publicity men for the exploitation of motion pictures. They know news values and are up on exploitation.

"Live wires of this classification are to be found particularly in the automobile departments and the theatrical departments of the various newspapers.

"A manual will be furnished each publicity man that will thoroughly instruct him in the duties he is to perform. He need know nothing of the technique of the motion picture business. All he need know, and must know is how to write a news story."

Star Leaves Via Air Route

Thrilling Aeroplane Get-away by Billy Rhodes in "Nobody's Girl"

"NOBODY'S GIRL" which the National Film Corporation has just announced ready for release contains a very unique and exciting get-away when Billy Rhodes, who is starred in this feature picture, is rescued from Devil's Island, the scene of the story, in an airplane.

Francis Grandon, who directed Billy Rhodes in her previous National successes, "The Lamb and the Lion," "Hoop-La" and other pictures has done exceptionally fine work with this production, according to critics who have had a preview of the film.

It is the belief of the producers that "Nobody's Girl" will have a wide appeal among the younger generation because of Billy Rhodes' captivating portrayal of an unloved little girl who manages to keep smiling despite her many beatings.

Miss Rhodes has the support of an excellent cast, included in which are Melbourne McDowell as the bandit chieftain, Mary Alden who was featured in "Confession" and who also appears in "Parted Curtains," and Lloyd Bacon who appears as the aviator.

Adler Gives Up "The Road"

Well Known Realart Publicity Director Has Long Experience

BERT ADLER'S friends in the Manhattan film industry will be glad to know that "the road" will not claim him from now on, due to the amalgamation of his former exploitation duties with those of Associate Director of Advertising and Publicity of Realart Pictures. Mr. Adler has been connected with Realart almost since its inception and is a man of wide experience in the motion picture business.

After an association with Thanhauser, Universal, and with Herbert Blache as the latter's general assistant at the producer's Fort Lee, N. J., Studio, Mr. Adler started free lancing with considerable success. Among the important accounts which he handled were those of the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation, the Educational Film Corporation, Graphic Features, United Kingdom Photoplays of London, and publicity and exploitation for the feature productions of "My Four Years in Germany," "The Better 'Ole" and "The Manx Man."

His office also handled the personal publicity of H. O. Davis, J. L. Kemper, Joseph R. Miles, J. Frank Brockliss, Paul H. Cromelin, Joe Brandt and other leading executives. One of Mr. Adler's best publicity stunts was staged at the time of the abdication of the Czar of Russia when he cabled the Kerensky Government an offer for the Czar's services in a film, guaranteeing a four weeks' engagement. The stunt got widespread publicity in all the New York City newspapers. As exploitation manager of Realart he was constantly out in the field, getting much fine exhibitor comment for his "Soldiers of Fortune" campaigns in Washington, New York, Cleveland and Baltimore.

Brandt Made Director General of National

Contrary to published reports of Joe Brandt's resignation from the National Film Corporation, and following his vigorous denial of any such step, comes the announcement from Capt. Harry M. Rubey that Mr. Brandt has been made director general of his organization. As soon as Isadore Bernstein tendered his resignation from National, says Capt. Rubey, Brandt was picked to take charge of National's entire organization.

"Rio Grande" Released by Pathe April 25

April 25th has been announced as the release date of the Pathe special feature, "Rio Grande," an Edwin Carewe production of the famous stage play by Augustus Thomas. Allan Sears and Rosemary Theby are featured. The greatest interest has been evinced by exhibitors in the production it is stated, since publication of the fact that it had been completed and was a truly representative picture of conditions on the Mexican border.

Eighteen Authors on List

Benj. B. Hampton Controls Rights to Wide Range of Literary Works

BENJAMIN B. HAMPTON, who is making special photoplay productions of the works of a group of America's most famous novelists, now has eighteen authors on his list and controls film rights of their works, written or yet to be written, which have not yet been filmed. This gives Mr. Hampton the range of selection to be had in a list of 254 novels and 481 short stories. From this wealth of material the books most popular and best fitted to screen presentation by Mr. Hampton's unique method of production will be selected for filming in the near future.

Six pictures have been filmed to date. "The Westerners" and "Desert Gold," from the lists of Zane Grey and Stewart Edward White respectively, have been showing for some time and proved immensely popular. Emerson Hough's novel, "The Sagebrusher," has just been released in the large cities, "The Desert of Wheat" and "The U. P. Trail" by Zane Grey, and "The Dwelling Place of Light" by Winston Churchill have not been released. An Upton Sinclair novel is probably the next in the order of production.

Mr. Hampton's policy of playing each character of the story to its full value and having no featured star, but instead using star players in every role, will be continued as in his productions already filmed. The authors co-operate, and sign each film after its completion to indicate personal indorsement of the photoplay. Hugh Ryan Conway, who directed "The Dwelling Place of Light" and "The Desert of Wheat" for Mr. Hampton, will direct forthcoming features.

"Hunting Trouble" Is Warwick's Next

After considerable debate, "Hunting Trouble" has been chosen for the title of the latest Robert Warwick picture for Paramount Artcraft.

Prepare for Record Output

Vitagraph's President Is in Los Angeles to Plan Year's Schedule

ALBERT E. SMITH, president of Vitagraph, has arrived in Los Angeles from New York to arrange for the greatest year's output in the history of his organization. He will spend several weeks at the studio in Hollywood, preparing to concentrate the bulk of his motion picture production in Los Angeles and in planning the year's schedule with W. S. Smith, general manager of the Western studios.

Mr. Smith expects 1920 to create a record for the industry, and has indicated his faith in his own prediction by expanding his Hollywood Studio grounds by ten acres and increasing activities there to ten units.

Vitagraph now has twenty acres in Hollywood. Its original site of ten acres has been utilized to capacity with stages, permanent sets, laboratories and offices. The additional ten acres will be occupied by more stages and permanent sets, and Mr. Smith will approve the plans for these during his stay in the West.

With two special features and three serials included in the ten units at the studio, the magnitude of the production schedule has assumed unusual proportions. In addition there is constantly a regular star feature at work as well as a Larry Semon production under way and three separate Big "V" comedy companies working high speed.

In adding to production, Vitagraph has been guided purely by the without inflation of output thereby demands of its exchanges, and is making pictures to meet the market, years.

"The Orphan" Completed

William Farnum Finishes Work on New Western; J. Edwards Directs

WILLIAM Farnum, under direction of J. Gordon Edwards, has completed the first of his Fox productions to be made since his arrival on the Pacific Coast. "The Orphan," written by Clarence E. Mulford, is the basis of the picture. The author's fame was built originally upon the series of "Bar-20 Ranch" stories, in which that lovable character, Hopalong Cassidy, appeared. In "The Orphan," the versatile author has given William Farnum a vehicle in which there is said to be punch after punch. This production, according to the Fox advertising department, contains more than anything Mr. Farnum has done this season—even more, indeed, than "The Last of the Duanes," "Wolves of the Night," or his latest, "The Adventurer."

J. Gordon Edwards, who continues as Farnum's director, took the company to Palm Springs, California, near which beauty spot the exteriors for "The Orphan" were staged. The story calls for many unusual long shots, odd angles and quick gun-play. Director Edwards and John Boyle, his regular photographer, secured some of the most beautiful backgrounds in this locality.

Louise Lovely has returned to the Fox fold to play opposite William Farnum in this, his first Western for the season of 1920. Miss Lovely plays the part of Helen Shields, sister of the sheriff and the cause of all the fun and trouble in the story.

Pat O'Mally, who has enlisted under the Marshall Neilan banner and who will appear in pictures released by First National

Pat O'Malley Engaged by Marshall Neilan

For Marshall Neilan's third independent production for First National, following "The River's End," Pat O'Malley has been engaged as leading man. Besides being a leading man of recognized ability on the screen for a number of years, Mr. O'Malley is also known for his daring in performing spectacular thrills, and it was because the part in the new Neilan production calls for a number of daredevil stunts that O'Malley was specially engaged.

Novel Organization in Industrial Division

The Industrial Motion Picture Division of The Bray Pictures Corporation, which is now at work on productions for leading American commercial institutions, is modeled along lines which are said to be unique in this department of the moving picture business. It is roughly divided into a "contact staff", "plan staff", "scenario staff" and "production staff". The organization is so arranged that while these departments will work co-operatively, they do not overlap on each other.

"Valley of Tomorrow" Sets Fast Pace

The American Film Company hit it right on "The Valley of Tomorrow" with William Russell in the Lake Tahoe setting—that is, "if the eating is proof of the pudding." Seven days at the Tivoli at Frisco, four days at the Strand at Denver, seven day Indianapolis bookings by Charles Olsen, three or four days in each theatre of the T. & D. Circuit, and extended runs in Eastern cities galore keep up the pace of the first bookings. "Russell's best Western" enthusiastic exhibitors are saying.

Winter Hall Gets Role in Melford Special

Winter Hall is cast in one of the four big roles in the forthcoming production by Famous Players-Lasky of "The Translation of a Savage," from the novel by Sir Gilbert Parker. This is to be a George Melford special production. Jack Holt will have the leading male role and Mabel Juliene Scott will play the part of the Indian girl Lali.

Cody Exploitation Planned

Robertson-Cole Tells of Advertising Arranged for New Picture

FULL advantage has been taken of the remarkable exploitation possibilities of the Lew Cody Special, "The Butterfly Man," in the unusual advertising campaign which Robertson-Cole has planned for this picture. "The Butterfly Man," which was produced by L. J. Gasnier, with Ida May Parks as director, is expected to surpass the popularity of "The Beloved Cheater," which was the first of the new series of Cody productions being made for Robertson-Cole.

Great play will be made on the popularity of the author, George Barr McCutcheon, whose romantic stories of society life have millions of readers. Mr. McCutcheon is one of the best American weavers of tales of the "Four Hundred," and he filled "The Butterfly Man" with types easily recognized, and bound to have a broad appeal because of their humanity. He also sketched a series of bewitching pictures of homes and resorts of the rich which furnished the director opportunity to place upon the screen some of the finest "high life" backgrounds ever seen.

House managers are instructed on the use of throwaways and letters, and there is an attractive layout of large size display ads. Then a page is devoted to what the critics say about Lew Cody. A full-page art layout of the supporting cast follows. There is also a novel tie-up with stores handling clocks, worked around a catch line in which Lew Cody says, "The right time to love is all the time." Another tie-up is suggested with stores which handle women's wearing apparel. One page is devoted to the life of George Barr McCutcheon, and another to decorating the lobby.

One-Reel Comedy Listed

Goldwyn-Bray Comedy-Reel to Be Issued Weekly, Opening April 18

THE Goldwyn Company announces a new release, the Goldwyn-Bray Comic, a single reel subject that will be distributed weekly, beginning April 18th. It will be prepared at the Bray Studios, as is the Goldwyn-Bray Pictograph, also a single reel which is firmly established as one of the most popular releases on the market. The Comic will in no way encroach upon the specific field of the Pictograph.

The new issue is a split-reel presenting a comedy cartoon in the first half and what are termed "lampoons" in the second. In material and treatment, it will be unlike anything heretofore presented on the screen, enlisting the services of the foremost cartoonists and humorists of the country, it is stated.

During the first half of the film, the motion picture public will renew old friendships. Happy Hooligan, the Shenanigan Kids with the Captain and the Inspector, also Judge Rumhauser and his pal, Silk Hat Harry, will again make their appearance on the screen.

The cartoons, produced by the International Film Service, for the Bray Pictures Corporation, are the result of the combined efforts of Gregory LaCava, John Foster, Vernon Stallings and of Max Fleischer of "Out of the Inkwell" fame. The brief stories in which these characters figure contain many surprises of plot and crisis.

The "Lampoons," comprising the last half of the release, present jabs at the follies and foibles of everyday sayings, together with the best jokes of the week selected from the press of the world.

Some good characterization is shown in "King Spruce," the Dial Film Company's feature starring Mitchell Lewis and released by W. W. Hodkinson

Paul Powell to Direct Ethel Clayton

Paul Powell, well known director, whose reputation was recently enhanced by his successful direction of Mary Pickford in "Pollyanna" has been especially engaged to direct Ethel Clayton in her new Paramount-Artcraft picture, "All in a Night," according to an announcement by Jesse L. Lasky. Samuel Merwin wrote the book of short stories, "The Charmed Life of Miss Austin" among which is the tale, "Dinner at Eight," upon which "All in a Night" is based. The scenarionis by Edith Kennedy.

He will have a fine cast for the Ethel Clayton picture, including Jack Holt as leading man, Clyde Fillmore, Alice Knowland, Josephine Crowell, C. H. Geldart, Fannie Midgley, Winter Hall and Frederick Starr.

Charities Benefited by Location Tie-Up

Von M. Zimmerman, formerly director of locations for the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, who is now acting in the same capacity for Marshall Neilan Productions, is busily engaged in aiding the organization and outlining the plans of the Assistant's League which is composed of many of the most prominent women of Los Angeles and vicinity.

The object of the league, of which Mrs. Hancock Banning, originator of the idea, is chairman, is to permit the use of various residences for the making of motion pictures, the revenue derived therefrom to be turned over to charity. Mr. Zimmerman has recently addressed the league on several occasions and his suggestions and advice have been heartily endorsed by the members.

Christian Science Has Plans for Screen

Motion pictures that are designed to heal body and soul by the application of principles as taught by Christian Science represents the latest and certainly the strangest use to which the shadow screen has been dedicated.

According to motion-picture and Christian Science interests in Los Angeles, a photoplay, and probably a series of them, will be produced for this purpose. The photoplays are to be five, six and seven-reel dramas of the sort most likely to be widely popular with all classes of people, it is declared.

George Walsh Company Back from South

Director Dell Henderson with George Walsh, the Fox star, and his company, arrived in New York City on March 21, after a month's location work in the heart of the old Moonshine district of Tennessee With a company of twenty-eight persons, Messrs. Walsh and Henderson have been at work on and around Signal and Lookout Mountain, near Chattanooga, where Director Henderson has shot many thousands of feet of exteriors for "The Dead Line," the mountain feud story written especially for the star by Paul H. Sloane of the Fox staff.

Pickford Picture Titled "Duchess of Suds"

The name of the forthcoming Mary Pickford production, which will follow her first release of "Pollyanna" through United Artists Corporation, wil be called "The Duchess of Suds," according to the announcement issued by Hiram Abrams, of that organization, this week.

The "Duchess of Suds" is based upon the international dramatic success made doubly famous through the efforts of Maude Adams, "Op O' Me Thumb," from the pen of Frederick Fenn and Richard Bryce.

Historic Epoch Gives Theme to Screen

That epoch of American history which embraces the industrial scaling of the Rocky Mountains and the completion of the Union Pacific Railroad, furnishes the theme of "The U. P. Trail," a Zane Gray novel, being picturized by Benjamin B. Hampton. Roy Stewart plays the leading male role, and Marguerite De La Motte has the opposite position. Kathleen Williams, Robert McKim, Joseph Dowling, Frederick Starr, Virginia Caldwell, Marc Robbins, Charles Murphy, George Berrell and Walter Perry are also in the cast.

Red Cross Films from Northern Africa

The gratifying results of an expedition of a force of cameramen from the American Red Cross into Northern Africa were shown yesterday at a screening of the films just received by the Bureau of Pictures, 220 West 42nd street.

The expedition under the direction of Capt. Merle Lavoy set out from Paris some six weeks ago for the rim of the desert. That no time was spent in idleness is evidenced by the great amount of unusually interesting footage received in this the first consignment.

Frederick Burton Cast for New Production

Frederick Burton has been engaged for the part of Heliotrope Harry in "A Whiff of Heliotrope," the Richard Washburn Child story, now being picturized for Cosmopolitan Productions by George D. Baker. Burton's stage experience dates back to 1900, when he was a member of the old Grand Opera House Stock Company, of Indianapolis. Later he appeared in New York in George Ade's "The College Widow."

J. A. Jacobs Not to Join Ascher on the Coast

Joseph A. Jacobs, associated with Sid Ascher in the Ascher Enterprises, Inc., states that, contrary to reports, he will not join Mr. Ascher on the Coast. Recent activities in connection with the handling of the Benny Leonard serial, "The Evil Eye," which the Ascher organization is making, are said to be responsible for the change in Mr. Jacobs' plans.

Fairbanks Finishing Film

Star Rushes Final Touches on His Next United Artists' Production

DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS, who was slightly delayed some weeks ago because of breaking his finger during the filming of his next United Artists' production, "Mollycoddle," is now speeding up the finishing touches of this picture, having returned to his studio at Hollywood after spending many weeks with the Hopi Indians, where many of the exceptional shots were made.

Upon his return to California, he sent the Indians several reels of motion pictures, among which were some of the scenes which were taken in their community. Accompanying the films were a screen, a projection machine and an operator, together with the necessary electrical equipment for operating same.

When the pictures were shown it was the first opportunity the Hopi Indians had ever had of seeing themselves on the screen and as some of the moving figures on the silver sheet had recent died, the red skins were positive that the ghosts of yesterday had arisen and were parading in some mysterious fashion before them.

On the occasion of showing the pictures to the Indians, they were called together and everything was set for a pleasant time. After a short while the projection machine began to click and the Indian figures in fantastic dances began to sway and move across the screen. All of a sudden there was a buzz of excitement throughout the audience. Then there was a mysterious noise that came from the rear and an old red skin hurriedly left the place. The excitement grew and later it was learned why. The leader of the red skins explained "Heap like picture show, but they see heap .big ghosts."

United Will Invade Market

Directors Decide to Have Franchise Holders Pay for Pictures

ONE of the most important matters acted upon and decided at the recent meetings of directors of the United Picture Theatres of America, Inc., at Chicago, was the action taken as regards the production and buying of feature pictures.

Because of the decision to go ahead with production and the fact that many pictures are to be purchased in the open market, the directors realized that ample funds should be available for this purpose. For this reason, the decision to have every franchise holder pay for at least three pictures in advance was put into effect.

Following the lead of many of the directors themselves who have paid for as many as ten pictures in advance, United Picture Theatres of America, Inc., franchise holders from territories all over the country. have been most hearty in their response to the action by the Board of Directors. During the past week it has developed that not only directors, but many franchise holders as well, are paying for from three to ten pictures in advance.

Through the action of the United Board of Directors and the way that action is being backed up by all franchise holders, it will mean that United, during the coming months, will purchase or produce and release for exhibitors, feature motion pictures of the highest possible value.

Ray in Double Anniversary Celebration

A double anniversary celebration staged at the Los Angeles Athletic Club last week marked the birthday of Charles Ray and the fifth business year of the firm of Willis and Inglis. Credited with first discovery of potential greatness in Charles Ray, this firm has long been interested in the progress of the star and the occurrence of the two birthday anniversaries on the same day was cause for their joint celebration.

The dinner, given by Willis and Inglis last week to their employees in celebration of the double anniversary, was attended by Mr. and Mrs. Charles Ray, Mr. and Mrs. C. T. Ray, the star's father and mother, and Mr. J. R. Crone, Manager of Louis B. Mayer studios, who came as guests of honor.

Kerrigan Loses Smile in "Dream Cheater"

J. Warren Kerrigan, the star of the Robert Brunton production, "The Dream Cheater", from a story by Honore de Balzac, which is being released by W. W. Hodkinson, has doffed his familiar smile and romantic manner in this latest picture. He appears as a scholar and idealist, an inveterate brooder, morbid and depressed. The immaculate dresser is seen with hair disarrayed and clothes baggy. He is supported in this novel picture by Joseph J. Dowling, Wedgewood Nowell, Alice Wilson, Thomas Guise, and Aggie Herring.

South Sea Story Will Be Bosworth's Next

J. Parker Read, Jr., producer of the Louise Glaum and Hobart Bosworth's productions, upon his return from New York, announced that Hobart Bosworth's next starring vehicle would be an adaptation of the story written by Jack London's widow, Charmian K. London, and the star. The two in collaboration have turned out a vivid story of the South Sea Islands.

Hobart Bosworth Gets "Snowed Under"

Hobart Bosworth, while returning to camp from location in the California mountains last week, was unexpectedly caught by a descending snow-drift and temporarily snowed under, it is reported. The other members of the company went to his rescue and finally succeeded in extricating him from the snow-bank. The party had been engaged in filming "Mister McNeir," Bosworth's first special production for J. Parker Read, Jr.

Second of Mrs. Drew's Series Due April 18

With an unusual demand from all over the country, taken to indicate a growing popularity of the Mrs. Sidney Drew comedies, it has been decided by the Pathe Exchange to release the second comedy of the series, "The Stimulating Mrs. Barton," on April 18th. "The Stimulating Mrs. Barton," like the first comedy "The Charming Mrs. Chase" is adapted to the screen from one of the famous "After Thirty" stories of Julian Street, John Cumberland is again featured.

Metro Studios Add to Lighting System

Approximating an expenditure of $25,000, a new Liberty airplane motor and two large generators, mounted permanently on a motor truck, have just been purchased by the Metro studios of Hollywood, to be used as a portable plant to furnish lighting power while on location.

The purchase of the new equipment was negotiated through the Crawford Airplane Company of Venice, Calif. Installation of the motor, which is of the twelve-cylinder type, and the generators, will be in charge of expert electrical men.

Accessories Ready for Carmen Road Show

In order to give theatre managers every aid for the proper exploitation of the Carmen Road Show, Victor Kremer Film Features, Inc., has prepared a supply of advertising accessories equal to the extensive publicity aids furnished for Chaplin's "A Burlesque on Carmen" as a straight film version. The campaign in detail is set forth in a four-page press book size 14x22 with the cover so designed as to serve as a lobby decoration.

In addition to the various styles of lithographs supplied for the Carmen film, a special stock sheet in three colors has also been made up together with hangers of the title page of the Carmen song.

Current Paramount Releases

Three Productions Are Released March 28; Have Good Casts

SCHEDULED for Paramount-Artcraft release on March 28, in addition to the super-special, "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," are Maurice Tourneur's special production, "My Lady's Carter," and Marguerite Clark in "Easy to Get."

In "My Lady's Garter," Mr. Tourneur is declared to have put over another big melodramatic winner and a fitting successor to "Sporting Life," "The White Heather," "The Life Line" and "Victory." Screen fans like thrills and they also enjoy a good love story. Here, in an adaptation of Jacques Futrelle's well known mystery romance, are both. The plot is described as one which keeps an audience on the alert every moment and there are several of the big spectacular scenes for which Tourneur is famous.

Jacques Futrelle, whose brilliant career was cut short when the ill-fated Titanic sank off the Banks of Newfoundland in April, 1912, wrote some of the best short stories in the English language. His "Thinking Machine" was as great a figure in the realm of detective fiction as "Sherlock Holmes," and the exploits of this unique creation in detecting crime have entertained young and old. But probably the best effort from Futrelle's pen is "My Lady's Garter," which the Saturday Evening Post published as a serial and which later appeared as a novel.

Interest in the plot of the story is piqued by the fact that for a good part of the time the hero figures as the villain, and vice versa. The central figure is "The Hawk," a notorious international crook who has topped off a record for daring crimes by purloining the historical jewelled garter of the original Countess of Salisbury. Detectives camp on his trail, and in the chase are involved an American railroad magnate, his pretty daughter and a weak-minded poet. Suspicions point to a certain Bruce Calhoun, who mysteriously appears in the neighborhood, as "The Hawk" but the subsequent thrilling developments indicate that things are not what they seem.

All of the Tourneur artistry of production is present, it is declared, while the cast is fully up to the Tourneur standard. In fact, it might well be called all-star, including as it does Wyndham Standing, Sylvia Breamer, Holmes Herbert and Warner Richmond. The adaptation of the story was made by Lloyd Lonergan, one of the most experienced and able of scenarists.

Izola Forrester and Mann Page, who wrote "In Pursuit of Polly," one of Billie Burke's greatest Paramount successes, were the authors of "Easy to Get," the Marguerite Clark release on the 28th. Julia Crawford Ivers adapted it to the screen, and Walter Edwards directed.

The story holds a salutary lesson for young men who think they are regular devils among the women—and boast of it. Miss Clark has the role of a winsome little bride just starting out on her honeymoon. In the smoking car her husband meets an old friend and incautiously makes the remark that all women are "easy to get." Of course, the bride overhears the remark and resolves to administer a lesson. Slipping off the train at the next station she steps into an exciting and humorous series of adventures, with Friend Husband pursuing madly. It ends up with hubby coming through with $5,000 to a gang of thugs in order to get his bride back again.

Handsome Harrison Ford, as the husband, has much to do with making the picture all sunshine, and Rod LaRocque, Helen Greene, Herbert Barrington, "Kid" Broad, H. Van Vansen and Julia Hurley are also in the cast.

Teams in Close Competition

Pathe Prizes Keenly Contested During "Brunet" Month

WITH the end of "Brunet Anniversary Month", reports of unprecedented business were still pouring into the Home Office from distant branches, it is stated, and Pathe Exchange, Inc., reported that all records for business accomplished by the distributing organization had been shattered in March. No announcement can be made as yet, regarding the winners of the $6,000 in prizes offered for the winning teams in the four territories into which the country was divided for Brunet Month, and it undoubtedly will be another week before the Pathe officials are in a position to make this announcement. So keen and close was the competition, that one week before its close there were three teams in one territory tied, by percentage, for the first honors, and, in another district, two teams had the same rating for the premier honors. In the remaining two territories, it was anybody's fight, with the first three teams running almost even as they entered the home stretch.

Pathe established a precedent for salesmanship competitions, by making the race for awards during "Brunet Month", a team affair, each branch being thus represented. In the Eastern Division the offices pitted against each other were New York City, Albany, Buffalo, Boston, Washington, Pittsburgh, Philadelphia and Newark. The Central Division was composed of Chicago, Indianapolis, Detroit, Milwaukee, Minneapolis, Omaha, Des Moines and Cleveland.

In the Southern Division were listed St. Louis, Cincinnati, Charlotte, Atlanta, New Orleans, Little Rock, Oklahoma City, Dallas and Kansas City, while in the Coast Division were Spokane, Seattle, Portland, Denver, Salt Lake City, San Francisco and Los Angeles.

The competition was based upon the percentage of increase in collections and new business during March, over an average for the previous three months, and long before the fourth week had rolled into the dim past it was evident that nearly every branch would top these figures.

In the Eastern Division, Albany, New York, Washington, and Pittsburgh, were very prominent in the running right up to the finish, with the verdict in this territory ever in doubt. Contracts mailed just prior to the closing of the contest, may be the deciding factor in this district.

The Central Division teams engaged in just as close a race, with Cleveland, Chicago, Detroit and Omaha making a good run for the first honors.

It was in the Southern and Coast Divisions, however, that the keenest competition was felt. In the Southern section seven teams competed so evenly that it was anyone's race to the end, with Oklahoma City, Atlanta, Charlotte, Cincinnati, St. Louis, Dallas and Kansas City virtually on even terms.

Among the Western offices Spokane and San Francisco journeyed past the half-way mark within a few points of each other, with Portland, Salt Lake City, and Los Angeles, giving these two a hard run for the money and watches offered as awards to the successful teams.

When the complete figures are totalled, a very substantial increase in the record established during "Brunet Month" last year will have been registered.

A New Curwood Picture for First National

Contracts were executed at the offices of the Associated First National Pictures, 6 West 48th street, whereby James Oliver Curwood's next big feature production entitled "Nomads of the North" will be exploited by that company.

David M. Hartford, who so successfully directed "Back to God's Country" will also direct this picture, and Ernest Shipman will continue as New York manager of the Curwood productions.

Many Houses Showing "Slam Bang Jim"

"Slam Bang Jim" is living up to its name when it comes to bookings, announces the American Film Corporation. It has sold to exhibitors all over the country before the first showings. Critics Praise Miss Daw

Reviewers and Exhibitors Like Actress' Work in "River's End"

MARJORIE DAW, who makes her debut for Marshall Neilan in "The River's End," following a career as leading lady for Douglas Fairbanks, has achieved another triumph of her career in motion pictures, with her characterization of Mary Josephine in James Oliver Curwood's story, according to reports received at the New York offices of the Neilan organization.

When the picture received its initial public showing in New York at the Strand the newspaper critics were strong in their praise over Miss Daw's work in "The River's End." The opinion that this was her best portrayal in pictures was practically unanimous. These reviews were duplicated all over the country where the film has already been shown.

The unusual interest disclosed in this little actress on the part of brother and sister professionals, it is pointed out, was particularly evidenced by the many telegrams and messages she received from prominent motion picture stars and producers, congratulating her on her achievement.

Miss Daw has been loaned to Maurice Tourneur by Marshall Neilan for one production, after which she will prepare for her European trip with the Neilan organization. She will next be seen in the second independent Neilan picture for First National release, opposite Matt Moore. This film is scheduled for May release and the title, which has been kept a secret for some time, is said to offer exceptional exploitation possibilities.

"Huck Finn" Wins Praise

Daughter of Mark Twain Is Given Private Screening; Lauds Producers

MRS. OSSIP GABRILOWITSCH, daughter of Mark Twain and wife of the leader of the Detroit Symphony Orchestra, viewed "Huckleberry Finn," William D. Taylor's Paramount-Artcraft super-special at a private showing in the projection room of the Detroit Exchange.

There was a tense moment for Mrs. Gabrilowitsch when there flashed on the screen a scene showing Huck Finn presenting a manuscript to Mark Twain. The resemblance to her father was most extraordinary, according to Mrs. Gabrilowitsch.

The director of the production, William D. Taylor, took unusual pains to present with exactness those scenes in which Mark Twain is characterized. Mrs. Gabrilowitsch was unreserved in her praise of the picture and asked about the characters in the story, she said:

"I want to say that the producers of 'Huckleberry Finn,' especially the director of the picture, are deserving of all the honors and congratulations bestowed upon them because they have cleverly brought to life those characters as my father conceived them."

Mrs. Gabrilowitsch sent the following letter to E. M. Orowitz, the Famous Players-Lasky exploitation representative in Detroit.

"I had the great pleasure yesterday of viewing the production of 'Huckleberry Finn' by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in the Paramount Artcraft offices and constantly regretted that my father could not have seen this remarkable picture, which would have satisfied him in every detail, I'm sure. The selections of scenes from the book have been so capably made and strung together that a really thrilling play is the result. There is enormous variety in the material used, for there are many moments of humor, combined with exciting episodes, which again give place to most beautiful bits of natural scenery or quaint impressions of a time and of customs long past."

J. D. Williams Visits Ray

First National Official Extends Welcome to Star at Coast Studio

IN order to extend a personal welcome to Charles Ray, the latest addition to the ranks of First National stars, General Manager J. D. Williams paid a special visit to the big Los Angeles studios where the actor is at work on the first picture in which Arthur S. Kane is presenting him.

At the completion of his contract with Thomas Ince, Mr. Ray began to make pictures for release by the First National organization, and the visit of Mr. Williams to the star's own studios on the West coast represents the official welcome of Mr. Ray into the First National fold.

General Manager Williams, following his survey of the situation in the Ray studio, gave out the statement that in his opinion Charles Ray was slated to break all records for newcomers to the First National releasing organization. Such is the impression gained by Mr. Williams in his conferences with exhibitors along his route that the First National official stands sponsor for the prophecy that the industry will see one of the most unusual and sweeping successes from the independent films.

Mr. Williams expressed great admiration for the splendid body of officials and co-workers with whom Mr. Ray has surrounded himself. With the star's old associates, Jerome Storm, director and Chester Lyons, camera man, to watch over the technical end of picture production, and with Mr. Richard Willis, the capable General Manager, supervising the destinies of the local organization, the First National executive prophesied great things coming from this aggregation of talents.

Among others in the gathering at the Ray studios with General Manager Williams was Sol Lesser, the well known independent distributor, and H. A. Browne, of the Walter Daw Company of London.

Bright Prospects for Pathe

Bookings and Reviews Forecast Success for "Trailed by Three"

THE reported signing of practically every house listed as a "Pathe serial regular" for the entire fifteen episodes of "Trailed by Three," the new offering co-starring Stuart Holmes and Frankie Mann, which is to begin its run on April 4th, is pointed to by the Pathe serial sales department as evidence that another serial success has been achieved by that concern.

In the main the reviews in the trade papers, all commending the serial as one having great popular appeal reflect the opinions expressed by the exhibitors after "Trailed by Three" was shown at previews at the various Pathe exchanges.

The advertising helps issued by the company in connection with the picture have met with general approval by the exhibitors. The trailer reel prepared for the picture has been highly commended as one of the best possible advance advertising mediums, and in several theatres the applause which it was accorded showed that the trailer is one way for the exhibitor to make his advertising pleasant to take.

The Campaign Book is one of the most complete Pathe has gotten out on a serial.

Rolin Comedy Due for Release April 4th

Pathe Exchange announces April 4th as the date scheduled for release of the latest Rolin Comedy, "Cracked Wedding Bells". "Snub" Pollard, the "pint sized" comedian, is featured assisted by Marie Mosquini, the Italian beauty; Eddie Boland, and "Sunshine Sambo," the diminutive "chocolate drop." The comedy, of course, evolves about a wedding, giving the opportunity, it is stated for beautiful settings and a large supporting cast. It is said to be chockful of humor, from the comedy antics to the subtitles, which are characterized as unusually amusing.

R. C. Bruce Returns to Edit New Scenics

Robert C. Bruce, director of "Scenics Beautiful" for Educational Films Corporation, will return to New York next week after an extended stay in Cuba and Jamaica, where he has made a number of subjects. Mr. Bruce will remain here for a month, cutting and titling the series, and then will leave on another extended tour which will take him to foreign lands.

New Star's Vehicle Announced

Wanda Hawley's First Realart Picture to be "Miss Hobbs"

HAVING taken a needed vacation, Wanda Hawley, the new Realartist will start work immediately on her first production as a star. "Miss Hobbs," by Jerome K. Jerome, has been selected for her as the most suitable vehicle to bring out her talent in light comedy roles.

"Miss Hobbs" is considered by some critics to be one of the best examples of modern comedies. It was originally produced at the Lyceum theatre in New York on September 7, 1899, with a notable cast headed by Annie Russell, Charles Richmond, Clara Bloodgood and Mrs. G. H. Gilbert. Others in the original cast were Orrin Johnson, Francis Sedgwick, Mabel Morrison and Elizabeth Rathburn.

On December 18th of the same year, the play was produced at the Duke of York's theatre in London, thus scoring a hit on both continents almost simultaneously. In the English production the cast included Herbert Waring, Evelyn Millar, Susie Vaughan, Allan Anesworth and Cosmo Stuart.

The play had a run of more than a year in New York City and has a record of numerous other revivals in this country and was a popular success throughout the country. It has been included in the courses of study on the modern drama in various colleges and universities. Obtaining it as material for Miss Hawley was considered by Realart officials as a most fortunate circumstance.

Miss Hawley has recently returned from a two weeks' vacation and will start work on "Miss Hobbs" without delay. She was tired when she left Los Angeles, having played almost continuously for eighteen months as a leading woman in Famous Players-Lasky productions.

On her return she reported that she had thoroughly rested and was ready for the responsibilities of stardom. Her vacation was a varied one. She spent a few days in the mountains at Forest Home and then went to Del Monte, a famous golf rendezvous. Miss Hawley is an ardent golfer and enjoyed the relaxation of the game thoroughly. She topped her vacation period off with a visit to the famous Arrowhead Hot Springs. She was one of the last persons to visit this resort before it was turned over to the Government, which has recently purchased the place as a soldier hospital.

Since becoming a star Miss Hawley has been much in demand by interviewers and photographers. So many writers have called upon the beautiful blonde favorite within the last few days that Miss Hawley is said to be considering aping President Wilson by setting aside a special afternoon to be known as "correspondents' afternoon".

Sam Woods, who directed "Double Speed", in which Miss Hawley appeared as leading woman for Wallace Reid, has been chosen to direct the first star picture. During Miss Hawley's absence on vacation he was busy going over the script looking for defects and putting it in the best possible shape to guarantee Miss Hawley's success in her initial bow to the public as a star.

Blackton Release via Pathe

"The Blood-Barrier" is Special Feature on List for April 11th

AS the special feature of a varied list of releases for the week of April 11th, Pathe offers J. Stuart Blackton's latest production, "The Blood Barrier," in which Sylvia Breamer and Robert Gordon have the leading roles.

"The Blood Barrier" is said to be one of the most "actionful" productions Pathe has issued in some time. It relates the struggle of an American boy to preserve a secret which at this time is actually forming an important cog in international trade affairs.

The story is the work of the late Dr. Cyrus Townsend Brady, and was written in a vigorous style, possessing all the elements of love, romance, and adventure which he pictured so keenly in his writings.

"The Blood Barrier" is a production which offers a wide latitude for clever exploitation, and to assist the exhibitor in putting over this six reel special, Pathe lists the following accessories: one sheet; two styles of three sheet; six sheet; twenty-four sheet; set of colored lobby photos; 22 x 28 colored scene; 22 x 28 stars, colored; one, two and three column ad cuts and mats; two column scene cuts and mats; an announcement slide; title slug, and set of black and whites. In addition to this, is the campaign book, which marks another superb effort on the part of the Pathe Exploitation Department, to give the showman material that will really assist him in selling his attraction to the public.

"The Blood Barrier" is fifth in the list of Pathe-Blackton features, most notable of which are "My Husband's Other Wife" and "Respectable by Proxy," each of which has proved a big winner.

Sylvia Breamer and Robert Gordon, who are co-starred in "The Blood Barrier" are rated amongst the most popular luminaries of the screen. Their work in previous Blackton features has thus stamped them.

British Agent of F. P.-Lasky to Come Here

Frederick Martin, manager of publicity and advertising for the Famous-Lasky Film Service, Ltd., distributors of Paramount-Artcraft pictures in Great Britain, will sail for New York with Mrs. Martin on April 10th, for a three weeks' business trip, according to a cable received by E. F. Shauer of the foreign department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

STATE RIGHTS—EXPORT

Thrills and Laughs in "His Pajama Girl"

The inauguration of the five-reel comedy vogue which will be instituted by Chaplin, Sennett, Lehrman and the other makers of comedies will find a forerunner in the C. B. Price offering "Billie" Rhodes in "His Pajama Girl," it is stated.

While Miss Rhodes has graduated from the short subject comedy class, it was in the calibre of production that she built her big and original following. Now with her return in the lighter sort of entertainment in feature length, it is expected that her many new friends who found her very much to their liking in the longer productions will also put their stamp of approval on this new venture.

The offering of this long length comedy on the state right market is recognized as a radical departure in this field. While "His Pajama Girl" also abounds in several thrilling situations, they are said to be brought out in such a manner as to intensify the comedy situations which follow.

Inter-Ocean Has Tracy Pictures for Abroad

Confirming the announcement made last week by Gibraltar Pictures Corporation of the acquisition by Inter-Ocean Film Corporation of the world rights, exclusive of the United States and Canada, to all of the Louis Tracy Productions, Inter-Ocean Film Corporation has issued the following statement.

"We have acquired for exclusive foreign distribution the rights to the Louis Tracy Productions, which are now being produced by Gibraltar Pictures Corporation under the direction of William Worthington."

To Present Pictures in their Natural Length

Character Pictures announces that all of its photoplays will be presented in their natural length and not forced to run in a stipulated number of reels.

The company, it is stated, is not in sympathy with the usual method of deciding upon the length of production before it is made. With Character Pictures, the production will automatically settle upon its own length after the story has been picturized.

New Serial Sales Reported

Louis Burston Says His Faith in "The Hawk's Trail" Is Vindicated

King Baggot, who is now with American Film Company and playing in "The Thirteenth Piece of Silver," starring Marguerita Fisher

LOUIS BURSTON has reported the sale of "The Hawk's Trail", King Baggot serial, for Ohio and Kentucky to the David Warner Film Company of Cleveland; for Michigan to the Strand Features of Detroit; and for Kansas, Missouri and Illinois to the Standard Film Corporation of Kansas City, Missouri.

"I am especially elated by reports coming in from all quarters where audiences have had a chance to see this serial," declared Mr. Burston, "for the reason that the public seems everywhere to specially applaud and praise what I might term the dignity of its story as well as its acting and general presentation.

"I have long been convinced that the day of the knock-down-and-drag-out serial is gone, and that audiences now demand something like consistency in plot, incidents and episodes and sincerity in interpretation.

"When I considered starring King Baggot in this production, I was warned by many that this player's standards of acting were too deliberate and refined for what was to me then termed the "hurly burly" of serial demands.

"The result of sticking to a high level in story, acting and production proves my conviction that sooner or later we are going to have the main theatres of the country asking for serials, where they can be mediums of excitement, romance and thrills without buncombe or balderdash.

"During the several years I've been handling serials, I've never seen a new production command so many runs in sections where serials are not, as a rule, in favor. It certainly is very gratifying to find one's own judgment confirmed so emphatically by the general public as well as serial buyers."

Equity Feature Acquired for Illinois State

JOSEPH I. SCHNITZER, general manager of Equity Pictures, announces the disposal of the first Equity special, "Silk Husbands and Calico Wives," for the State of Illinois to the First National Exhibitors Exchange, 110 South State street, Chicago. Negotiations were closed by Mr. R. C. Seery, representing First National, who has already arranged early bookings on the Asher Circuit and all Balaban and Katz houses.

Ora Carew Special Has Change in Title

"The Lost Daughter," the Ora Carew special production announced ready for release last week by W. E. Shallenberger, president of the Arrow Film Corporation, will not be distributed under that title. After a careful consideration of the matter and because it was the consensus of opinion among state rights buyers, this production will hereafter be called "Love's Protege," which was its original title.

Joins Inter-Ocean's Technical Dept.

The technical film department of Inter-Ocean Film Corporation, now under the supervision of A. Hartlieb, has been augmented by the addition of Albert Boasberg, who assumes the duties of assistant manager.

Territory is Sold on Jans Production

Herman F. Jans, president of Jans Pictures, Inc., further announces that additional territory has recently been sold for his first production as an independent producer, starring Olive Tell.

"Love Without Question," an adaptation of the novel, "The Abandoned Room," by C. Wadsworth Camp, has been sold to the A. H. Blank Enterprises, of Des Moines, Iowa and Nebraska. The entire New England states have been disposed of to the Hatch Photoplay Service, Boston, Mass.

These two deals, Mr. Jans stated, were consummated upon the return of F. E. Backer, general sales manager for Jans Pictures, Inc., and himself after an extensive trip throughout the United States.

Keaton Has Big Part in "The New Henrietta"

Buster Keaton, for long identified with screen comedies, has been engaged by Metro to play the important role of Bertie in Metro's all-star production of "The New Henrietta." In this special picturization of Winchell Smith's and Victor Mape's revision of the famous old stage play, "The Henrietta," by Bronson Howard, the all-star ensemble will include also that veteran actor, William H. Crane.

Winchell Smith will in person supervise the production of "The New Henrietta," at the Metro studios in Hollywood, Calif. Mr. Smith recently became a member of Metro's staff of eminent authors.

Sales Negotiated for C. B. Price Product

Mr. A. L. Ehrgott, special representative of the C. B. Price Co., Inc., returned from Boston this week where he negotiated a deal with the Major Film Co., for the territorial rights of the series of fifteen Mona Darkfeather Indian Dramas. The Major Company will handle these productions for the New England territory.

Mr. F. H. Price of C. B. Price Co., Inc., visited Philadelphia and Washington last week in the interest of that company's many state right subjects. While in those cities he exhibited for the exchange men several releases of the series of fifteen Mona Darkfeather Indian Dramas.

Character Company to Film in Florida

Albert W. Plummer, business manager of Character Pictures Corporation, has left New York with other members of the producing unit for Tampa, Florida, for an extended stay during which the company is to produce their first special production "The Isle Of Destiny" by Mack Arthur, which is to be made on Oriental Island, lately acquired by the company.

The other members of the organization will join Mr. Plummer and Mr. Paul Gilmore, who is to play the principal role in the production, in Tampa, in a few days.

Victor Kremer Handles "Screen Smiles"

Screen Smiles, the animated topical novelty, which Victor Kremer Film Features, Inc., acquired recently for state right distribution, has met with unanimous approval by all who have witnessed a showing of the first five subjects. Victor Kremer has received the following letter of commendation from R. H. Clark, treasurer and general manager of the New York First National Exhibitors' Exchange:

"After viewing the last three releases of Screen Smiles I have come to the conclusion that it is indeed as you told me—a novelty short-reel in every sense of the word. The short, snappy sayings handed me many a laugh and along with the illustrations should prove a valuable addition to any theatre's program.

"I feel that once an exhibitor starts playing Screen Smiles that it will undoubtedly remain a fixture in his theatre."

Second Olive Tell Picture is Completed

The second of the Jans Pictures, Inc., production starring Olive Tell has been completed under the supervision of B. A. Rolfe. It is an adaptation of "Nothing a Year," the successful novel by Charles B. Davis, the photodramatic version to be called "A Woman's Business."

The feature is now being cut and assembled and made ready for public presentation. Miss Tell is said to have a most interesting role in "A Woman's Business," one particularly suited to her, which she does full justice.

Critics See Olive Tell at New York Strand

On March 24 the Strand Theatre, of New York, offered the first public presentation of the Jans Pictures, Inc., feature "Love Without Question," adapted from the novel, "The Abandoned Room," by C. Wadsworth Camp, and starring Olive Tell.

Exhibitors, exchangement, critics of the trade press and newspapers, directors and people prominent in the industry made up the audience.

"Want More Short-Subjects"

FOLLOWING his attendance at the independent convention at Chicago last week, Jack Cohn, producer of "Hall Room Boys Comedies" and other short subjects for the independent market, is more firmly convinced than ever that independent methods of booking and covering territories compose a more profitable and convenient means of obtaining pictures than any other, it is stated.

"Every exchange man and exhibitor I met while in Chicago," said Mr. Cohn, "told me that while there were plenty of features to be had, there was a shortage of short subjects for the independent buyer. All independent exchange men are interested in the development of the short subject just at this time, since this end of the business is just as important as the production of the larger features.

"The same characteristics which mark the distribution of feature products to the independent market hold true in the distribution of the short subjects, such as comedies, scenics and similar pictures. There is just as much overhead expense saving, just as little detail and just as much real value in good pictures produced especially for the independent market as there is in the production of big features for the same market.

"Our own brand, the 'Hall Room Boys Comedies,' has been distributed through independent exchanges ever since their production was started. Exchange men told me that this was one reason for their great success, and it came to me that the ease with which exhibitors and exchange men found them profitable was the lack of expense involved in handling them, both at their end and at our end."

In his announcement, Mr. Cohn urged the adherence by all producers of short subjects to the principles which apply in the production of the heaviest subject. He declared that the independent buyer was just as exacting in the matter of material as was the regular program buyer, and for that reason it was a duty as well as a safeguard for nothing but real pictures to be turned loose on the independent market.

"The independent production," he said, "is slowly but surely ascending to a place in the sun, and to keep it there is the duty of every producer of this type of picture. Today marks the beginning of a new era in the production of all types of picture for this field. Everyone connected with the independent market is eager to place that field of the industry upon a level with any other, and this will come about in the near future just as sure as the sun rises in the east.

"However, every producer, every exchange man, and every exhibitor who favors the independent method, must at this time, when the eyes of the whole industry are turned our way, hold himself clear from sharp practices, cheap methods and bad pictures. Keep the product good, and keep the public as your friend."

Mr. Cohn concluded by stating that every producer of independent pictures during the next year or two would realize a good profit, which would be shared with the buyers of his product. He said, however, that the independent producer, in many cases, was entitled to much more profit than was coming his way just at this time.

Garsson Features Go Well

Foundation Film's Manager Says Their Box-Office Pull Is Proved

MR. GARSSON it is stated, backed up his statement that "The Blindness of Youth," and "A Dream of Fair Women," are meeting with popular approval everywhere by exhibiting a number of telegrams from exhibitors throughout the South and West, the sum and substance of which are declared to have represented the offerings as going like wildfire.

"I have selected these two pictures," declared Mr. Garsson, "because they contain perfect screen material. The exquisitely pathetic love story told in "The Blindness of Youth" will appeal to old and young. In Tennyson's charming poem, "A Dream of Fair Women," it is excellently visualized. Hardened is the picture goer who cannot react to the procession of beauty that is revealed in the latter picture. Beauties from Dixie, beauties from the rolling plains of the West, beauties from New England, beauties from New York; all are garnered that are worth garnering—and all file pass the radius of the camera sending out their charms. The spectator will see the four prize winners who are destined to reach the pinnacle of fame. One appeals for her style of dress, one for her repose, one for her vivacity, one for her unbounded wholesomeness. The artist falls asleep, and dreams and visions of loveliness float past. So much for the themes and interpretation," said Mr. Garsson.

"The reason why 'The Blindness of Youth,' and 'A Dream of Fair Women" the two Murray W. Garsson's feature pictures are proving so successful for us and the independent exhibitors is because they have a well established box-office value. They appeal so emphatically to the popular taste that there is no question of their meeting with approval of picture goers everywhere."

Thus did Murray W. Garsson appraise the value of his two successes to a number of prominent eastern exhibitors who attended a private showing of the features last week in the offices of the Foundation Film Corporation, of which Mr. Garsson is general manager.

Serico Serial Sells Fast

Authors of "The Woman in Grey" to Write Story for New Serial

"A WOMAN IN GREY", the Serico Producing Corporation's fifteen episode serial, starring Arline Pretty with Henry G. Sell, is reported to be in great demand in the territories in which the serial has been booked. Its novel story and originality of presentation is said to be doing more toward bringing thousands of patrons to attend this sort of screen entertainment than any of its predecessors.

The story of "A Woman in Grey," adapted from the novel of the same name, by C. N. & A. M. Williamson and directed by James Vincent, was the first 'best seller' to reach the screen in the form of a chapter play and proves its producer's prediction that the serial form of screen entertainment could be reproduced from the works of noted authors and would in time replace the cheap 'clap-trap' serial story of the past.

So great has been the demand for this serial that Mr. George H. Wiley, president of the Serico Producing Corp., has just completed negotiations for a second serial story by C. N. & A. M. Williamson to be placed into immediate production and which is to follow "A Woman in Grey" onto the market. Like "A Woman in Grey" the new serial will possess a strong element of baffling mystery interwoven with youth, romance, adventure and thrills. The cast will be made up of the best known serial artists, headed by a female star of world wide repute who, for the past two years, has thrilled serial audiences in every nook and corner of the earth, it is stated.

Cohn Speeds Up Comedies

Three Hallroom Boys Comedies Made in Month in Coast Studios

PRODUCTION has been moving rapidly in the Hollywood studios of Jack and Harry Cohn, where the latter is personally supervising the making of "Hall Room Boys Comedies," featuring Neely Edwards, who is supported by Hugh Fay.

Harry Cohn has been on the coast but a little over a month, and has already completed three two-reel subjects. Edwards and Fay have given the Cohns their best ability and talent, and the result is that the new series has won new praise.

Harry Cohn will continue on the Coast for several more weeks, during which time more releases will be prepared for distribution. He has assembled a clever company of players to support the two stars, both men and women, and means to make future productions affect a high water mark in polite comedy production.

Wires to Jack Cohn in the eastern office of the firm are to the effect that the company has been working full time in the studio, often working late into the night to complete a scene while its action was fresh in the director's mind.

Releases under the new plan to date include "Oh, Baby!", "This Way Out!" and "The Line Is Busy," the latter of which was received this week from Los Angeles.

Kohn Increases Production

Independent Promises Assorted Program to be Ready August 15

A COMPLETE program of short subjects, including a two-reel dramatic thriller, a weekly, an animated cartoon, three one and two reel comedy releases, an educational, a travelogue, and possibly serials, are promised for the states' rights market for not later than August 15 by the Marion H. Kohn Productions of San Francisco, now making three short subjects at the National Film Corporation of America studios, in Hollywood, Cal. Mr. Kohn, who is now at the National studios, is negotiating with a well known news weekly concern, which, he states, his firm expects to absorb within the next two months.

The three Kohn stars in short subjects at present are Grace Cunard, Polly Moran and "Smiling Bill" Jones. Arrangements are now being made whereby the world's distributing rights of these releases will be sold to one concern.

According to Mr. Kohn, who is also the head of the Consolidated Film Corporation, a prominent state rights exchange on the Pacific coast, there is no limit specified by his financial backers as to his expansion. It is Mr. Kohn's belief that before August 15th of this year his firm will be one of the largest exclusive short subject producing organizations in the world.

An especially strong effort will be made to convince state rights buyers of short subjects that not enough attention is being given short subjects by the exhibitors.

"We are going to sell the exhibitor so he will stay sold. When that gentleman finds out that it costs real money to make a two-reeler and that the two-reeler has the goods the time will come when these two-reelers will be featured and not before," states Mr. Kohn.

Fine Cast in "Democracy"

Appeal of Theme is Reinforced by Capable Cast That Interprets It

ALTHOUGH the theme of "Democracy—The Vision Restored," is the potent thought of interest in this cinema epic by Lee Francis Lyburger, great care was exercised, it is stated, in casting the characters. Director William Nigh took into consideration the players' adaptability to the roles and their acting ability, rather than any star laurels they might have possessed.

William Nigh, himself, plays the role of David—a thinker, a man of high ideals, the representative of Democracy. Those who recall his powerful portrayal of a somewhat similar character in Ambassador Gerard's "My Four Years In Germany," know well his capabilities as a dramatic actor.

Leslie Austen, who is well known for his appearances on both the stage and screen, is cast as David's brother, Jonathan, an autocrat. J. H. Gilmore, a veteran of the American stage, essays the role of Henry Fortune, the Money Monarch. Maurine Powers, a radiant "find" of Director Nigh's for whom he predicts a great future, plays the wonderfully sympathetic role of Mary, a blind girl. Albert Tevernier is seen as Mary's grandfather, known as the "Old Shepherd." Halbert W. Brown, who impersonated Ambassador Gerard in "My Four Years In Germany," appears as the Doctor and Elsie De Wolfe, formerly of the Griffith players, enacts the role of The Woman. In the part of Fortune's valet, we find Charles W. Sutton, a member of the original Edison Stock Company.

In addition Pete Raymond, Burt Gudgeon, Walter De Leon, E. Pollock, Franklyn Hanna and hundreds of other players appear in this photodrama by Lee Francis Lyburger.

Inter-Ocean Reports Sales

Unnamed Buyer Acquires Foreign Rights to Thirty-two Pictures

CONTRACTS closed last week by Gus Schlesinger, manager of the Department of Foreign Film Sales of Inter-Ocean Film Corporation, convey the territorial rights to thirty-two American productions for physical distribution throughout the Dutch East Indies, Strait Settlements, India, Burma and Ceylon. The list of pictures embraces twenty-seven Black Diamond Comedies until recently distributed in America by the Paramount-Artcraft Pictures Corporation, and five independent feature attractions which have proved their right to be termed 'box-office' attractions.

The buyer of these films is desirous of withholding his name from the trade paper columns for obvious reasons, announces Inter-Ocean. He plans to inaugurate a vast sales campaign, and not until he has perfected the minutest details of this campaign, does he want any information concerning his acquisition to appear in print or otherwise be mentioned in trade circles. It is understood, however, that the buyer is one of the largest distributors of motion pictures in the territory above-mentioned.

By the terms of the contract, the buyer comes into possession of the following comedies: "Their Vacation," "Troublesome Trip," "Magic Vest," "Nearly a Baker," "Her Fractured Voice," "Sue the Sleepwalker," "Sue Slips One Over," "Nearly a Deserter," "His Ivory Dome," "Their Week End," "A Window-Dresser's Dream," "The Rejuvenator," "The Wish-Bone," "Those Pants," "Society Scrimmage," "Her Scrambled Ambition," "Bridget's Blunder," "Counterfeit Vacation," "Her Iron Will," "Getting the Evidence," "Auto Intoxication," "Wits and Fits," "Susie's Scheme," "Speed," "He Did It Himself" and "Braving Blazes."

The contracts also include the acquisition of "Enlighten Thy Daughter," "The Manx-Man," "The Burning Question," "The Man of Bronze" and "Hunting Big Game in Alaska."

New Film Has Good Plot

National Film Makes Claims for "Parted Curtains," Latest Feature

"PARTED CURTAINS," the latest feature production announced by the National Film Corporation of America, is said to have an unusually strong plot as the basis for the picture. Bertram Bracken, who directed this production, claims it is the strongest theme he has dealt with in all his experience. Bracken was responsible for the direction of "East Lynne," "Sporting Blood," "The Boomerang," "The Long Arm of Mannister" and other photodramas.

Henry B. Walthall, who stars in "Parted Curtains," has even surpassed his splendid work in "Confession," National's last big production, according to company officials. In "Parted Curtains," he plays the role of a social outcast who has spent seven years in prison in expiation for the crime of another.

Walthall has an excellent supporting cast, including Mary Alden, who was featured in "Common Clay" and "The Unpardonable Sin," and William H. Clifford, who was the Canadian in "Confession." Margaret Landis, Edward Cecil, Ann Davis, Charles Wheelock, and Richard Morris complete the cast.

Joe Brandt, eastern representative for the National Film Corporation, has announced that "Parted Curtains" will be sold on the state rights market and that it will be ready for release very shortly. George H. Davis, who is now at Joe Brandt's office is negotiating for the sale of territory. Further announcements are promised.

Plan New "Tarzan" Serial

National Film to Make "The Son of Tarzan," Starring Jack Hoxie

THE last of Edgar Rice Burroughs' books of his Tarzan series—"The Son of Tarzan"—will be filmed as a serial by the National Film Corporation of America. It was this firm that screened "Tarzan of the Apes" and "The Romance of Tarzan" several years ago. These are still being exhibited in original form.

Jack Hoxie, who became one of the best known serial stars through his work in the "Lightning Bryce" serial, also made by the National, will occupy the center of the screen in "The Son of Tarzan." He will be supported by Lucille Rubey and a large cast of principals. According to the studio, this is the first time an Edgar Rice Burroughs novel of the man-monkey has ever been attempted in serial form.

Preliminary arrangements for a nation-wide exploitation campaign are now being made by I. Bernstein, National's production manager, who is in the East for that purpose.

L. V. Jefferson has already reduced the original version of "The Son of Tarzan" to ten episodes. April first will see Jack Hoxie and his company deep in the first episode, according to studio advices.

According to Capt. Harry M. Rubey, this serial will be one of the most costly and stupendous productions ever made by the National. An island in the South Pacific has been secured for the entire production, the natives of which will be pressed into service from time to time, it is stated.

Kremer Reissue Sells Fast

Several Blocks of Territory Are Sold on "Skinner's Dress Suit"

THE New York headquarters of Victor Kremer Film Features, Inc., reported this week that the announcement of the acquisition of "Skinner's Dress Suit" had brought an extraordinary amount of inquiries from state right buyers from coast to coast. The popularity of this Bryant Washburn comedy drama is evidenced by the fact that several prominent buyers have already contracted for blocks of territory. The Kremer offices say that "Skinner's Dress Suit" has aroused greater interest on the part of state right distributors than any other reissue ever handled by this organization.

New York Independent Masterfilms, Inc., the Kremer exchange, which will distribute "Skinner's Dress Suit" for New York and Northern New Jersey has already secured several first runs in the larger theatres in this section. Ira H. Simmons, manager of the exchange, is confident from the bookings already received, that the Washburn film will break all records for reissues in the matter of rentals and first runs.

A novel advertising accessory in the form of a dress suit is being supplied to exhibitors as a cut-out for lobby display. This cut-out stands five feet in height and carries on the expanse of shirt front a reproduction of one of the scenes from the play. This is but one of several advertising novelties which will be furnished to assist the buyer and exhibitor in exploiting Skinner's Dress Suit.

Monte Carlo Interior in "Blind Love"

Gerald F. Bacon's six-reel production, "Blind Love," starring Lucy Cotton, which was booked over the Loew Circuit last week, shows an exact replica of the main gambling hall of Monte Carlo. MINNEAPOLIS

More than 60 film men and press representatives of the Twin Cities were the guests of Finkelstein & Ruben at a dinner review given Monday evening, March 8, at 6 o'clock in the Gold room of the Radisson hotel.

Al Lichtman, general manager for the department of distribution of the Famous Players-Lasky corporation, spoke of the relationship which existed between the producer and the exhibitor. He stated that the producer was depending upon the exhibitor for 50 per cent of the public's opinion of his pictures, because the exhibitor's exploitation and presentation could make or mar a production.

The first picture screened was "Anne of Green Gables," Mary Miles Minter's first Realart production. Following this "Edgar and the Teacher's Pet," a Booth Tarkington comedy was presented. The third and last picture shown was "Jubilo," another Goldwyn release with Will Rogers. This picture was given much praise from those present.

The subject of pictures for juvenile audiences received attention in a statement recently issued by I. H. Ruben, of Finkelstein and Ruben.

"We will go out of our way to do the right thing in providing the right kind of picture for children, either in our regular business or in special performances," said Mr. Ruben. "We are anxious that children see only those things that will develop them along healthy lines, but the people of Minneapolis must realize that we depend largely upon our adult patronage for our existence. In taking advantage of this fact it is necessary that we present all sorts of pictures."

Frank J. Murray, who for the past nine months has been associate editor of Amusements, resigned last week to enter the film industry. He will be connected with the Famous Players-Lasky corporation. Larry C. Moen, former newspaper man, succeeds Mr. Murray.

J. S. Gillespie, publicity director of the Universal exchange, left for Omaha last Saturday to handle some exploitation work from that office. He is at present in Sioux City, handling exploitation for the Plaza theatre and for the Moon theatre, which has booked the Lockie picture, "The Great Air Robbery."

James Keough has returned to Minneapolis and is assuming the management of the Strand theatre. He left Minneapolis some time ago to take charge of a theatre in Chicago, and later managed a Fox theatre in Detroit, Mich.

CLEVELAND

Manager Beidler of the East Auditorium theatre, Toledo, spent a day in Cleveland this week, the first time he has been in the city for a year. Beidler books all his pictures from Cleveland exchanges, but has always done his business with the boys on the road.

M. A. Levey, manager of the Cleveland office of the Robertson-Cole company, was in New York all this week attending the convention of Robertson-Cole associates.

E. J. Smith, manager of the local Universal exchange, went on to New York this week to be present at the initial showing of "The Virgin of Stamboul." A big trade showing of the picture in Cleveland has been planned for Monday afternoon, March 29th, in the Winton Hotel ballroom. Phil Spitalny, musical director at the Metropolitan theatre, is arranging an original score to accompany the picture.

The Pioneer Film Company will open an office in Cincinnati at 532 Walnut Avenue, with R. E. Kerley in command. Mr. Kerley will have charge of the selling of the releases, but all physical distribution will be handled by the C. C. Hite Attractions.

Hy-Art Attractions of Cleveland is having great success with "Quo Vadis," according to local manager Arthur S. Hyman. The picture is playing to big profits at all the neighborhood houses in spite of the fact that it was presented at the Hippodrome four years ago for six weeks, at which time it is said to have taken in over $35,000.

Edward Holland and Ace Berry, exploitation experts who are handling the publicity on all the Mayflower productions, were both in town this week, working up stunts for "The Mystery of the Yellow Room," currently released at the Metropolitan theatre. Mr. Berry will make his headquarters in St. Louis, and cover the southwestern territory. Mr. Holland will be in Chicago and pivot from there around the central territory, in the interest of Mayflower photoplays.

The chief of police and his entire staff were the guests of Manager Bill Freedman of the Metropolitan theatre this week, at a private screening of "The Mystery of the Yellow Room," just to see whether any of them could guess the correct solution to the mystery. There were as many answers as there were members present, but none of 'em guessed right.

Loraine B. Liebtag has the distinction of being the only woman who is running an exchange in Cleveland. Miss Liebtag, along with Mr. George Vivian-Smith, have opened an independent exchange called The Essenel Productions De Luxe Company, in 607 Belmont building. The company is capitalized at $100,000, with Miss Liebtag president. Feature productions only will be released by the new organization.

The Essenel Productions De Luxe Company has bought the Ohio rights to the four newly recreated Essanay Chaplin comedies, "The Champion," "A Jitney Elopement," "Work" and "By the Sea." It has also purchased for Ohio and Kentucky "Stripped for a Million," starring Crane Wilbur; "Strife," with George LeGuere, and "Pen Vultures" and "When Arizona Won," both with Shorty Hamilton.

The company will distribute for the C. C. Hite Attractions Company in northern Ohio, both features and short subjects.

BUFFALO

The Utica convention is still the topic among local film men. Frank Mosher, manager of the Palace theatre and president of the Buffalo Theatrical Managers' association, was honored by the state league by being re-elected vice-president. The convention was declared to be the most successful ever held, especially the African Golf tournament and the Red Dog meet. Next year will bring the convention to Rochester, "a suburb of Buffalo."

Allan S. Moritz, manager of the Famous Players-Lasky exchange, has renewed the lease on the present quarters of the company in Franklin street, as a protection, in case the new exchange at Franklin and Chippewa is not ready for occupancy at the expected time.
